

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter <http://books.google.com> durchsuchen.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. MR. SIMS REEVES'S BENEFIT CONCERT.

This concert drew an enormous audience to the Royal Albert Hall on Wednesday evening, when the announcements held forth not only the attraction of Mr. Reeves's own fine singing but also the promise of performances by other eminent artists. Mr. Reeves gave, with the usual effect, Handel's recitative, "Deeper and deeper still" and air, "Waft her, angels," and Dibdin's nautical ballad "Tom Bowling"—the latter having been enthusiastically encored, and replaced by "My pretty Jane." The singer was also heard, in association with Madame Christine Nilsson and Mr. Santley, in Barnett's trio, "This magic-wove scarf;" and, with Mr. Santley, in Brahms's duet, "All's well." Madame Nilsson created a great effect by her admirable rendering of the scena "Casta diva," from Norma, and the American national song, "The star-spangled banner"—the encore of the latter having been replied to by singing "The old folks at home." Other effective vocal pieces were contributed by Mesdames Tregbelli and Antoinette Sterling; Misses Helen D'Alton and Anna Williams; Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli, besides some good part-singing by the members of the London Vocal Union. The vocal music was agreeably relieved by the fine violin playing of Herr Wilhelmj in a fantasia of his own and another by Vieuxtemps. Mr. Sidney Naylor was the conductor, and Dr. Stainer presided at the organ.

The operations by the Duke of Sutherland in salmon culture in Sutherland have this year been most successful. The total bred in that county and in Caithness this season is 600,000.

The election for the Mayoralty of Dublin for next year occupied the Town Council of that city on Monday, when a sharp struggle ensued between the Roman Catholic and the Protestant parties, the year 1878 being what is known as the Conservative year, but the Liberals determined to elect, out of the usual course, a Liberal, in the person of the present Lord Mayor, Mr. Alderman Tarpey. The other candidate, whom the Conservative party would have preferred, was Councillor Tickell.—Councillor Byrne described the breach of the compact under which alternate Lords Mayor were chosen from each party as an act of intolerance. Ultimately Mr. Tarpey was chosen for a second year, and will be Lord Mayor during the visit of the British Association to Dublin.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

Archdeacon Emery has turned the first turf on the site for the Hunstanton Convalescent Home, a building which is to be erected as a memorial of thankfulness for the convalescence of the Prince of Wales, now patron of the institution.

A fancy bazaar has been held this week in the annexe of the Royal Aquarium, under the patronage of Princess Christian, the Lord Mayor, and the Sheriffs of London, in aid of the Children's Home, Leytonstone, founded by Miss Cotton.

The Earl of Shaftesbury yesterday week presided at the thirty-third annual meeting of the Society for Improving the Condition of the Labouring Classes. The houses, it was reported, were generally well occupied, and the rate of mortality in them was less than 21 per 1000.

The first meeting of the Society for Training Teachers for the Deaf was held at Lambeth Palace on Thursday week. Resolutions were passed in favour of establishing a training college, the object being to introduce a German system of education for the deaf, by which they would be enabled to understand the movements of the lips of those with whom they wished to communicate.

The jubilee festival in connection with the Infant Orphan Asylum, situated at Wanstead, was celebrated on Thursday week, under the presidency of the Duke of Teck, the Duchess of Teck distributing the prizes to the successful competitors of the institution. Donations were announced, including annual subscriptions from the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and £100 respectively from Mr. Horace Marshall, the Governor and Directors of the Bank, the Goldsmiths', Clothworkers', Drapers' Companies, with £200 from the Grocers' Company. The list amounted to £6000, of which Princess Mary's list was £1102, including subscriptions from 268 ladies.

Mr. Samuel Brandram gave a recital on Monday afternoon at Grosvenor House, by permission of the Duke of Westminster, in aid of the funds of the Princess Mary Village Homes for Little Girls. This Home, which was founded in 1871, is for the reception of the female children of persons convicted of crime and for the class of children who are met with in the criminal haunts of London. It is conducted on the family (or group) system, the children being divided into groups of about ten girls each, of different ages. There are now 150 children in the village, but there is provision, as soon as funds will admit, for a total of 200. The charity is almost entirely dependent on voluntary contributions, and last year the source of income fell short of the expenditure by nearly £700. The audience, which was large, included Princess Beatrice and the Duchess of Cambridge, and the sum of £300 was the result of the gathering.

By the invitation of Mr. Walter, M.P., the chairman, and the committee of the hospital, a number of ladies and gentlemen have this week visited the new wing of the Hospital for Sick Children, in Great Ormond-street. The hospital has existed for twenty-five years; but the foundation-stone of the new building was laid five years ago by the Princess of Wales, and the largest section of the building was completed in 1875. The new wing contains wards for sixteen children, a bath-room on each floor, a ward kitchen, and a linen store on each floor, nurses' rooms, lifts, and shoots. There are two ventilating towers, and beneath the red tiles of the conical top of another tower a water cistern is concealed. The wing is a separate building, parted off entirely from the rest, and will be used for infectious cases. Above each of the cots is a little hook for a picture. The top of the building is asphalted for a garden, and half an acre of ground behind is being converted into a playground. The cost of the new wing was £2500.

Under the presidency of Mr. E. N. Buxton, about 1000 friends of the asylum and other charitable institutions supported by the licensed victuallers sat down to dinner on Tuesday in the spacious concert-room of the Alexandra Palace. This meeting was the jubilee festival of the admirable foundation in the Old Kent-road, where 170 separate dwellings are maintained for decayed members of the trade. Though, in pursuance of a recent policy, the principal supporters of the asylum have made their yearly gatherings more select than they used formerly to be, there was no lack of numbers on this occasion. Subscriptions amounting to £4000 were announced, including £500 from Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, and Buxton, and 100 guineas from the chairman.

The Royal Chest Hospital, City-road, which has been entirely renovated, re-furnished, and virtually remodelled, was reopened on Tuesday by a dedication service conducted by the honorary chaplain, the Rev. F. Ball, Vicar of St. Mary's, Hoxton, in whose parish the institution is situated. About £2700 have been expended in new buildings, and fourteen beds have been given by the munificence of one lady, while another £1000 has been expended in the improvement of the old buildings. The arrangements seem admirably adapted for the comfort of the inmates, and reflect great credit on the governors. After the religious service Lord Charles Bruce declared the buildings open; and, while thanking the public for past favours, said that clocks and other articles would be gratefully accepted by Mr. C. Lowther Kemp, the secretary.

The annual distribution of prizes to the boys who are being educated for a seafaring life in the Chichester and Arcturust training-ships took place last Wednesday on board the Arcturust, which is moored off Greenhithe, Kent, in close proximity to the Chichester. The proceedings were presided over by Lord Shaftesbury. From the opening statement of Mr. Williams, the indefatigable secretary of the society, it appears that there are about 400 boys on board the ships who are educated, fed, and clothed by the supporters and friends of the charity. The institution is sadly in need of funds, the treasury being £1000 less this year than it was the year before. The society has no grant from the School Board or any other institution, and in the "homes" connected with the charity there are at present 1060 children. Mrs. Pilcher's prize, consisting of a silver watch to "the best boy on board each ship, selected by themselves," was given to William Ervin, of the Arcturust, and James Robins, of the Chichester. At the conclusion of the distribution Lord Shaftesbury briefly addressed the meeting. Admiral Hall, Admiral Phillimore, Admiral Wellesley, Mr. Hubbard, and Captain Walter also addressed the meeting. The boys executed in a skilful manner a number of nautical manoeuvres during the day.

The net expenditure was £19,533,058, against £19,094,541 to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balance on June 30 amounted to £3,066,882; and at the same date in 1876 to £4,907,826.

THE WAR: BREAKING UP THE CAMP OF MOHAMMEDAN COSSACKS AT FRATESTI.
FACSIMILE OF A SKETCH BY ONE OF OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS.

THE WAR.

The passage of the Danube by the Russian army, first into the Dobrukscha, from Galatz and Braila, on the 22nd ult., and again on the 27th, under the immediate command of the Grand Duke Nicholas, at Simnitsa, nearly opposite the Bulgarian town of Sistova, was reported by us last week. They had taken possession of Matchin, and of the northern part of the Dobrukscha, as far up the river as Hirsova, to which point the Russian left wing is now advanced; while the Turks still hold the line from Tchernavoda to Kustendje, across the narrow neck of land between the great bend of the Danube and the Black Sea. This situation of affairs has remained without change, and no important action has yet taken place along that more easterly section of the line of Turkish defences. But in the centre of their line, some fifty miles westward of their great Danubian fortress of Rustchuk, the Russian advance to the south, through Bulgaria from Sistova and Nicopolis, has met with a stout resistance. The Turkish army in the field has made its chief stand at Biela, a town and bridge on the river Jan'ra, a few miles south-east of Sistova, and upon the high road connecting Rustchuk and the Danubian frontier with the interior of Bulgaria. It is said that some detachments of the Russian forces have suffered defeat in occasional conflicts with the Turks at Biela, notwithstanding which they have been enabled to make their way southward as far as Tirnova, the ancient capital of Bulgaria, almost at the foot of the Balkan mountain range, and sixty-four miles from Rustchuk. The road over the Balkan from Tirnova, by way of Gabrova and Kazanlik, is pronounced by Von Moltke the readiest and best route into the Maritza Valley and to Adrianople, the heart of European Turkey. It is most likely that the main Russian army will take this route, leaving a sufficient portion behind to shut up the roads of flank and rear attack upon its body, from the almost impregnable fortresses of Shumla and Varna, and from Rustchuk and Silistria on the Danube. These four places, which constitute what has been aptly termed the Turkish Quadrilateral, may withstand a very long siege and blockade, if they can ever be taken by force; but they will only serve to protect the eastern corner of the Turkish province of Bulgaria, within a certain distance of the Black Sea; while the broad middle country, for nearly two hundred miles, seems to lie open to the invader's approach from Roumania; and it could also be entered from Serbia, by the route of Nissa and Sophia, if the Prince of Serbia were to join in active alliance with Russia.

The maps of the seat of war in Europe, which we have already presented to our readers, will assist them to comprehend these points of the strategic position. Two smaller maps in this week's Supplement show the minutest topography of the banks and islets of the Danube, and its tributary streams, lakes, and marshes, in the neighbourhood of Sistova and Nicopolis, with the place where the Grand Duke Nicholas crossed the river on Wednesday week. A view of Sistova and one of Nicopolis, from sketches by one of our Special Artists who was lately there with the Turks, are given in the present Number. The first-mentioned town has now become the Russian military head-quarters, and has been visited by the Emperor Alexander II. As for Nicopolis, it is almost destroyed by the Russian bombardment, and has been considered not worth occupying by the Russian troops. Our principal subjects for the illustrations of this week are the situation of Rustchuk, which has been tremendously knocked about, in the last few days, by the fierce bombardment from the opposite shore at Giurgevo; and, secondly, the position of the Russian force crossing the bridge of rafts and piles just below Braila, at the mouth of the Matchin channel, and occupying the town of Matchin, in the Dobrukscha, on the 27th and 28th ult. We have received exact details of the construction of their temporary bridge in that locality, with some additional sketches, taken by our Special Artists both on the right bank and left bank of the river, showing every feature of its situation and fabrication. Part of this information must be reserved to accompany the sketches for our next week's engravings; but we will give some description of the bridge, which appears in an unfinished state, wanting its central portion, in the view presented this week. One of our Artists writes about it as follows:—

"A little way below Braila, the Danube makes a great bend, and the banks are overflowed far and wide. The water now comes up to the vineyards where the battery is placed that blew up the Latfi Djell in the Matchin canal opposite. The bridge here constructed by the Russians is 1300 yards long, and consists of three several parts. The first section of the bridge lies through the shallow water; wooden piles are driven into the ground, which support the beams laid upon the top of them. But on the actual stream of the Danube, in the central part of this bridge, sixty-two rafts are placed, and are firmly anchored. Upon these rests the proper structure of the bridge, formed of beams and planks laid crosswise; each raft is about 90 ft. long, and a space of 15 ft. is left between the rafts, for the water to flow through, but with planks laid over it, making a continuous bridge. There is width for six men to walk abreast of each other. The third section, on the Turkish side, rests on piles and trestles in the shallow water. The whole bridge curves upwards against the stream, from its commencement at the left bank of the Danube, close to the line of railway now partly under water, to the opposite shore, which it meets a hundred paces below the hamlet of Ghetchet, at the mouth of the Matchin channel. Both ends of the bridge are watched by a double guard, and nobody may pass without special leave. The view from the point where the line of a formerly existing railroad branches off, at the commencement of the bridge on the Roumanian side, is very interesting. In the foreground are seen, yet above the surface of the flood-water, a few ruined houses, and floating timbers collected for the rafts. A wide prospect of the plain beyond finishes with the outlying spurs of the Balkan, at the foot of which lies Matchin, now occupied by the Russians. On the hills behind Matchin are the Turkish batteries, which were stormed by the Russians at the cost of some lives." We shall again refer to this description in giving next week a view of the opposite end of the bridge, and an illustration of the actual crossing of the Russian troops at Braila on the 22nd. Sketches by other Artists have come to hand, showing likewise the crossing of the central division of the army, under the Grand Duke Nicholas, in rafts and boats, from Simnitsa, at the Isle of Vardin, a little below the town of Sistova on the 27th, as above mentioned.

The artillery conflict, with shells continually falling and exploding in the streets and houses, between Rustchuk and Giurgevo, has been going on daily since Sunday week. The house of the British Consul at Rustchuk has suffered most damage, but the Austrian and French Consulates have not been spared. The bombardment, instead of abating, has become more destructive. The Russian fire appears to have been directed upon the centre of the town. The breadth of the river here is not more than 800 yards at its ordinary summer level. Between Rustchuk and Giurgevo there is an island, possession of which would have enabled either belligerent to command the river, but neither has fortified it. Rustchuk stands on a kind of terrace, 60 ft. above the level of the Danube, and is surmounted by an earthen rampart with bastioned front, and by a moat and counterscarp. The length of the bastioned front is about two miles. On the hills behind or near the town heavily-armed works have been erected at an average distance of 1000 yards from each other, the total length of this fortified enceinte being nearly six miles. The view in our Artist's sketch has a precise indication of these breastworks and of the tents of several Turkish encampments near them. The Rustchuk railway station has ceased to be useful to travellers, but it is still conspicuous on the bank of the river. The Russian intrenchments lie between Giurgevo and the village of Slobosia, and are within a mile of the river front of Rustchuk, and not more than 2000 yards from the powder magazine. The British and other foreign Consulates have been removed to Varna.

The Emperor Alexander has issued a lengthy proclamation to the Bulgarian people, inviting them to rally under the protection of mighty Russia, which has already won for the Greeks, the Roumanians, and the Serbians a condition of political independence, having delivered them from the Turkish yoke.

The Serbian Parliament, styled the Skuptschina, has reassembled at Belgrade, and Prince Milan has made them an ambiguous speech, but it is expected that they will resolve on a proclamation similar to that adopted by the Roumanian Legislature.

The war in Asia has been conducted with greater activity, on the Turkish side, than in the Danubian provinces. After failing in repeated attacks on Batoum, which the Turks have successfully defended, the Russian assailants have withdrawn, for a time, and the Russian army which was besieging Kars finds itself unsupported on the right flank. Its left flank has also experienced more than one severe defeat. Battles have taken place at Zewin, between Kars and Erzeroum, in the Sophanli Pass, at Delibaba, and at Karakilissa, so that a retreat of the Russians, to the south-east, in the direction of Bayazid, has been considered needful. The battle at Karakilissa was fought on Sunday week, and the Russian loss is said to have been very great. It is more than doubtful, however, whether Mukhtar Pasha will follow up this advantage with effectual movements in the future course of the campaign. Ismail Pasha, the Governor of Erzeroum, has the credit of the most recent victories. A street view in the city of Erzeroum appears in one of our Engravings.

The embarkation and departure of the Egyptian troops at Alexandria, to join the Sultan's army in Bulgaria, is the subject of an illustration. The troops consisted of 6000 infantry, 300 cavalry, and 800 artillery, with two batteries of Krupp guns, under command of Prince Hassan, son of the Khedive. They were embarked in fifteen vessels of different classes, escorted by four Turkish ironclads. Among the other War Sketches, not yet particularly noticed, in this week's Publication, is that of a Russian regiment of Cossacks, or irregular cavalry, levied from the Mohammedan tribes in the Caucasus. This regiment was at first led, with other Russian troops, into Roumania, but has since been rejected from service in the present campaign, as its fidelity seemed to be doubtful. The breaking up of its camp at Fratesti, and the men starting to march to the nearest railway station, when they went back to Russia, may thus be understood by the reader. The conflict between Russian batteries and a Turkish gun-boat at Maratin, below Rustchuk, is another incident of the war; but we may now expect to hear of more important events.

The British Mediterranean Squadron has been sent to Besika Bay, at the entrance to the Dardanelles, where it arrived last Tuesday.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The great annual review was held on Sunday afternoon, and, the weather being fine, it was witnessed by an immense crowd. Marshal MacMahon was attended by a numerous staff of French and foreign officers, and he was cordially greeted on making his appearance in front of the tribune, where the Duchess of Magenta, all the Ministers, a great number of Senators, and almost the whole diplomatic body were seated. The march past is said to have shown remarkable improvement on former years. An order of the day has been addressed by Marshal MacMahon to the troops who took part in the review. After congratulating them upon their bearing, he says that they understand their duties, and that he relies upon them to defend the dearest interests of the country. He is sure, he adds, that they will aid him to maintain respect for Government and law in fulfilment of his mission, which he will discharge to the end.

M. de Fourton, the Minister of the Interior, has issued a circular to the Prefects in which he explains that the action of Marshal MacMahon on June 16 was taken in order to prevent political and social disorganisation and to check the country in the fatal downward course upon which it had entered. The Marshal wishes the Conservatives of all parties to support him at the approaching elections, and the Prefects are to enlighten public opinion, so that the electors may know what candidates support and what candidates oppose the Government. They will thus assist Marshal MacMahon in the duty he has assumed of "saving France, despite the faults of parties."

Another batch of prefectural changes was gazetted on Wednesday. Seven Prefects, four General Secretaries, ten Sub-Prefects, and sixteen Prefectural Councillors leave their posts, eight of these thirty-seven resigning, four doing so involuntarily, and fifteen being dismissed. Their successors, for the most part, served under the Empire or the former De Broglie Cabinet.

The Russian Chancellor arrived at Berlin on Sunday morning. He had an interview, lasting several hours, with the Crown Prince, and afterwards conferred with the Russian and Italian Ambassadors. He left on Monday for Schoenhausen, his ancestral seat, whence he returned to Berlin, and then he started for Friedrichsruhe, his Laubenburg estate. Prince Bismarck's health is greatly improved.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

In the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet the debate on the Government policy on the Eastern Question was brought to a close on Saturday last. A petition presented by the county of Somozy in favour of maintaining the integrity of Turkey was referred to the Government.

The interests of Austria have received another authoritative exposition. In the Austrian Parliament last week the Minister-President, Prince Auersperg, made them the theme of a speech which may be regarded as the Austrian countersign of M. Tiazza's clear statement. The policy of the Government, the Prince says, is that of neutrality. It sees no need for the mobilisation of the defensive forces. Should events make it necessary to take special steps for the protection of Austrian interests, the Government would still keep itself within the bounds of neutrality. In other words, it would aid neither combatant, even if the movements of the Russian troops should oblige it to occupy Bosnia in self-defence.

GREECE.

In the Cabinet of Deputies on Monday the Minister of Finance submitted a bill authorising him to issue a foreign loan of 20,000,000 drachmas, at the price of seventy-five, together with an internal loan to the same amount. The Minister also demanded a credit of 35,000,000 drachmas for armaments. A Royal decree has been issued giving forced currency to the notes of the National and Ionian Banks, in pursuance of the contract concluded by the Greek Government for a loan of 20,000,000 drachmas from those establishments.

By this victory Trickett retains the championship, which he won from Sacler, of England, in June, 1876."

The numbers kept under training will now be 250, instead of the former complement of 200, and will be increased to 300 when, through the kindness of friends, sufficient subscriptions flow in."

The total income from all sources—including a special donation of £500 and legacies amounting to £1501—was £4725, and the expenditure £4072, carrying forward a balance of £653.

Both Houses of the Canterbury Convocation met on Tuesday. "The Priest in Absolution" was discussed at great length by the Bishops assembled in the Upper House. After a statement by the Archbishop as to the steps he had taken with reference to the Society of the Holy Cross, the Bishop of London moved a resolution requesting his Grace to call the attention of the Lower House to the declaration made by the Bishops four years ago on the subject of the teaching of the Church of England in reference to confession. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol seconded the motion, which was adopted unanimously. In the Lower House a gravamen on the same subject was presented by the Rev. M. Gibbs. On Wednesday the Ridsdale judgment was discussed in the Upper House; and the subject of confession occupied the Lower House the whole day, a resolution expressing concurrence with the declaration of the Upper House upon that subject being carried by 62 to 6.

The Hertford College case has been decided by the Queen's Bench Division adversely to the view of the college. The Judges gave their judgments on somewhat different grounds;

Mr. Justice Mellor being of opinion, apparently, that it is not allowable now to found a Church of England endowment; and Mr. Justice Lush basing his judgment rather on the particular terms of the Hertford College Act. But they both arrived at a result adverse to the restriction sought to be set up.

Speech day at Harrow was celebrated on Thursday in the usual manner, and the event was marked by the opening of a large speech-room built in commemoration of the tercentenary of the school. The building is situated just below the parish church, is in theatre form, with Gothic details, and will seat about 750. The cost has been about £17,000. The prizes were distributed in the new theatre.

Our last week's announcement of the prize-list among first-year's students at University College, London, should have been as follows:—For general proficiency and good conduct: First prize (£30 and £15), W. S. Meyer; second prizes (£20 each), L. H. Edmunds, D. S. M'Coll, W. D. Ridley.

"Old Boys' Day" at Blundell's School, Tiverton, was celebrated on Thursday week. In the afternoon a goodly company sat down to dinner at the Palmerston Hotel. Sir John Walrond, Bart., presided. Several speeches were delivered, and hopes were expressed that, under the new scheme which has just been passed for the government of the school, "Old Blundell's" might take the position of the leading educational institution for the county of Devon. In the evening a ball took place at the Athenaeum. Friday was the "speech day," when the Earl of Devon presided.

On June 21 the annual recitation of speeches and distribution of prizes at Repton took place. The school is now in its 320th year, but may be said to have renewed the vigour of its youth, having been reconstituted a first grade school under the Endowed Schools Act.

The North London Collegiate and Camden Endowed Schools for Girls held their annual meeting for the distribution of prizes, at St. James's Hall, on Thursday week. Augustus F. Perkins, Esq., Master of the Brewers' Company, was in the chair. The report stated that there were 854 girls in attendance in the two schools. It was hoped that on the next occasion of meeting for the distribution of prizes they would occupy their own hall in the new buildings about to be erected in the Camden-road. At the examinations external to the school the following honours had been gained:—Nine candidates had passed the "Examination for Women" in the University of London, four in honours, and five in the first class. Sixty-seven had passed the Cambridge local examinations in December last—viz., twenty-four seniors and forty-three juniors. Miss Burstall, being the highest on the list, was entitled to the Gilchrist Scholarship of £50 for three years, tenable at Girton College, Cambridge; and Miss Pailthorpe also obtained a scholarship of £100 per annum at Girton. These schools, which were founded in 1850 by the present head mistress, Miss Buss, were endowed a few years ago by the Brewers' Company, under a scheme sanctioned by the Charity Commission. The Clothworkers' Company have made a grant of £2000 towards the erection of a hall, and other benefactions have been granted by various companies and individuals for the founding of scholarships and other purposes.

The Earl of Aberdeen presided on Tuesday evening at the presentation of prizes to the successful candidates in connection with the Islington Youths' Institute. The society is open for seven months in the year, when classes in various subjects are held and special prizes offered in each division.

The first meeting of the general committee of the Federation of Liberal Associations was held at Birmingham on Monday. Mr. William Harris was elected chairman of the committee, and Mr. F. Schnadhorst, secretary of the Federation. Sub-committees were appointed for organization, finance, and publishing. A subscription list was read, and resolutions were passed providing for the special action of the Federation under certain contingencies.

FLOWER SHOWS.

The gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, in Regent's Park, never assumed a more charming aspect than during the annual fête on Wednesday night. Illuminations were tastefully arranged along the promenades, upon the water, and clustered here and there among the foliage. The principal point of attraction was, of course, the long and wide promenade leading up to the glass structure containing the most delicate botanical gems. Along each side of this were rows of gas globes, which threw a brilliant light upon the company grouped upon the banks and promenading to and fro. In one large tent some floral dinner-table decorations of exquisite and varied design also formed an object of attraction. The bands of the 2nd Life Guards, the Coldstreams, and the Royal Artillery played during the evening. Shortly after eleven Princess Mary Adelaide (Duchess of Teck) and the Duke of Teck, with a numerous suite, arrived, and were conducted by the council to a dais in front of the glass building. At this moment large blue lights appeared at every point among the trees and upon every prominent part of the ground, producing a very striking effect. The Royal party stayed till nearly midnight, when the company rapidly dispersed. The Chinese Ambassadors were conspicuous among the company.

A meeting of the fruit and flower committee of the Royal Horticultural Society was held on Tuesday in the society's gardens at South Kensington. In connection with the meeting, there was also an exhibition of fruit and flowers, which were placed in the centre conservatory.

The rose show at the Alexandra Palace last Saturday was a brilliant success. There were 278 entries, and the competitors represented many counties and several important towns. Norfolk and Hereford, Oxford and Cambridge, Southern and Midland Counties, and secluded parsonages and quiet country residences made excellent contributions, and amateurs vied successfully with leading professional exhibitors.

The National Rose Society, numbering in its muster-roll nearly all the distinguished amateur and professional growers in the country, held its first show on Wednesday in St. James's Great Hall, when a most excellent collection of cut roses was arranged for exhibition under the skilful management of Mr. W. Newman. The Rev. Canon Hole (president of the society) took part in the task of judging. Among the exhibitors Messrs. Paul and Son were chiefly successful, taking six first prizes. In addition to the prizes, amounting to £200, given by the society, Messrs. Cranston and Co. offered a fifty-guinea challenge-cup for amateurs for forty-eight distinct roses, single trusses, and this was gained by Mr. Jowitt, of Hereford.

The annual distribution of prizes to the successful competitors in the late exhibition of the Notting-hill Workmen's Flower Show and Home Encouragement Society took place on Tuesday in Lansdowne-gardens, Ladbroke-grove, Notting-hill. The prizes were distributed by Lady Edith Ashley, who was accompanied by the Earl of Shaftesbury, one of the vice-presidents. The money prizes varied from 1s. 6d. to £1, and the miscellaneous prizes included pictures, watering-pots, and flower-stands. The recipients were of all ages, not the least observable being an old soldier.

The annual flower show in connection with the Society for Promoting Window Gardening amongst the Working Classes in the united parishes of St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster, took place on the same day, by permission of Dean Stanley, in the College Green, Great College-street, and in the evening the prizes to the successful exhibitors were distributed by the Earl of Shaftesbury. After the distribution the noble Earl said he was confident that among the subordinate features of education there was not one which tended more to refinement, to elevate the taste, and to reduce the coarseness and brutality of many of the poorer classes than the culture of flowers. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress visited the exhibition.

The Kentish suburban parishes, Greenwich, Deptford, Blackheath, and Charlton, have had their flower shows during the last two weeks, or have commenced preparations for them. Blackheath enjoyed a splendid floral entertainment on June 20 and 21, in the grounds of Mr. Penn, at Lee Park. The Charlton show, a very pretty one, took place at East Combe Park, by permission of Mr. Millington, one day last week. On Tuesday and Wednesday there was a good "working-people's flower show" in the school-rooms of Christ Church, East Greenwich. The principal Greenwich flower show, however, that of the parishes of St. Alphege and St. Mary, is fixed for the week after next. The Deptford window flower show took place on Tuesday.

Lord Gifford, one of the Judges of the Court of Session in Scotland, has consented to preside over the Jurisprudence Department, and the Lord Advocate over the Repression of Crime Section, at the ensuing Social Congress at Aberdeen.

The Manchester City Council has sanctioned a proposal of the waterworks committee for the purchase of Thirlmere, one of the Cumberland lakes, and the conveyance of water from it to Manchester by an aqueduct one hundred miles long. The works will occupy seven years in execution. The first instalment will cost £1,700,000, for which sum 50,000,000 gallons of water per day will be impounded. In the discussion of the subject it was stated that the picturesque scenery of the Thirlmere district would be no more interfered with than was that of Loch Katrine by the waterworks of Glasgow.

From Alexandria the correspondent of the Daily News reports that the work of removing Cleopatra's Needle is proceeding rapidly. Mr. Carter, who will take charge of it on the voyage, has arrived there. Two inscriptions—one in Greek, the other in Latin—have been discovered on the crabs supporting Cleopatra's Needle. They fix the date when the obelisk was erected at Alexandria—the eighth year of Augustus Caesar, by Barbarus, Prefect of Egypt, Pontius engineer. Respecting the removal of this obelisk, the Globe remarks as follows:—"A dead weight of two or three hundred tons is no trifle to transport either over land or sea, and it would be very unlucky if all our interest in the huge monolith were suddenly to be quenched by the object of it plunging down to the bottom of the sea. There ought, however, in these days to be no very great risk in an undertaking such as Caligula carried successfully through with a considerably greater weight, though the distance was shorter. Pliny's account of the conveyance of the monument which now stands beneath the shadow of St. Peter's is interesting. A vessel was built especially for the purpose, and nothing, says the historian, ever appeared on the seas more astonishing than this craft. A fir-tree of prodigious size was used in its construction, the thickness of this tree being such that it was as much as four men could do to encircle it with their arms. The vessel conveyed not only the monolith itself, which Fontana estimated to weigh some 440 tons, but the blocks also, which were to serve as a base for it. The ship was ballasted by 120,000 bushels of lentils. The obelisk having been safely conveyed to Rome, no further use afloat seems to have been conceived for the vessel; and, according to Suetonius, when the Emperor Claudius was constructing the harbour of Ostia he sunk this Roman Great Eastern in order to make a foundation for one of his piers."

LORDS.

Lord Derby satisfied Lord Stanley of Alderley yesterday week that Colonel Welleley, with the Russian army of the Danube, and Sir Arnold Kemball, with the army of Mukhtar Pasha in Armenia, would probably in the ordinary course of things report home any cases of violence committed on either side. The rest of the brief sitting was occupied in reading the third time and passing the Scottish Game Laws Amendment Bill, in passing through Committee a bill for improving a densely populated quarter of London (Great Wild-street), and in advancing various other measures a stage.

Their Lordships were on Monday engaged in purely formal business. Earl Beauchamp obtained leave to bring in a bill for the inclosure of land in Barrowden, South Luffenham, and North Luffenham, Rutlandshire, and at Riccall, in the county of York, the Chairman of Committees urging, however, that the local inquiries should be promptly completed. This bill was read the first time; the Trade Marks Bill passed through Committee; and the Public Works Loans, Norfolk and Suffolk Fisheries, and the Local Government Boards Provisional Orders Confirmation (Belper Union, &c.) Bill, were read the third time and passed.

Earl Granville elicited from Lord Derby on Tuesday that the statement which had appeared in the papers was correct that orders had been given to the British fleet to leave the Piræus, at which it had been stationed, and to return to the station it occupied last year at Besika Bay. The Oxford and Cambridge Universities Bill was then brought up for second reading by the Marquis of Salisbury, who expressed a hope that the question would be settled this year by the passing of the measure. Lord Colchester moved that legislation on the subject would be premature unless preceded by an inquiry into the working of the system at present in vogue at the Universities. This amendment was opposed by Lord Carlingford, who was in favour of the bill, with certain amendments. The Duke of Devonshire, Lord Camperdown, and Viscount Midleton having also supported the principle of the measure, and the Marquis of Salisbury having replied, the amendment was negatived, and the bill read the second time. The Earl of Harrowby wishing to know whether the boundary line between Turkey and Persia had been definitively settled, Lord Derby explained, with his habitual precision, that from 1847 to 1875 the representatives of Persia and Turkey had been engaged in considering the question, and that English and Russian arbitrators had been appointed with the consent of each Power, but that both the Porte and Persia had acted upon the Oriental principle of doing nothing to-day which might be put off for a month or a year, and consequently no agreement had yet been come to on the subject, though the negotiations might be resumed at any time. The Foreign Secretary further assured their Lordships that her Majesty's Government were fully aware of the extreme importance of preventing the outbreak of a war between Persia and Turkey, and would lose no favourable opportunity of endeavouring to prevent so great a misfortune.

No business of very great importance occupied their Lordships at their sitting on Thursday. Lord O'Hagan withdrew his bill regarding imbecile, lunatic, and other afflicted classes in Ireland, on an intimation being given by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon that the Government were about to propose a Committee of Inquiry on the whole subject. The New Forest Bill was under consideration up to the time of their rising.

COMMONS.

Long sittings have been the order of the day and night. Indeed, linked dulness was so long drawn out on one occasion that hon. members went home with the milk in the morning. The amount of work transacted, however, has been in an inverse proportion to the duration of the sittings. On Thursday week, for example, when the subjects enumerated in our last Number had been exhausted, there ensued a deluge of words on two Indian questions ere the Chancellor of the Exchequer could secure a much-needed vote on account. The first Indian topic had reference to the action of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India with respect to Mr. Leeds, the magistrate who is said to have treated as a common assault a fatal assault made by Mr. Fuller on his native servant. Mr. Lowe brought the matter before the House in the shape of a motion:—

That the power of the Crown to remove Judges of the High Courts of India who hold their office during her Majesty's pleasure, ought to be exercised on the same principles as if they held their office during good behaviour, and not otherwise.

Sir George Campbell gave the House the benefit of his Indian experience on the subject; and the Solicitor-General, Sir William Harcourt, and Mr. Forsyth, spoke in defence of the Marquis of Salisbury's despatch; to the tenour of which Sir Henry James was opposed; whilst Mr. Herschell, in the course of a brief speech characteristically clear, just, and discriminating, suggested that if the Government believed that the treatment of these assault cases was becoming a matter for serious consideration they could have interfered much more effectually and less dangerously by calling the attention of the magistracy to the subject generally without reference to any particular case. Mr. Lowe did not persevere with his motion. Mr. Lyon Playfair next objected to the new regulations reducing the maximum age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service from twenty-one to nineteen. His chief argument against the new regulations was that they practically excluded candidates prepared at the Scotch Universities, the Queen's Colleges, Ireland, and similar institutions in London. But Lord George Hamilton denied that this would be the effect of the fresh regulations, which had only been sanctioned by the Marquis of Salisbury after mature deliberation. A few other hon. members having relieved their minds on the subject, this matter likewise dropped. A fruitless discussion, originated by Mr. Rylands and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, followed on the expediency of taking votes on account for the Civil Service at so late a period of the Session. Eventually (despite a motion by Mr. Butt to reduce the sum by £316,750, simply to elicit further explanation of the vote) £1,327,930 was granted for the Civil Service.

Mr. Trevelyan yesterday week strengthened his case for the extension of the borough franchise to counties by presenting several petitions in favour of his motion. One was from about 30,000 persons in Kent and Sussex. Another was from 22,678 members and friends of the National Reform Union. Yet another was from 10,111 members of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union in the Oxford district. The resolutions subsequently moved by the hon. member, and supported by an able speech enforcing the anomalies of the existing electoral arrangements, were as follow:—

1. That, in the opinion of this House, it would be desirable to adopt a uniform Parliamentary franchise for borough and county constituencies.
2. That it would be desirable to so redistribute political power as to obtain a more complete representation of the opinion of the electoral body.

The most noteworthy features of the debate that followed may be briefly summed up. Sir Charles Dilke dealt in a masterly way with the figures which he marshalled to attack the inconsistencies of the present distribution of political power in town and in country. Mr. Smollett, in opposing the resolutions, endeavoured to introduce a Peregrine Pickleish tone into the discussion. Of the members of the late Government who spoke on the subject, Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, and the Marquis of Hartington cordially favoured the proposed equalisation of the franchise; but Mr. Goschen resisted it, inasmuch as rural cottagers, who too often had to end their days as paupers, were not yet prepared to use the trust wisely. On the other hand, one Conservative member, Mr. Serjeant Spinks, believed that the extension of household suffrage to the counties, instead of endangering the stability of our institutions, would be the best means of supporting them. Speaking for the Ministry, Mr. E. Stanhope and the Chancellor of the Exchequer stoutly opposed the Resolutions, the latter repudiating the doctrine that every citizen had a right to vote, and urging that the time was not opportune for taking into consideration the question of redistribution of seats. On a division, Mr. Trevelyan's Resolutions were rejected by 276 against 220 votes. Mr. Lowe, as well as Mr. Goschen, voted with the majority; but, to counterbalance their defection, it may be mentioned that both Mr. Gladstone and the Marquis of Hartington (the latter for the first time) recorded their votes in favour of the Resolutions.

The sitting which began before four o'clock on Monday afternoon and did not end till a quarter past seven on Tuesday morning was memorable not only for its extraordinary length, but also for the determined opposition offered by a small knot of members (mostly Milseian) to the progress of Government business. Much valuable time was taken up, as usual, in the consideration of a variety of questions, from Colonel Welleley's reconciliation with the Grand Duke Nicholas to the necessity of encouraging mounted riflemen and of paying the medical officers of the Army and Militia better. Ultimately the House went into Committee of Supply on the Army Estimates. On the vote of £27,500 for the administration of military law, Sir C. O'Loughlin held the existing law to be a disgrace to the principles of justice; but the vote was agreed to after Mr. Gathorne Hardy had promised that next Session a Committee should be appointed to consider the question. Thereafter the following votes were granted without inordinate discussion:—£243,300 for the medical establishment, £534,000 for militia pay, £74,000 for yeomanry cavalry, and £468,700 for the volunteers. Then came the tug of war. On the Chairman submitting the vote of £132,000 for the Army reserve force, Mr. O'Connor Power intervened with the first of a long series of motions for reporting progress. There were 8 for and 128 against the motion. In face of the overwhelming majority against this little band of obstructives, they kept on dividing, either that progress might be reported, or that the Chairman should leave the chair. Mr. Whalley, one of the minority, objected to the vote being taken at so late an hour. The objections of the Hibernian obstructives it would not be so easy to state. One after the other Ministers retired; and the prolonged contest was not brought to a close till after the seventeenth division, when, on the motion of Sir Charles Dilke, a count-out took place at a quarter-past seven on Tuesday morning.

On Tuesday afternoon the House resumed, and Mr. Blake, with the memory of the morning struggle still fresh, announced his intention of calling attention to a reported speech in which Mr. Parnell was said to have publicly alluded to the success of the obstructive policy he had adopted this Session. Replying to Mr. Fortescue Harrison, who asked whether it would not be advisable to rescind the rule which prevents opposed business being taken after half-past twelve, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was cheered when he stated his opinion that it would be well, "after recent events," to reconsider the whole subject. In answer to an interpellation from Mr. W. E. Forster as to whether it was true the British Fleet had been ordered to Besika Bay, Sir Stafford Northcote said, "Yes, Sir; it is quite true." Mr. Whalley having given notice of a motion bearing upon the question of the late sitting, the debate on the Irish Sunday Closing Bill was resumed by Mr. R. Smyth, but the bill was talked out by the Irish members objecting to the measure. Earl Percy's motion, and Mr. Pease's amendment, both advocating inquiry into the operation of the Vaccination Act, were negatived by 106 to 56 votes; and the House was counted out whilst Mr. Whalley was animadverting on "The Priest in Absolution."

On Wednesday Mr. Whalley made a fruitless attempt to reopen "The Priest in Absolution" question; Mr. O'Sullivan's Irish Union Justices Bill was rejected by a majority of 142; Mr. W. Egerton's Divine Worship Facilities Bill was read the second time, by 94 against 78; and a few new bills were introduced, and others advanced a stage.

The House on Thursday presented a remarkably animated and excited appearance, in consequence of a general impression that what was called "an Irish row" was impending. The members thronged in in considerable groups and in quick succession some time before the regular hour of meeting, and when the Speaker's Chaplain proceeded to offer up the prescribed prayer there was a most edifying body of pious worshippers present to assist in the devotional exercise. After the disposal of a great number of questions on the paper, none of which presented any features of general interest or importance Mr. Puleston rose to make an inquiry of the Chancellor of the Exchequer of which he gave him private notice. Proceeding to preface his question by alluding to the obstructive conduct of certain members on the occasion of the recent extraordinary late sitting, he was interrupted by Mr. Callan, who appealed to the Speaker as to whether such observations were in order. The Speaker having ruled that no question involving a matter of argument was then admissible, Mr. Puleston simply asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to afford him an opportunity of submitting a motion having for its object to limit the rights of members to propose the adjournment of the House, or that the Chairman in Committees should report progress. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying, said that the Government had for some time been earnestly considering what steps it would be desirable to take in the direction of revising the rules of the House, so as to meet the altered circumstances under which their discussions were carried on. It would, he observed, be affectation in him to ignore the recent scenes which had taken place, and the obstructions offered to the progress of business. He would, however, deprecate any changes being discussed under a feeling of annoyance or irritation, or with reference to the conduct of individual members. Nevertheless, the Government felt that some change was necessary in their rules, but he advised that they should go on as at present this Session; and the Government would consult with the Speaker and the officials of the House as to what alterations of the rules and orders might be desirable. Mr. Whalley wished to offer a personal explanation, and was proceeding to comment on the speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he was called to order by the Speaker. Mr. Whalley made two more attempts to resume his observations, the Speaker as often interposing. The right hon. gentleman at length intimated to the member for Peterborough that unless he submitted to the ruling of the Chair it would be necessary to submit his conduct to the judgment of the House. The Chancellor of the Exchequer supported the ruling of the Speaker. Mr. Whalley once more rose and moved the adjournment of the House; whereupon the Speaker said, as the hon. gentleman altogether disregarded the injunctions of the Chair, he should, unless the House thought otherwise, call upon the next hon. gentleman who had a question to put to rise in his place. Mr. Jenkins then asked whether the notice of motion placed on the paper by Mr. Blake relative to the speeches made by Mr. Parnell ought not to be taken before the orders of the day as a matter of privilege. The Speaker pointed out that, as the speeches referred to were made, one in April and the other on June 20, they could not in point of time be treated as urgent nor as a question of privilege. Sir W. Lawson gave notice that to-morrow he would ask whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer had any objection to inform the House with what object her Majesty's Government had ordered the British fleet to Besika Bay. Mr. Blake wished to know whether it was competent to him to ask that his motion as to Mr. Parnell should be at once taken as a question of privilege. Mr. Parnell said if the House desired that he should make explanations as to his two speeches, he had no desire to stand in its way. The Speaker said that it would be irregular to discuss the motion unless the House decided to give the hon. gentleman the opportunity. Mr. Blake then moved that his motion be at once considered as a question of privilege. Mr. Newdegate inquired whether the hon. gentleman was serious in making his motion. The matter, however, was suddenly put a stop to by the fact of Lord Mandeville (on the invitation of the Speaker), the newly-elected member for Huntingdon, presenting himself at the table to take the oath. The subject introduced by Mr. Blake was not renewed. The House then went into Committee of Supply, when the remaining Army Estimates were agreed to with unexpected celerity. On the resumption of the House the Indian Loan Bill, upon the motion for its second reading, occupied the remainder of the sitting. Mr. Fawcett, in a speech of considerable length, argued against the expediency of raising a loan in this country on the security of the revenues of India for so large a sum as was provided for by this bill; but at no time was there more than about a score of members to appreciate the hon. gentleman's oratory.

NEW BOOKS.

A very fascinating portion of a most attractive subject is handled in the second volume of the History of French Literature, by Henri Van Laun (Smith, Elder, and Co.), in which the work is carried on "from the classical Renaissance until the end of the reign of Louis XIV." To what appetite it will be sufficient to give a brief description of the intellectual feast set before the reader. The Jesuits, the discouragement they offered to the study of the Bible, and the encouragement they afforded to classical learning, are the matters which first have to be digested; Boucher and the other ferocious "preachers of the League," "the advocates of the League," and the "adversaries of the League," are duly served up; and then, after a few preliminary remarks, we are in the thick of sheer literature. Ronsard and his followers are passed in review; Malherbe, the reformer or titular reformer of his native tongue, with his opponents and followers, or some of them, is duly noticed; there are a few observations upon "the theatre of the Renaissance," and, after reading a page or two about "Jodelle and his friends," and about the failure which attended the revival of the classical drama, we reach the epoch of Corneille and "The Cid." Then the old, familiar, but never vulgar or repellent, names come fast and thick—D'Aubigné, Brantôme, Pascal, De Sévigné, Scudéry, Richelieu, the founder of the French Academy, Molière, La Fontaine, La Rochefoucauld, De Retz, Boileau, Racine, Bossuet, Fénelon, Massillon, Saurin, La Bruyère, La Mothe-Guyon, Saint-Simon, and other stars. And we go over again, without any sense of weariness, the story of the Hôtel de Rambouillet and the literary coteries. Though meagreness may still be said to be the characteristic of this volume, as it was of the former, yet it is almost certain that there is no other work from which the English student of French literature could pick up so much information so pleasantly, in so small a compass, and at so slight a cost of time; and it may be that considerations of space constrained the author to be sparing of his treasures. The author is so able and has been so recently at his work that one would not like to pit one's own fading reminiscences against his fresh researches, but memory certainly suggests that Corneille began his literary career as Richelieu's hack, and that the author of "The Cid," so far from having suffered in his last days from "a painful consciousness of the decline of his genius," considered that he was the victim of fashion, and actually appealed, in verse, to the King to re-set the fashion in a Corneillian direction. However, unless some passage has been unconsciously overlooked, Mr. Van Laun has said nothing of Corneille's apprenticeship, and has represented the great poet as being conscious of his deterioration; so that the reminiscences alluded to are perhaps illusive. With the eloquent eulogium Mr. Van Laun passes upon Corneille most readers must sympathise, and they must also acknowledge the great interest of the whole work and its use as an incentive towards a more profound study of the subject, and also as a book of ready reference.

The fifth volume of the "Cabinet Edition," the small form in which Mr. Kinglake's "Invasion of the Crimea" (William Blackwood and Son) is published, makes almost an unfair demand upon the time of him who has simply to notify its publication; for, though he may have read the whole of its contents in days gone by, he finds that when he has once taken it up and dipped into its pages he has more difficulty in laying it down again than the few gallant "heavies" had in charging into the middle and cutting their way out of the multitudinous Russian cavalry on the memorable day of Balaclava. For it is chiefly with that battle that the volume is occupied, with the charges of the "heavy brigade" and the "light brigade" successively; and, what with the absorbing interest of the scene itself and what with the style in which Mr. Kinglake describes it, there is no tearing oneself away from the pages. It is computed "that, from the moment when General Scarlett began his charge to the one when the Russian mass broke, the time was about eight minutes;" but for more than eight times eight minutes will he remain buried in the volume whoever commences a perusal of the narrative. And yet the best advice that can be given to him who has read it is to read it again, and to him who has not read it to read it without delay. Of the deplorable misunderstandings, heartburnings, bickerings, and even legal processes connected with the brilliant exploit of the "light brigade" it is enough to remark that, whatever view may be taken of the right and the wrong, Mr. Kinglake seems to have done all that was in his power to let his readers form their own opinion, though he may appear to have more personal regard for the character of Lord Lucan than for that of Lord Cardigan. And not only is a historian human, but every historian is bound to make his estimate of the personages of his history.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Sport at Stockbridge last week was as good as ever, and the successes of the veteran John Day on his own ground were very popular; indeed, from the number of horses at present under his care, there may soon be a revival of old times at Danebury, when the "hoops" swept all before them. Seven two-year-olds ran for the Mottisfont Stakes, of whom Strathflect was made favourite. It will be remembered that she cut up badly in the New Stakes at Ascot, for which she was backed very heavily on the strength of a high trial. That was her first appearance in public; and, as so often happens, she did not run within a stone of her best form, which was proved by her clever victory in the Mottisfont. Springfield, Petrarch, and Placida all declined the Stockbridge Cup, which was considered a match between Trappist and Ecossais. The six furlongs proved too far for the latter, and Lollypop was the only one that could make the semblance of a struggle with Trappist. The Tacy Stakes was chosen for the debut of Industry, a filly by Hammit—Kalpyge, who cost 1950 gs. as a yearling; and, from the style in which she won, she will probably repay the large outlay. Her stable-companion, Crucifix, a half-sister to Pero Gomez, who made her first appearance in the Hurstbourne Stakes, was not so fortunate, as she could not get a place to Redwing, a filly by Blair Athol—Wheatear, and therefore half-sister to Skylark. Attalus, though giving 8lb. to the winner, was only beaten a neck for second place, and quite maintained his reputation.

The presence of the Prince of Wales gave additional éclat to the Newmarket July Meeting; but the heavy rain on the opening day was most unwelcome. And we cannot say much for the racing, the main feature of the first two days being the singular fact that in four of the "single combats" unfortunate backers laid 9 to 4 on the loser. A capital field of nine contested the July Stakes; and among them were Pacifico, an own brother to Atlantic, The Spark, and Insulaire—three highly-tried "darkies." Strathflect and Industry were the best of the public performers, and the former won so easily that the disgrace of her Ascot defeat is quite wiped out. The eleven races on Wednesday were, on the whole, singularly uninteresting. Redwing, who, we regret to hear, is not quite sound in her wind, made a fearful example of the trio opposed to her in the Exeter Stakes; and the combined efforts of Lollypop, Ecossais, and Trappist could never even extend Springfield in the July Cup. Well might Mr. Houldsworth decline an offer of £15,000 for his nonpareil; and a match between this second Prince Charlie and Petrarch over the Rowley Mile would create the most intense excitement. The Beaufort Stakes fell to Mr. Sanford's Start, the success of the plucky American being wonderfully popular.

The sales of blood stock during the July week are gradually increasing in importance, and during the present week Mr. Tattersall has been busily occupied both morning and evening. Proceedings on Tuesday were very quiet, but on the following day Mr. Gell's yearlings created great competition. We do not give the average obtained, as several were supposed to be virtually bought in, a proceeding which occasioned some dissatisfaction. An own sister to Levant, by Adventurer—Regule (1350 gs.), a filly by Winslow—Formosa (1550 gs.), a colt by Cecrops—Light (1850 gs.), and a filly by Scottish Chief—Virtue (1600 gs.), and therefore an own sister to Grace, made the best prices. In the evening Mr. Waring's yearlings proved the great attraction, and the nine sold produced the grand average of 576 gs. This was mainly due to a magnificent son of Adventurer and Atonement. The produce of the latter were invariably win races, and, after a spirited contest, Lord Hardwicke had to give 2450 gs. for the colt.

All the cricket interest of the last few days has been centred on the two matches between the Gentlemen and Players, and, as is almost invariably the case, the former have obtained the advantage. The first contest, which took place at the Oval, was drawn. Everything was in favour of the bat; and the scores in the first innings of each side were so remarkable that we give them in full:—

The heavy rain which has fallen recently produced an entire change of affairs at Lord's at the beginning of the week, and the Gentlemen won a very exciting match by one wicket, thanks mainly to the bowling of Mr. Patterson, who took seven wickets, and the batting of Mr. J. M. Cotterill (92). On the other side, Daft (64 and 18), Jupp (23 and 41), and Emmett (not out, 47), did best. We must not omit to mention that Mr. A. J. Webb caught no less than six of the Players in their second innings.

The Midland Counties Archery Meeting, at Leamington, concluded on Thursday week, and the prizes, amounting to upwards of 100 gs., were presented to the winners at the Regent's Hotel. The ladies who won the greatest gross score prizes were—first, Mrs. Piers Legh; second, Miss Legh; third, Mrs. Acklom; fourth, Mrs. Kinnahan; fifth, Mrs. Butt. Miss Hollins took the prize for the greatest number of golds, 20. The winners of the greatest gross score prizes for gentlemen were—first, Major Fisher; second, Mr. Elliott; third, Mr. Palliarrett. In the handicap shooting yesterday week Mrs. L. V. Rooke won the first prize, Mrs. Fisher the second, and Miss G. Roch the third. The gentlemen winners were—Mr. Nesham first, Mr. Foote second.

At the Metropolitan Amateur Regatta last week the members of the London R.C. continued their winning career, and secured six out of the eight events set for decision. Eyre and Hastie, undoubtedly the champion pair of the season, again proved too good for Smith and Playford; and, in the absence of Edwardes-Moss, who is reserving himself for the Wingfield, A. H. Grove had an easy task in the Senior Sculls.

These old opponents, Jones and Johnson, once more met for the swimming championship of England on Monday evening last, the course being from Putney Aqueduct to Hammersmith Bridge. The pair swam twice over this course last year, and on each occasion Jones won very easily, so, on Monday, odds of 3 to 1 were freely offered on him, and though, as usual, he started badly, he led by three yards at the Star and Garter, and finally reached the winning post fully eighty yards in advance of Johnson.

The Prince of Wales has graciously intimated his intention of becoming patron of the forthcoming Thames International Regatta, to be held on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of this month, under the auspices of the Duke of Teck, Lord Londesborough, the Lord Mayors of London and Dublin, and an influential committee, comprising the most popular amateur oarsmen on the Thames:—Mr. F. S. Gulston (Captain of the London Rowing Club), Mr. J. Hastie (Captain of the Thames Rowing Club), and Mr. Brooks (Captain of the West London Rowing Club). Sir Thomas White has presented a valuable piece of plate as first prize for the amateur eights; and the Lord Mayor has courteously acceded to the request of Captain Pelly, the chairman of the committee, to present the prizes at the Mansion House on the Monday following the regatta. The leading scullers of England, both amateur and professional, are expected to compete; and, should an American four (tempted by the £300 prize) cross the Atlantic, there is little doubt that the Thames International Regatta will bring the rowing season to a brilliant close. It should be added that entries must be made to Mr. James Leith, honorary secretary, 85, Gracechurch-street, on or before July 16.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Bank directors decided on Thursday to reduce the rate of discount from 3 to 2½ per cent.

A highly-finished engraving, entitled "The Goddess Flora," by T. L. Atkinson, after the picture by the late Valentine Bromley, has been issued by Mr. McLean.

The annual soirée given to the exhibitors by the President and Council of the Royal Academy was held on Wednesday at Burlington House.

The annual general meeting of the National Training-School for Cookery was held on Monday at the Exhibition-road, South Kensington—the Duke of Westminster presiding.

The Library Committee of the Corporation gave their annual banquet on Monday evening, at the Albion, under the presidency of Mr. Deputy Shephard, chairman of the committee. About sixty gentlemen were present. The chairman said that 220,000 persons visited the Library last year, and this year the number had already reached 120,000.

The Kennel Club's ninth annual exhibition of sporting and other dogs has been held this week at the Agricultural Hall. The entries numbered over 1100, and the show was a marked improvement on those of previous years. The fox-terriers were the most remarkable class. About 200 of these valuable assistants to masters of foxhounds were exhibited.

The annual general meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute was held yesterday week—the Duke of Manchester, president, in the chair. Sir Henry Barkly, lately Governor of the Cape, was among those present. The report stated that 121 Fellows were elected during the past year, which brings the total number in England and the colonies to about 700.

A meeting was held on Wednesday evening at Exeter Hall in favour of the Permissive Bill—the Rev. Canon Wilberforce presiding. Resolutions urging unremitting exertion in support of the United Kingdom Alliance, and recommending the presentation of a petition to Parliament, were carried. The chief speakers were Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Sullivan, M.P., and Mr. E. Jenkins, M.P.

At a recent meeting of the Court of Common Council, the report of the Special Bridge or Subway Committee, recommending the erection of a low-level bridge east of London Bridge, was after some discussion adopted. It was explained that such a bridge as that recommended, with openings for the passage of ships, would cost only £750,000, against £2,000,000 for a high-level bridge, and £1,500,000 for a subway.

Last Saturday the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Drinking Fountains Association was held at Grosvenor House, the Duke of Westminster in the chair. The report stated that thirty-three drinking-fountains for human beings and fifty-eight troughs for animals had been erected during the last twelve months, making a total number in London at the present time of 324 drinking-fountains and 342 troughs.

The second Volunteer Fire Brigade competition took place on Monday at the Alexandra Palace, and attracted a large number of spectators. The challenge cup of the palace was obtained by the Princes Risborough (Bucks) Volunteer Brigade, which also won the first prize of £10.—The fiftieth anniversary festival of the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum took place at the palace on Tuesday, as noted in another column.

Mr. John Hosack, of the Northern Circuit, was on Monday sworn in before the Lord Chancellor and appointed as magistrate at Clerkenwell Police Court. His appointment is consequent on the death of Mr. T. J. Arnold, for many years magistrate at the Westminster Police Court. Mr. L. O. Tennyson D'Eyncourt has removed from Marylebone to Westminster, and Mr. William Major Cooke from Clerkenwell to Marylebone.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of last week (the fourth week of June) was 78,203, of whom 35,903 were in workhouses and 42,300 received out-door relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 266, 6378, and 15,483 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 600, of whom 372 were men, 179 women, and 49 children.

The annual banquet to the Archbishops and Bishops took place at the Mansion House on Wednesday evening. The guests were nearly three hundred in number. In proposing the principal toast, the Lord Mayor said that Church and State formed the bulwark of the Constitution and the freedom of Englishmen. The Archbishop of Canterbury responded to the toast and took a cheerful view of both Church and State. He had no reason, he said, to doubt that the Church was very strong. The Archbishop of Armagh and the Bishop of Winchester also spoke. Several Nonconformist ministers were present, and a separate toast was given in their honour, to which the Rev. Dr. McAuslane replied.

The committee invited by the Lord Mayor to assist him in the distribution of the fund lately raised at the Mansion House to reward the imprisoned Welsh miners and their rescuers, and to relieve the widows and orphans, met yesterday week, in the Venetian parlour, for the dispatch of business. The committee investigated the various claims, over 200 in number, including those of the rescued men and boy, the widows and orphans, the rescuing colliers, banksmen, engineers, agents, divers, and others, and fixed temporarily and provisionally certain sums to be presented, either in money or in other forms. At their rising, the task being still incomplete, they adjourned till July 11. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress afterwards entertained the committee at luncheon at the Mansion House.

At a meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, held on Thursday at its house, John-street, Adelphi, various rewards were granted to the crews of life-boats for recent services. Rewards were also granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from shipwrecks on our coasts. Payments amounting to £2100 were ordered to be made on some of the 266 life-boat establishments of the institution. The receipt of various contributions was announced, including £480 from the Civil Service Life-Boat Fund, for their third life-boat; £50 from Captain J. Grey; and £5 collected on board the emigrant-ship Waipa, per Captain T. F. Milman. Reports were read from the inspectors of life-boats to the institution on their recent visits to the coast.

There were 2291 births and 1300 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 33 and the deaths 43 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The fatal cases of smallpox, which in the seven preceding weeks had declined from 78 to 44, were again 44 last week, of which 17 were certified as unvaccinated and 9 as vaccinated. There were 46 deaths from measles, 24 from scarlet fever, 6 from diphtheria, 28 from whooping-cough, 26 from different forms of fever, and 50 from diarrhoea; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 223 deaths were referred, against 218 and 210 in the two preceding weeks. The deaths were 50 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 2189 births and 1533 deaths were registered. The mean temperature was 61.6 deg., and 0.4 deg. above the average. The lowest night temperature was 44.2 deg. on Monday, and the highest day temperature in the shade 85.5 deg. on Friday; the extreme range in the week was, therefore, 41.3 deg. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 58.4 hours out of the 115.7 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

Thunderstorms occurred in London on Tuesday night, more particularly in the northern districts. Mr. G. J. Symonds communicates to the Times an account of a remarkable hailstorm which passed over his house in Camden-square:—"Rain had fallen at intervals during the day, and up to eight p.m. a little more than a tenth of an inch had been recorded. At 8.2 it began to rain; at 8.3 a little hail fell, and a confused rushing or rattling sound was plainly audible. In about ten or fifteen seconds the storm was full upon us, and by 8.7, or in three minutes and a half or thereabouts, the mingled hail and snow amounted to more than half an inch deep. In point of quantity and time combined I do not know that such a fall has ever been measured in this country. It was at the rate of nearly eight inches an hour. The effect of the hail upon the garden has been very severe. I inclose a riddled leaf as a specimen, and I may also mention that it has broken two thermometers, one of which has been exposed to all weathers since 1860. Happening to be chairman of the exhibition committee, I was naturally very anxious as to the fate of the conservatory and gardens of the Royal Botanic Society; but not a single hailstone fell there, and very little rain."—Heavy storms are reported from Scotland. At Aberdeen on Tuesday evening a boy was struck by the lightning and killed.

"HAPPY HOURS OF CHILDHOOD."

This picture, by Mr. F. W. W. Topham, has been noticed by many visitors to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy. The mischievous joy of the rude little urchin, who has perched himself on the basin of a public fountain, to practise the ingenious trick of spouting its water against the damsel with her pitcher coming for a household supply, is delineated with remarkable truth to nature; but it is very ill nature, and deserves the prompt application of a birch rod, or a similar instrument of wholesome moral correction. We have no sympathy with the indulgence that would tolerate such "happy hours," at any period of infancy or juvenility, at the expense of the future character of a boy or girl allowed to find pleasure in teasing other people. The artist's design is surely ironical with reference to the title he has given to this picture, which has its merits as a composition, already pointed out.

The next congress of the British Medical Association will be held in Manchester, at Owens College, in August.

By invitation, the Sanitary Institute of Great Britain will hold their annual session at Scarborough this month.

Mr. J. Dunnington Fletcher, who has often sat as Deputy-Assistant Judge at the Middlesex Sessions, has been nominated Judge of the Second Court at the Liverpool Sessions.

Lord Warwick has been elected president of the Birmingham Agricultural Exhibition Society for the ensuing year. The show of fat cattle will be held from Dec. 1 to Dec. 6.

The Manchester City Council have resolved to relieve Sir Joseph Heron from the duties devolving upon him as Town Clerk; and to appoint him, at the salary which he now receives, consulting Town Clerk.

The Garnet, another addition to the British Navy, one of the new class of vessels laid down about two years ago, several of which have been already completed, was last Saturday launched at Chatham Dockyard.

Sir J. Hawkshaw, C.E., has prepared a very elaborate report with a view to the improvement of the drainage of Lincolnshire. The works proposed by Sir John will, if carried out, involve an estimated outlay of £567,280, irrespective of Parliamentary and engineering expenses. The most important works proposed are the following:—Widening and deepening the Witham from Horsley Deep to the Grand Sluice, £197,000; new sluice and bridges at Boston, £80,000; and low-level drain to Chapel-hill, including a pumping-engine of 300-horse power, £72,000. By the adoption of his plans, Sir John Hawkshaw considers, first, that the parts of the city and suburbs of Lincoln which are now subject to floods would be greatly increased in value, and that the low-lying lands about the city would become much more valuable as building land; secondly, that the Great Northern Railway Company would be relieved from much anxiety with reference to embankments for which they are responsible; and, thirdly, that the town and haven of Boston would be benefited by the improvements in the river through and below the town by the enlargement of the Grand Sluice and by the increased scour.

This week's Number of The Colonies and India, a weekly journal full of original information concerning the different provinces of the British Empire beyond seas, has a very pleasant accompaniment. It is a lithographed sheet of clear manuscript writing, interspersed with about twenty beautiful little sketches of scenery and groups of figures, apparently pen-and-ink drawings. The great Australian River Murray, which flows inland between New South Wales and Victoria, from its birth-place in the Australian Alps to its discharge into Lake Alexandrina, in the province of South Australia, is here briefly described and prettily illustrated. We see, in four pages, its picturesque banks, with their trees and foliage, its black swans and variety of fishes, its naked savages paddling their canoes or spearing the finny prey, its settlers' boats, waggons, and huts, and the flourishing new town of Echuca, its steam-boats, ferry-punts, road and railway bridges, its frontier customs' officers, and, finally, its desolate termination, stopping short of the open sea. The editor promises to continue the series of "Original Pen-and-ink Sketches of Life and Scenery in the Colonies." We expect they will attract considerable attention.

THE DISPUTE WITH DAHOMEY: CROSSING A LAGOON ON THE WAY TO WHYDAH.

PEACE PALAVER AT WHYDAH.

THE PEACE PALAVER AT WHYDAH.

An important event occurred at Whydah on May 12, being the conclusion of a treaty of peace between Queen Victoria and Gelele, King of Dahomey. Our readers know that Mr. Turnbull, a British subject living at Whydah, was ill treated by the authorities of that town, and Sir W. Hewitt, V.C., then Commodore on the West Coast of Africa, imposed a fine of five hundred puncheons of palm oil on the King of Dahomey. That Royal personage declared that the fine should be paid in powder and shot, and then, seizing some French merchants at Whydah, vowed that their lives should be forfeited on the first hostile movement made by the British. These events occurred nearly a year ago, and since then a strict blockade of the Dahomey seaboard has been maintained by the British squadron in those waters. But King Gelele has lately shown a desire to compromise the matter. He gave effect to this wish by paying two hundred puncheons of oil, which were embarked by the mail-steamer for conveyance to England. On the morning of the same day Captain Sullivan, of the Sirius, landed from H.M.S. Cygnat, in company with Commander A. P. Alington, of H.M.S. Boxer, Commander Heron, of H.M.S. Seagull, and Mr. Gill, Assistant Paymaster.

The landing was safely effected through a very dangerous surf in a native surf-boat, manned by sixteen stalwart negroes, but two officers only landed at once, in order to lessen the risk of a capsizing. After waiting for an hour in a hut on the beach, the sounds of wild music announced the approach of the Dahomey caboceers deputed to welcome the Queen's officers, and to conduct them to Whydah, where the palaver was to be held. The caboceers soon reached the beach, surrounded by hundreds of soldiers and a crowd of natives. The chief caboceer advanced and shook hands repeatedly with each of the Englishmen; the other chiefs followed his example. The hammocks were brought for their conveyance, each borne on a long pole, the ends of which rested on the heads of two slaves. Then, with a fresh burst of music, a procession was formed, headed by the chiefs and their escort, and a start was made for Whydah, which lies about three miles north of the beach.

The track was through bush and swamp, till a wide lagoon obliged the party of English officers to transfer themselves into very long but narrow canoes, poled along by a man at each end. The native dignitaries crossed on foot some hundred yards to the eastward. Here the scene was most striking, as shown in our Illustration. The dense jungle from which they had just emerged lay behind them. In front was the stagnant water, on which the canoes rested. On their right was a straggling procession, like a pantomime in the Crystal Palace—caboceers with large umbrellas, soldiers, and officials of all sorts, and all round was the guard specially charged to protect the visitors. Beyond the lagoon was a jungle undergrowth, with stately wild cotton-trees and graceful palms. The heat was very great, the time being near noon. On the north side of the lagoon the procession was again formed, and after a short delay under a magnificent cotton-tree, the party reached Whydah. Here they were received by a great number of soldiers and with a renewed outburst of native music.

Here the Avogan, or Governor of the district, advanced, with a numerous suite, to welcome them. He was a very large but muscular man, clothed in a toga of coloured cotton, with several necklaces, with silver armlets below and above his elbow, and fetish ornaments hung about his person. His suite were variously attired, but most of them were armed. Nothing could exceed the politeness of the Avogan and his leading men, who conducted his visitors to the palaver hut and motioned them to chairs placed round a table. At the end of this table the Avogan seated himself on his huge stool, and the conference began by Captain Sullivan reading the treaty, clause by clause, to a native interpreter, who had received an English education at one of the British mission stations on the coast. Meanwhile a body of soldiers kept the ground. Behind them a confused multitude of natives made all the noise they could by their voices, aided by tom-toms, horns, fifes, and rattles.

The treaty having been agreed to by the Avogan, more hand-shaking ensued. Then water was offered, to "cool their hearts;" after which champagne, beer, and other liquors of a contrary effect were given to the visitors, with a present of bullocks, fowls, and yams. The crowd were then informed that peace and friendship now existed between Queen Victoria and King Gelele. A ring was formed, and wilder music than ever began. The old Avogan danced a kind of shuffle and led each officer out to follow his example. The dancing efforts of the Englishmen caused a scream of delight from the dense mass of people around them. This concluded the festive ceremony; after which the Avogan and his chiefs civilly led the Englishmen half a mile towards the beach and there took leave, shaking hands again and again with each of them. On Captain Sullivan's return to the squadron, the preconcerted signal of a blank gun from H.M.S. Sirius, with the hoisting of a white ensign at the fore of each ship in the squadron, proclaimed to all concerned that the blockade of the seacoast of Dahomey was raised, upon the conclusion of a treaty of peace.

We have to thank Captain Alington, of H.M.S. Boxer, for the sketches we have engraved, and for this account of the visit to Whydah.

THE WHITE-CHEEKED GIBBON.

Among the numerous additions which have been made to the Zoological Society's well-known collection in the Regent's Park during the past few weeks is a specimen of one of the Gibbons, or long-armed apes, of Southern Asia, which is of interest on several accounts. In the first place, it is an unusually fine example of one of the most peculiar and curiously modified groups of higher monkeys; and, in the second place, it belongs to a species concerning which very little has been hitherto recorded. Indeed, the only hitherto known individual of the white-cheeked Gibbon, or Hylobates Leucogenys, upon which the species was founded by Mr. Ogilby in 1840, was likewise living in the Zoological Society's collection many years ago. The present specimen, whose portrait we now give, was obtained from the forests in the vicinity of Bangkok, in Siam, by Mr. W. H. Newman, the British Vice-Consul in that city, and forwarded to this country, under the kind care of Mr. A. R. Haughton, in the steamer Agamemnon. It is a young male animal, in excellent health and condition, and appears likely to do well, though Gibbons do not usually thrive in captivity in this country.

Amid much public rejoicing, the disused burial-grounds of Old St. Pancras and of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, which join each other, were opened on Thursday week as public recreation gardens, in the presence of Lady Burdett-Coutts and other visitors. The grounds, which have some historic interest, are in the Old St. Pancras-road, and the church in the centre of one is stated to be the last in England in which the ceremonies of the Romish Church were performed before the Reformation.

MR. GLADSTONE AT THE CAXTON MEMORIAL EXHIBITION, SOUTH KENSINGTON, ON SATURDAY LAST.

THE GRANVILLE NEW MARINA, ST. LAWRENCE-ON-SEA, RAMSGATE.

THE CAXTON MEMORIAL EXHIBITION.

The exhibition at South Kensington of various loan collections of things connected with the history and modern practice of the art of printing and of several other arts which go hand-in-hand with it was opened on Saturday last. We spoke last week of the four-hundredth anniversary of William Caxton's publication of the first book ever printed in England, and we gave some account of his life and of his work as editor or translator, printer, and trade publisher of many English books. Some illustrations of this very interesting subject were also given in our last Number. The quatercentenary celebration has been most properly turned to the pecuniary benefit of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation, which has its jubilee or fiftieth anniversary in the present year. The Caxton Memorial Celebration was managed by a Committee, of which Sir Charles Reed is chairman, and of which Messrs. Spottiswoode, Clowes, Ooe, Rivington, and others are active members. The exhibition now lies open in the western International Exhibition Galleries, on the Queen's-road side of the Horticultural Society's Gardens at South Kensington. It comprises rare old books from the libraries of her Majesty the Queen, the Duke of Devonshire, Earl Spencer, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Earl of Jersey, Mr. Tyssen Amhurst, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and those of some of the Colleges, the University of Ghent, and that of Göttingen. There are also portraits, engravings, and personal relics of eminent men, printing presses and machines of different ages, models of machinery, and specimens of paper and type. Copies of nearly all Caxton's works are exhibited, including the "Recuyell of the Historyes of Troye," printed at Bruges, a copy which belonged to Queen Elizabeth, wife of Edward IV.; "The Game and Playe of the Chesse;" and the first book he printed in England—namely, "The Dictes and Sayings of Philosophers," translated from the French by Lord Rivers. The German inventors of printing, however, more than twenty years before Caxton's use of the art, is represented by a worthy example, the Guttenberg or Mazarin Bible printed on vellum, which was lent by Earl Spencer; the Mentz Psalter, printed by Fust and Schoeffer, was lent by the Queen. There is a large collection of block-printed books and other typographical curiosities more or less deserving of inspection.

The opening ceremony was brief and simple. The leading part was borne by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. He was met by Sir Charles Reed, chairman of the committee; Mr. W. Blades, the biographer of Caxton; and the other gentlemen we have named, with the Archbishop of York. A large assembly of ladies and gentlemen filled the rooms assigned for this ceremony, as well as the adjacent galleries. After a special dedicatory prayer offered by the Archbishop, Sir Charles Reed read a short statement of the occasion and the objects of the Exhibition. Mr. Hodson, secretary to the Printers' Pension Corporation, handed to Mr. Gladstone a copy of the Exhibition Catalogue. The right hon. gentleman then declared the Exhibition to be opened. This formal declaration was immediately hailed by a flourish of trumpets from the band of the Royal Horse Guards Blue. Mr. Gladstone was conducted through the exhibition, which he examined with attentive interest. Our illustration shows him looking at the working of an old press. There was a luncheon provided in the Conservatory of the Horticultural Society's Gardens. The chair was occupied by Mr. Gladstone, at whose right hand sat his Majesty the Emperor of Brazil, but the Emperor left the table before the toasts were proposed. His Majesty's health was, of course, duly honoured next to that of our Queen and Royal family. In his principal speech, giving the memory of William Caxton for the chief toast, Mr. Gladstone commented upon the invention of printing, with his usual copiousness of thought and knowledge, and expressed his admiration of the results now attained. The other speakers were the Bishop of Bath and Wells; Dr. Joseph Parker; Mr. Hall, of the Oxford University Press; M. Chaix, of Paris; Herr Fröbel, of Stuttgart; Sir C. Reed, and Mr. G. Spottiswoode. Subscriptions and donations to the Printers' Pension Corporation fund were announced, amounting to £2000, besides which there will be the receipts from the Exhibition.

THE GRANVILLE MARINA, RAMSGATE.

St. Lawrence-on-Sea, the new and beautiful suburb of Ramsgate, has obtained a great improvement and accommodation. Hitherto there has been no convenient thoroughfare directly connecting the East Cliff with the beach and sands, while the only approach from the town itself to the shore has been by the steep, narrow, and tortuous streets from the West Cliff to the harbour, and to the station of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. The town was thus cut in two, and the difficulties of access to and from the East Cliff naturally prevented any great extension of St. Lawrence-on-Sea in that direction. When, however, the magnificent piles of buildings erected on the Coutts estate had been completed, the necessity for a wide thoroughfare leading by an easy incline from the cliff to the shore, became more apparent. A scheme for this useful improvement was devised, and elaborate plans were prepared. The works, once begun, were carried on with great energy; and now the Granville Marina has been constructed, which will prove, it is hoped, a valuable boon to the residents and visitors.

This handsome and commodious promenade, which was opened to the public on Thursday last, has its starting-point adjacent to the station of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. Extending first eastward by an easy slope, it turns a broad curve, and then winds upward and westward until it terminates on the brink of the East Cliff, in front of the new Victoria Gardens. From the railway station, for a distance of more than 600 yards, there has been carried eastward a massive sea wall, constructed of huge blocks of concrete laid at angles sloping to the sea. The interstices between the blocks are filled in and the whole sea wall is faced with the strongest Portland cement. This runs along the entire length of the Marina, and between the sea wall and the overhanging cliff lies the Marina itself. The upper portion of the Marina extends by an easy gradient from the railway station eastward, and then, passing by the structure known as the "Etablissement," ascends by a steeper slope to the summit of the cliff. The lower portion, or Marina proper, is lined with shops and dwellings, excavated in the chalk of the cliff to a depth of from 25 ft. to 30 ft. The Granville Marina fronts, in the "old English" style of architecture, are constructed of massive beams of timber, filled in with brick; the roofs are faced with red slanting tiles with ornamental edgings, the gables alternately surmounted by terra-cotta finials, and models of sun-flowers, brightly gilt. The shop-fronts have a picturesque chalet-like appearance, and handsome fittings of stained and varnished woodwork and glass embellish the interior. At the back of each shop a staircase leads to the upper storey, which is arranged as a miniature residence, containing sitting-room, bed-room, and pantry; the sitting-room opens into a balcony, which may be adorned with ferns, shrubs, and flowering plants. In these shops will be installed all the elegant industries which may be expected to flourish in a fashionable seaside resort for health and recreation. At the end of the Marina nearest the station the increased height of the cliff part has enabled the architect to add to each building an upper storey in the form of an arch, like a verandah or alcove, commanding a fine view of the sea. The "Etablissement" stands at the turning-point of the curve of the Marina, the carriage-road and footpath sweeping behind it and up to the top of the cliff. It is a capacious, lofty, and handsome edifice of red brick with white stone carvings. The entrance, facing eastward, has a noble façade of plate glass; the doorways are flanked by massive angle piers of red brick, each surmounted by a heraldic lion carved in stone and supporting a gilt vane. Above the entrance are three lofty windows filled with an allegorical glass picture of Music and the sister Arts; above, in the arch formed by the skylight and upper roof, are emblazoned the Granville arms. The hall is 50 ft. wide and more than 100 ft. long. Brick piers, terminating in stone corbels, support the flying iron girders which carry the roof; between these are recesses fitted as an aquarium and as a miniature winter garden, filled with rare ferns and exotics. Above is a range of side windows filled with tinted glass, in which are heraldic devices of glowing colours. The floor is laid in stained wood; the roof is supported by five semicircular iron girders, each of 50 ft. span; but at the eastern extremity, which is octagonally shaped, the flying girders converge in the arched dome surmounting the octagon. Upon this is laid an arched roof of polished pine, in which, throughout the length of the hall, is an ornamental skylight of tinted glass. The girders are painted in a cool neutral tint, decorated with Gothic ornaments; the woodwork is stencilled with mediæval patterns.

From the "Etablissement" an easily sloping road runs down to the beach. The surface of the chalk is supported by solid concrete blocks let into the cliff's face; the summit is protected by a strong wooden balustrade, most effectively decorated. Thus by a series of gradual ascents the visitor comes up from the beach and the sands of Ramsgate, to the edge of the lofty cliff; he there finds himself in the beautiful Victoria Gardens, directly in front of the Granville Hotel. But there are tunnelled subways leading from the Marina to the beach. The opening of one subway is between the Photographic Studio and the commencement of the range of shops, whence a stone staircase ascends to the private gardens of the hotel. Midway in this staircase a branch tunnel opens on the upper portion of the Marina.

We have only to add that this important property belongs to Mr. Edmund F. Davis, of St. Peter's, Thanet, and that the plans were prepared and the work was carried out under the personal direction of the appointed architect Mr. John Thomas Wimperis, of Sackville-street, London; the contractors being Messrs. Paramor and Son, of Margate, who have executed their great undertaking in the short period of three months.

SISTOVA AND NICOPOLIS.

Our small maps, or plans, of the situation of two of the Turkish towns on the right bank of the Danube, Nicopolis and Sistova, which have just fallen into the hands of the Russians, will be found useful to explain the detailed accounts, not yet received, of the crossing of the Danube at those points by the main army of the Grand Duke Nicholas, at the centre and right-hand positions of its line, extended along that river. Sistova, with Simnitza on the opposite Roumanian bank, is a town of Bulgaria, forty or fifty miles above the great Turkish fortress of Rustchuk. It stands upon the road leading direct to Tirnova, the ancient capital of Bulgaria, where a provisional Government is now established, under Russian protection. The crossing of the river on Wednesday week is said to have been effected by rafts and boats, in both arms of the river flowing around the little islet of Vardin, below Sistova. Nicopolis, which is twenty or thirty miles higher up the Danube, stands a little below the Roumanian village of Turnu-Magurele, on the opposite shore, near the confluence of the Olta with the great river. We have engraved some of our Special Artist's Sketches from Nicopolis.

THE COLORADO BEETLE.

This notorious pest of North American agriculture has lately appeared in Rhenish Prussia. It is to be vigilantly guarded against in the British Islands. Our illustration of the noxious insect may thus prove serviceable. The following remarks occur in a memorandum by the Canadian Minister of Agriculture, upon a despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, on the subject of the Colorado Beetle.

"The occasion of considering measures for the prevention of the introduction of the Colorado potato-beetle into other countries from Canada has not yet presented itself. The information from the German authorities, conveyed to her Majesty's Minister at Berlin, on the capture of the insect on board ships and at Bremen, as well as other information relative to its introduction into Sweden, shows that the beetles have come from the United States, having been shipped at ports the neighbourhood of which was invaded by them. But the document furnished to her Majesty's Minister at Berlin contains the following remark:—"It may be considered an almost insoluble problem, in regard to Transatlantic ships' traffic, to prevent by more extensive supervision the introduction of these beetles into Europe." The difficulty thus foreseen by the German authorities cannot but be self-evident when the habits and modes of progression of the insect are examined. For not only does it move by flying, and by navigating, so to speak, smooth water, but it also travels on common vehicles, railway carriages and platforms, and on decks of vessels, especially during the months of August and September. In localities fully invaded the beetles may be seen creeping on side walks, bridges, and wharves, crawling up buildings, occupying fences, lodging themselves in every crevice, penetrating houses and dwellings, ascending and occupying vehicles of all sorts, finding their way into boats and vessels, placing themselves on any and every article, and being found alive after a long sojourn in situations where there would seem to exist no chance for them to find any subsistence.

"Such a short but correct exposure of the habits of the beetle, as connected with the possibility of its penetrating almost anywhere, and by almost any means of transport, renders indeed insoluble the problem of absolutely preventing its inroad into new fields of devastation, no matter how remote, or by what obstacles they may be separated from the regions already invaded. It may be remarked in this respect that potatoes and their covering are neither more nor less apt to harbour the insect than anything else.

"But if the absolute repelling of the invader is unfortunately beyond reach, the extent of the disaster is fortunately in a very great measure under control, involving, of course, care and expense. The remedies which necessity has taught on this side of the Atlantic are such as to require for their application the joint efforts of the community at large, kept alive to its interests and duties by the authorities, and by men of devotedness to the common welfare. These remedies are—1st, Searching for and crushing every potato-beetle wherever found; 2nd, frequent visits to the potato-fields, and searching for the eggs deposited on the under side of the leaves of the potato vine; and, 3rd, watching for the presence of the larvæ on the buds and on the leaves of the plant, in order to destroy them by means of Paris green, the only substance yet discovered to be effectually operative on a large scale for the destruction of the insect in its larva state. By these means, and by these means only, the invaded American States and the western part of Canada have been able to secure potato crops in a measure commensurate with the care and energy bestowed, and by similar means only can the invasion be retarded and lessened in its effects."

The Cologne Gazette states that from careful observations and inquiries made since the burning of a potato-field in the neighbourhood of Cologne it is evident that the object of that destructive process has been completely attained. There is no further trace visible either of Colorado beetles or of larvæ, either above the soil or in the same. There is reason to believe that not one beetle has escaped. The Government have given strict directions to all who may find beetles, larvæ, or parts of the same, to give them up without delay to the authorities. The Swedish Government has, in consequence of its appearance, prohibited the importation of potatoes from Western Germany.

MUSIC.

THE TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL.

The eighth of these celebrations at the Crystal Palace—the sixth held triennially—terminated yesterday (Friday) week. As the previous performances and the preliminary grand public rehearsal have already been noticed by us, there remains but to speak of the closing day, when "Israel in Egypt" was given, according to previous usage here. No choice of a climax could be better adapted for the special manifestation of the enormous choral force gathered at these festivals. No other oratorio of Handel's contains nearly so many choruses as "Israel in Egypt," and none offer instances of any that are more sublime than most of these. Unlike his other oratorios, the solo pieces in "Israel" are but few, the choruses, double and single, occurring frequently in continuous groups. This preponderance was not to the taste of the public of Handel's day, and the oratorio was a comparative failure. It was reserved for our own time to render justice to this magnificent work; and to the Sacred Harmonic Society belongs the honour of rescuing it from comparative oblivion and presenting it in its native grandeur, displaying Handel in his highest capabilities to an extent not approached, in quantity, in any one of his other works.

We have already eulogised the chorus-singing of this year's festival—the best that has been heard at any of these celebrations. Again, on the closing day, it was remarkable for grand volume of tone and general steadiness of execution. The fine choruses of the first part of the oratorio, expressing the lamentations of the Israelites and the plagues inflicted on the Egyptians, were finely given—the "Hailstone" chorus (encored), the wondrous choral recitative "He sent a thick darkness," and "He rebuked the Red Sea," with its two following movements, having produced a marked impression. In the second part, illustrating the exodus, the gigantic choir was heard to equal advantage.

The vocal solos in "Israel in Egypt" are not only few in number, but are dwarfed in effect by the preponderance of the sublime choral writing. Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Edith Wynne gave the duet, "The Lord is my strength," the former lady having declaimed the solo "Sing ye to the Lord," which introduces the final chorus, "The horse and his rider," and the latter having sung the air, "Thou didst blow." Madame Patey sang, with her usual effect, in the air, "Their land brought forth," and was associated with Mr. E. Lloyd in the duet, "Thou, in Thy mercy"—this gentleman having been especially successful in his delivery of the difficult air, "The enemy said," which was encored. The very telling duet for basses, "The Lord is a man of war," was finely given by Mr. Santley and Herr Henschel.

Mr. Willing's co-operation at the great organ was again a serviceable aid to the performances. The oratorio was followed by the National Anthem, rendered by band and chorus, as at the public rehearsal and at Monday's opening performance.

As at the preceding festivals, the energy and experienced skill of Sir Michael Costa, the conductor, have been powerful influences on the efficiency of the performances, the preparations for which were made by the Sacred Harmonic Society with that admirable foresight and organisation that have been displayed at all these Crystal Palace celebrations.

The business details, too, including the important arrangements for the comfort and safety of the enormous crowds assembled, have been excellently carried out by the secretary and general manager of the Crystal Palace, Major S. Flood Page, and the deputy secretary, Mr. W. Gardiner.

The following table shows the numbers attending on each day:—

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"Santa Chiara" was brought out here on Saturday. The opera is the composition of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, brother of the late Prince Consort; both having made music their study from early youth. The composer of the work now referred to has produced some cantatas and several operas, one of which, "Casilda," was brought out at her Majesty's Theatre in 1852, with but little success.

The libretto of "Santa Chiara" is founded on a Russian story. Two French officers, Victor St. Auban and Alphonse de la Borde, in the service of the Czar, meet at Moscow, Victor having been promoted to a colonelcy and sent by the Czar to congratulate the Czarowitz on her onomastic day. St. Auban recognises in the Princess a lady who, having with her friend, Bertha, lost her way in the Hartz Mountains, in Germany, had been protected, and then secretly loved, by him without being aware of her station. The lady, a Princess of the house of Brunswick, afterwards united to the Czarowitz, endures great indignities from her unworthy husband. She refuses to admit at court a favourite of her husband, and he, in revenge, orders Aurelius, the Court Physician, to administer poison to her. Aurelius, however, who owes to the Princess's intercession the life of his son, substitutes a narcotic for the poison; she is thought to be dead, and funeral rites are performed. The hapless lady, restored to life and neglected by her father, repairs to Italy for safety, where, unknown, she is revered by the people, under the name of Santa Chiara. Meanwhile the Czarowitz, who, impatient to ascend the throne, had conspired against his father's life, is detected and sentenced to death. He escapes from Russia, and, by chance, goes to the same land where his intended victim is dwelling. St. Auban and Alphonse pursue him, with the Czar's orders to arrest the rebel son and bring him to justice. Overtaken and finding himself lost, the Czarowitz meets death by his own hand to escape the doom that awaits him. The story is neither very striking nor original; nor is the music. In the first act there is some tuneful writing, vocal in character, although devoid of individual power or dramatic expression; the opening portion of the third act, including some lively dance music, also standing in somewhat agreeable contrast to the dreary heaviness of the whole of the second act, which is oppressive alike in its stage as in its musical surroundings. This division of the opera should be largely retrenched.

Mdlle. D'Angeri gave all possible effect to the part of Carlotta, especially good having been her delivery of the passages in the scene in which she drinks the potion, and the rhapsody which follows its effect before producing apparent death. The aria in the third act, too, in which Carlotta rejoices in her restoration to life, was extremely well sung, both as to the expression given to the opening "Moderato" movement, and in the florid execution of the final "Più Allegro." Mdlle. Smeroschi, as Berta, sang well in the duet with Carlotta in the first act, and particularly in Berta's cavatina in the second act, for which the singer gained much applause. The music of Victor was artistically rendered by M. Capoul, who was particularly successful in the martial duet with Alfonso (in which he was well seconded by Signor Capponi), in his rather pretty romance which follows for Victor, in his aria sung in the supposed chamber of death, his duet with the resuscitated Carlotta, and in the concluding declamatory passages for Victor.

The music for Alexis, which is chiefly incidental, was impressively given by Signor Cotogni, his only important prominent opportunity, the scena in the last act, having been very well declaimed. Other characters—Herbert, Aurelio, and l'Archimandrita—were efficiently filled respectively by Signori Raguer, Sabater, and Scolara.

There is some good ballet action, including "La Napolitaine," cleverly danced by Mdlles. Girod and H. Reuters. Messrs. Dayes and Caney have supplied some picturesque scenery, and everything has been done for the stage effect of the opera. "Santa Chiara" was repeated on Tuesday.

"La Traviata" was given for the first time this season on Thursday week, with Madame Adelina Patti as Violetta, the merits of which performance have been more than once commented on by us, and were splendidly evidenced on this occasion. Signor Nicolini sang with much effect as Alfredo, and Signor Graziani was the elder Germont, as often before.

"Last performances" are now being plentifully announced, the end of the season being fixed for July 21. Gounod's "Romeo e Giulietta" was given on Wednesday for the first and only time this season.

"Le Vispe Comare di Windsor" (an Italian adaptation of Nicolai's "Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor") is to be brought out this day (Saturday) week.

The last Floral Hall concert of the season takes place to-day (Saturday), when Madame Adelina Patti and other eminent members of the Royal Italian Opera Company are to contribute to a varied programme.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Mdlle. Gerster has fully confirmed by repetition the great success obtained by her performance as Amina in "La Sonnambula" on the occasion of her recent début here, as noticed last week. On Tuesday this excellent artist appeared as the heroine in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and completely sustained the high position she had already gained. The purity and extensive upper range of her voice, her refined style and brilliant execution, were again admirably displayed. The delivery of Lucia's opening cavatina, "Regnava nel silenzio," called forth enthusiastic applause; which was even exceeded by the demonstrations that followed the scena of delirium, a splendid display of vocal art. The reception of the singer was of the most favourable kind throughout the opera; several recalls having testified to the effect produced on the audience. Signor Fancelli, as Edgardo, sang very artistically; and the cast was efficiently completed by Signor Rota as Enrico, Signor Rinaldini as Arturo, Signor Brocolini as Raimondo, &c.

"Lohengrin" was to be given on Thursday—for the first time in this theatre—with Signor Fancelli's first performance of the title character, the cast including the Elsa of Madame Christine Nilsson, as in the representations of the opera during Mr. Mapleson's occupancy of Drury-lane Theatre.

A grand performance is to be given at the Crystal Palace on July 21 for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson—the programme comprising an afternoon concert and an opera in the evening—the artists of Her Majesty's Theatre being announced to appear on the occasion.

The eighth matinee of the Musical Union—the last of the season—took place on Tuesday afternoon, with a very strong programme, including Beethoven's septet for string and wind instruments, and Hummel's pianoforte septet, besides solo pieces for piano and for violin. Herr Leopold Auer was the leading and solo violinist, and M. Joseph Wieniawski the pianist.

Mr. Sims Reeves's benefit concert—which took place at the Royal Albert Hall on Wednesday evening—is noticed in another part of the Paper.

That accomplished pianist Madame Kate Roberts gave a recital at the Harley-street Rooms on Wednesday afternoon, her programme having consisted of a sterling selection of solo and concerted pieces.

Among the chief concerts held this week are Carlos Florentine's, at St. James's Hall, on Monday evening, with an excellent programme; Mr. Oberthur's, on Thursday morning, at Willis's Rooms; and a matinee musicale, to be given this (Saturday) afternoon at Willis's Rooms, by the skilful lady violinist Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant.

Operas in English are still being given at the Alexandra Palace, under the direction of Mr. George Perren. For Thursday "La Sonnambula" was announced, with Madame Rose Hersee as Amina and Mr. Perren as Elvino.

Professor Macfarren has awarded the first prize in the senior examination in musical composition at the Tonic Sol-Fa College to Mr. H. Coward, of Sheffield; and the first prize in the junior examination to Mr. G. C. Clark, of Mow Cop, Staffordshire.

An address was delivered last Saturday afternoon by Lady Jenkinson to the pupils and professors of the Royal Academy of Music. Her Ladyship gave a sketch of the life and genius of Thalberg, to whose memory she is desirous of founding a scholarship in the academy worth £20 a year, the interest of a sum of £1000, half of which Lady Jenkinson has already raised.

THEATRES.

Room has at length been found for a new drama on the London stage. The Globe, now under the direction of Mr. Righton, has accepted the verdict of the Liverpool public and press, and placed the latest production of Mr. Paul Meritt on its boards—a piece in three acts, entitled "Stolen Kisses." The work is carefully written and skilfully put together, though rather fantastical in story and very sentimental in spirit. The materials of the edifice are old enough. There are the same bricks and the same mortar as have gone to the erection of many a former building. They are of the ordinary type, and no attempt is made to make them look like marble, or even stone; the outcome, indeed, is thoroughly domestic in character, and rather commonplace in the facts and their arrangement. This, too, on principle; for the final effect is dependent on the everyday quality of the composition and its elements. The hero is "an ex-pantomimist," one Tom Spirit (Mr. A. Garner), whose twin brother, having assumed the name of Walter Temple (Mr. Ryder), has become a wealthy broker, while he, with his daughter, has sunk into extreme poverty. The latter, however, Cherry Spirit (Miss Emma Ritta), has attracted the attention, under another name, of the Hon. Felix Freemantle (E. Leathe), son of Viscount Tringmar (Mr. H. H. Vincent), who in the course of the story finds weighty reasons to object to their marriage, and induces her father to accede to their validity. Ultimately the decision is understood to rest with Walter Temple, a stern, iron-cast man, who cherishes a resentment against his twin brother, who had formerly married the woman already affianced to himself. This bitter injury he will neither forgive nor forget. Until Tom can restore to him the love whereof he has deprived him Walter is resolved to remain implacable. Such a miracle seems incredible, but proves to be possible. The dying wife had left in poor Tom's charge a letter in which she confesses her fault, pleads for pardon, and assures the discarded Walter that, notwithstanding appearances to the contrary, she had never ceased to love her first admirer. Walter is satisfied, and the consent of both parents is given to Cherry's marriage with Freemantle. But there is a second lady in the case; Jenny Temple (Miss Lydia Foote), who is destined for a medical student, Fred. Gay (Mr. B. D'Arley), to whose union, under the altered circumstances, the rich broker, Temple, no longer offers any opposition. These incidents are well brought out, and the characters are artfully contrasted. Tom is distinguished from the rest by the poetical style of his conversation. He discourses in metaphor, and illustrates his meaning by fable, besides in all things affecting the heroic and magnanimous. Mr. A. Garner had, therefore, an easy task with the audience, evidently enjoying the frequent applause which he received. Miss Lydia Foote was charming as Temple's vivacious heiress, and Miss Emma Ritta pleasing as the ingenious acrobat's daughter. To Mr. Ryder belongs a still higher commendation. Walter Temple, the stern, irascible, and resentful man, ultimately converted to the humane and forgiving brother, had been well studied by Mr. Ryder, and was in both phases of the part very artistically interpreted. Altogether, Mr. Paul Meritt's new drama deserves a distinguished success.

Miss Pateman supported the character of Lady Audley on Monday at the Olympic, playing with great power and intelligence, but with some degree of awkwardness in the gestures and attitudes assumed. Practice will give Miss Pateman facility, and facility grace, to positions in which she now finds considerable difficulty.

Next Monday will be the 800th night of the production of Mr. H. J. Byron's comedy, "Our Boys."

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed bring a prosperous season to a close next Saturday, the 14th inst., and, after a short tour in the southern provinces, will reopen the St. George's Hall again on Oct. 1. The season has been marked by a judicious production of pieces by the most popular authors. An extra night will be given on Monday, July 16, for the benefit of Mr. John Williams, who has for many years been connected with the entertainment.

THE LATE MISS MARY CARPENTER.

The death of this benevolent lady, well known as the active conductor of reformatory schools at Bristol, and more lately as the zealous, but liberal and impartial, advocate of a sound and high education for women in India, has been mentioned in our Journal. She was the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Lant Carpenter, Unitarian minister and schoolmaster at Bristol, and her brother is Dr. W. B. Carpenter, C.B., the eminent physiologist, Registrar of the University of London. Miss Carpenter, during many years, was mistress of an excellent school for young ladies at Bristol. Upon her retirement from that occupation she devoted herself wholly to philanthropic labours. The moral reformation and industrial training of youthful criminals, or those children of a vagrant and disorderly class who were apt to grow up into criminals, first engaged her attention. She spent much of her private income, as well as her time and strength, in carrying on the institutions which she founded and constantly superintended for this truly Christian purpose. Several books and tracts upon the subject, and essays contributed to the discussions of the Social Science Association, have established her authority in this department of public affairs. Her particular concern in the social and moral welfare of the Hindoos was justified by the circumstances of her early life, when Rajah Rammohun Roy, a Bengalee Brahmin of enlightened religious views, came to England and dwelt in this country as her father's guest. Miss Carpenter never ceased, amidst her variety of other work, to cherish the hope of doing some good in India. She went there in the winter months of 1866, again towards the end of 1868, and a third time in the following winter season, visiting Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, and the principal inland cities or seats of Government, where she met with a respectful and even deferential reception, both from native and British authorities. Many of the best class of Hindoos and other people have been induced to allow their girls to be taught as well as their boys. In this and in other projects of usefulness Miss Carpenter achieved considerable success.

THE LATE VISCOUNT CANTERBURY.

We lately announced the death of the Right Hon. John Henry Thomas Manners Sutton, third Viscount Canterbury. He was second son of the first Viscount Canterbury, and was born in 1814, and educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He sat in the House of Commons for the borough of Cambridge till 1847. He was Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department during the greater part of this time. He was Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick from 1854 till 1861; Governor of Trinidad, 1864-6; and Governor of Victoria, 1866-72. He succeeded his brother in 1869. In 1838 he married Georgiana, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Tompson, of Withingham Hall, Norfolk, and he leaves, with other issue, a son, Henry Charles, who succeeds him as fourth Viscount. The first Lord Canterbury, who was the eldest son of Charles Manners Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury, served as Speaker of the House of Commons from 1817 till his elevation to the Peerage, in 1835.

The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Barraud and Jerrard, of Gloucester-place.

It is proposed to erect a monument in Edinburgh in memory of Mr. Russel, late editor of the Scotsman, and about £1000 has been already promised towards the object.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I have been out of town since I last had the honour, in the month of November, 1876, of addressing my highly-esteemed constituency in this column; and although I am not so venturesome as to think that they have missed me, I can assure my constituency that I have missed them, very much indeed. I have been to the seaside—a comprehensive term, embracing as it does the shores of the Baltic and the Gulf of Finland, the coast of the Black Sea and the banks of the Bosphorus and the Golden Horn, to say nothing of the Grecian Archipelago, the Mediterranean, the Gulf of Lyons, and the East Cliff at Ramsgate, to which last picturesque seaside resort I repaired a few days since for the purpose of inspecting the new Granville Marina, a public improvement which must prove, I apprehend, of most beneficial convenience both to the residents of and the visitors to Ramsgate, supplying as it does a direct and easy communication between the western portion of the town and St. Lawrence-on-Sea, which hitherto could only be reached by a series of narrow, tortuous, and precipitous streets. The new Granville Marina will have been "inaugurated" by Lord Sydney, as Lord Lieutenant of the county of Kent, by the time these lines go to press.

It is, to some extent, to be regretted that the Caxton "Celebration" and the unprecedentedly interesting exhibition of "Caxtoniana" at South Kensington should have taken place so very late in the season. The end of June may, from the fashionable point of view, be considered as the beginning of the end of everything; and the chief matter which metropolitan worldlings think about during the heats of July is whether they shall bend their steps so soon as August has set in. The Royal Academy of Arts, wise in their generation, have always chosen the first Monday in May as the opening day of their annual exhibition; and May is emphatically the month most appropriate for "celebrations" of every kind. Chaucer seems to be inculcating this truth when he sagely observes that May wol have no slogardie a night.

The season priketh every gentil herte
And maketh him out of his slepe to sterne
And sayth, "Arise and do thin Observance."

Although it may have come at least six weeks too late to receive a proper meed of appreciation, no "slogardie" has been shown in doing "Observance" to the memory of the first English printer; and I sincerely hope that the funds of that excellent charity the Printers' Pension, Almshouses, and Orphan Asylum Corporation will be substantially benefited by the display of Caxtonian relics inaugurated by Mr. Gladstone at South Kensington on Saturday last. Meanwhile, one may expect a revival of the controversy among topographic antiquaries as to the precise site of Caxton's house in the Almonry—or, as the old printer spells it, the "Almonesrye"—Westminster. Where was the "reed pale," curiously corrupted, even in our own time, into "red pole," whither the clergy and laity were invited to come if they wanted any "Pyres of Commemorations of Salisburie use, good chepe"? Bagford says that Caxton's house, a brick one, was known by the sign of the "King's Head." It tumbled down in November, 1815, thus obligingly saving the builders' contractors who were clearing the site for the new Victoria-street the trouble of pulling it down. It is said that some wooden types were discovered in carting away the rubbish from the spot where now stands the imposing caryatided entrance to the Westminster Palace Hotel.

Paris is rejoicing over the construction of a new street, the "Rue des Tuileries," which has been cut right through the late private gardens of Napoleon III., in front of the charred ruins of the palace which the crazy Communists burnt down, thus once more verifying the weird legend enshrined in Béranger's "Petit Homme Rouge." The Rue des Tuileries was opened for traffic last Friday; and the new thoroughfare will, it is thought, prove of immense convenience to the pedestrian population of Paris, who, like the innumerable multitudes that traversed Vathek's "Hall of Eblis," are perpetually passing from the right to the left bank of the Seine, and vice versa. It is different with us Londoners. People grow old in Middlesex without knowing anything about what is going on on the Surrey side of the Thames; and how many thousands of West-Enders are there, I should like to know, who have never set foot in Wapping? I have trudged about the metropolis a good deal in my time; and the late Mr. Forster was good enough to say, in his "Life of Dickens," that I was, after a sort, an authority on the streets of London; yet I frankly confess that I do not know my way to Homerton, and that I have by no means a definite idea as to where Stepney is situated.

That famous comedienne Madame Doche is visiting England, unprofessionally, for a few days; and recently, in the salon of a celebrated lady-novelist, I listened with ravished ears to the recital by the renowned "Margarite Gauthier" of the "Dames aux Camélias" of an exquisitely pathetic poem by François Coppée—an imaginary episode of the Franco-German war. The story lies in a nutshell. Roger, a young French nobleman, when the invasion is at its height, joins the army as a private soldier; his lady love, Irene, gives him at parting a locket as a gage d'amour. Months pass; the tide of invasion rolls towards the house where Irene and her parents live. There is a skirmish close to their very garden; the Germans are repulsed; and a young Bavarian officer, badly wounded, is taken prisoner and is brought into the house. He is most tenderly nursed by Irene, the doctor telling her that on her watching over the patient throughout the night, and administering to him at intervals a certain potion, his life depends. But the patient is restless; he has something on his mind; and at length he unburies himself to Irene, telling her how in an ambush he had treacherously stabbed in the back a French sentinel. The dying man forgave his foe, and, handing him a locket, entreated him to take the bauble to —, but ere he could name the intended recipient he expired. The wounded Bavarian shows the locket to Irene. She recognises it in a moment. It is Roger's. The struggle in the girl's mind as to whether she shall slay the man who has slain her lover is described with subtle power by the poet, and was rendered with wonderful force and eloquence by Madame Doche. In the end Irene's better nature prevails. She gives the wounded Bavarian his health-restoring draught, and kneels down by the bed and prays. But in the morning, when the doctor pays his visit, ses cheveux étaient blancs. Her hair has turned white.

So many tears were elicited by Madame Doche's impassioned recital that the graceful actress was fain, as an alternative, to make her audience laugh. So she gave them the delightful little story of "Jeanne" and the "Pain sec" from Victor Hugo's "L'art d'être Grand Père." Yet that delicious morsel of child-lore has the disadvantage—if disadvantage it be—of making its hearers feel quite as much inclined to weep as to laugh. The border-land dividing the humorous from the pathetic is, surely, no broader than a hair.

Another distinguished stranger have we, but only for a brief season, in our midst. Mr. Eugene Schuyler, United States Secretary of Legation, and Consul-General at Constantinople, the renowned author of "Turkestan" and of the "Report" on the Bulgarian atrocities, is here. Mr. Schuyler is probably, next to Prince Gortschakoff, the best-hated European in Turkey; and even in England there may be a good many anti-Russians to whom the writer of the "Report" will not be a persona grata. Still, the Truth is great, and will prevail. So I used to read, when I was young; although I must own that Truth does not seem to have been, in my experience, in any very great hurry to become prevalent.

G. A. S.

IRRIGATION AND WATER TRANSIT IN INDIA.

(To the Editor of the "Illustrated London News.")

LONDON, June 29, 1877.

Sir,—You were so good as to admit a letter from me once on that subject of vital—I should say mortal—importance in India, "Irrigation and Water Carriage."

The frightful famine in Madras recalls us all to it. When the Government is obliged to feed one million and a half of our fellow-subjects—when these have been perishing, in spite of us, at the rate of 930 per 1000 in the Relief Camps—when nearly half the population of villages have died in a month of "famine cholera"—when men were not put on the Relief Works till they were too far reduced by starvation to do any real work—when their bullocks were all dead, so that their very means for raising the next crop were gone—we are fain to ask, What has Irrigation done for the Madras Presidency?

This question a report just issued by the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company, dated May 8, 1877, received at the India Office June 19, answers for us, at least as to one district.

But first let us observe that there are at this time four districts which ought to have been, like the other twelve, overwhelmed by this terrible calamity, but three of which are not only entirely free from famine themselves, but are in the highest state of prosperity, having a large surplus to supply the famine districts; and the fourth, though not entirely relieved from famine, yet has a very considerable supply of grain.

What has made the difference between these three districts and those which are under the dreadful sufferings of famine? The Government irrigation works.

The three districts of Tanjore, Godavery, and Kistnah, instead of adding five millions more to starve, are pouring into the starving districts hundreds of thousands of tons of food.

Sir Arthur Cotton, the great master of the irrigation art, twenty-six years in charge of the public works in those very districts which are, in the heart of famine, supplying food, could tell us more about this.

It was the same in the Behar famine. The Sone works, while they were yet unfit to be opened, were made to water 160,000 acres, producing a crop worth £500,000 in the midst of dearth. The whole cost of the works was actually saved by a single crop, and thousands of people saved from death.

But to return to the fourth of the Madras districts referred to:—

This is Kurnool, N.W. of Madras, in the very depths of the peninsula. This is the district watered by the Madras Irrigation Company, from the Toombuddra river. The works have cost £1,600,000, and are capable of watering 400,000 acres for two crops, or at the rate of £2 per acre of crop. Then, also, the navigation would afford carriage at a nominal cost. The main canal alone, from Kurnool to Cuddapah, is 190 miles in length. The officers are to sell the water at the price of twelve shillings an acre, worth to the purchaser £2.

A missionary in the Godavery district told Sir Arthur Cotton that scores of times the people had gratefully said to him, "We never got the Godavery water on our lands till you Christians came here. Truly, the greatest Raj is the English."

In Kurnool last year, however, as indeed before, the water was refused by the people during the main cultivating season; but, when the pressure of the famine began to be felt, they forgot all their difficulties, and asked urgently for water. By this time the supply was already beginning to be deficient, so that the canal could not be kept full. Nevertheless, let us see what was done by these works. I quote from the report above mentioned:—

"The total area that has been supplied with water is 91,000 acres. In addition to the satisfactory revenue thus realised by the company, the food crops raised by the canal have contributed materially to mitigate, in the districts of Kurnool and Cuddapah, the effects of the terrible calamity of drought to which these and other districts of Southern India have been and still are exposed. The money value given in the following statement of the grain grown under the canal is £940,000, none of which could have existed except for the irrigation supplied."

The works having cost £1,600,000, two thirds of the cost have thus been saved by a single partial crop.

The report then goes on to complain of their being prevented from using the canal for navigation owing to the delays in the proceedings of Government, showing how "the value of the canal, if it had been used for boats, would have been considerable. The cartage of rice from the Gooty Railway station to Kurnool is 5d. per ton per mile, or £1 6s. per ton. But that from Cuddapah to Nundial is 7d. per ton per mile, or £2 3s. per ton for the whole distance. The rate by the canal, even at 1½d. a mile, would be 10s. (ten shillings). The want of any better outlet for canal produce has been a bar to the spread of irrigation under the canal."

Yet this canal produce might have been placed in direct communication with the market of Madras and with all the markets of the world at a nominal cost of internal carriage. The canal now extending to Cuddapah, 190 miles, ends there. The North Coast Canal from Madras extends to Nellore, 110 miles, and the interval between this and Cuddapah is 80 miles. This work has been estimated for, but still remains unexecuted. Had it been executed there would have been a perfect communication between the great irrigated deltas of the Godavery, &c., and the inland districts which are in this terrible condition.

The extension of the North Coast Canal to the Kistnah is an immense point gained. The Duke of Buckingham is cutting also the short line of canal through Madras to connect the South Coast Canal with the North Coast Canal.

Let us resume our extracts from this important Report.

"October, 1876. Throughout the month not a drop of water has been allowed to run to waste down the Pennair; that is, the whole of it has been used for irrigation. In another fortnight or so all the accessible dry land for which water is desired will have had a first flooding."

Again: "Applications for water have been very numerous, and from all sorts of places, far beyond the reach of canal water. . . . We are also much hindered by the quarrelling among the ryots themselves as to who shall first have the water."

In November, it is reported: "The most bigoted of the old ryots are now quarrelling and fighting for the water. The old prejudice is entirely broken down, and, as a Curnam expressed it, 'They (the ryots) have come to their senses about the water.' . . . The sight of the country commanded by the canal is truly refreshing. In one village above Canalla I rode through tall cholam-fields for a mile or two. There more than three square miles of land were saved from utter drought, and about 300 acres of rice were just ripening. It is very sad to compare this with the rest of the district, where utter failure has occurred, and I regret to say cholera is rapidly increasing."

How we wish that the Illustrated London News would give us two of its admirable views—first of the desert, and then of the irrigated land, often seen side by side! Misery and plenty, starvation and comfort.

Again: "All the crops are reported in good condition, both dry and wet. The former, sown under the canal, are acknowledged by the ryots themselves to be in as fine and healthy condition as any crops they have ever sown. . . . Of the thirteen Government tanks commanded by the canal, five were filled before the end of the month, and the remainder will be filled before the middle of next month."

For December, the chief engineer reports in January, 1877, "The result of my calculation is:—

"In Cuddapah district, 19,050,000 lbs. food grain.
"In Kurnool " 65,240,000 lbs. "

"Total 84,290,000 lbs.

"Enough to feed the whole district of a million inhabitants for two months, and probably the straw will be enough to maintain all the cattle not yet perished in the villages under the canal. In this calculation vegetables are not reckoned as being any substitute for food grain, whereas they do, in fact, often save grain—e.g., sweet potatoes, crinjals, pumpkins, &c."

"This grain, at present prices, is worth £700,000; and, if the value of vegetables, indigo, cotton, and straw be added, the actual value of the crop created by the canal cannot be more nearly estimated than as one million sterling. But its value in helping the district to tide over the critical month of May, and in supplying village wells with good water, can only be poorly represented by such an estimate."

"The actual saving to Government by the provision in the least accessible parts of the district of such a food supply, which would otherwise have had to be bought, is about £500,000."

"The Government are now feeding at Imperial expense a third of the population of Kurnool district. This could scarcely have happened had the ryots not sacrificed the whole of the first crop, which the canal might have matured by irrigating their fields and filling their tanks. This infatuation, fortunately, did not extend to the second crop, about a quarter of which will have been reared under the already failing water supply of the Toombuddra."

Again: "It is probable that the ryots, under the canal, will save most of their cattle, and thus be able to resume their work on the first appearance of rain."

"Elsewhere in the district it is probable that much land will be idle, as nearly all the cattle will be dead. The sale of bullocks in Kurnool has been so great that the coolies find it cheaper to buy meat than grain, a bullock selling for three rupees."

Again: "The villagers under the canal may be considered to be in a very prosperous condition, the crops being very good indeed."

In January of this year "the overseer reports that the white cholam sown in Prattacotta is magnificent. I have never seen finer fields of this dry crop than those of Banakercherla and Vempeuta. The ears were so full and the plants so thickly grown that they were touching one another."

Again: "The average yield per acre of paddy is two putties, which is above that of the preceding season. This putty has been recently sold at forty-eight rupees. The straw is almost half as valuable as the grain."

Thus the whole value of the crop is about 140 rupees, while the charge for water is six rupees, and the total cost of the works is only £3 per acre.

In February it is reported, "The wet crops, more particularly in the Cuddapah and Prodatoor Talooks, are the finest that have been reaped."

In March it is "estimated that nearly seventy million pounds of food grain have been grown under the canal in three talooks. This is sufficient to preserve one quarter of the population of the Kurnool district for six months, and to feed more than 8000 pair of bullocks. There can be no doubt that, if the water were properly and timely taken, and with the same eagerness that was displayed this season, when it was too late, the grain grown under the canal in the Kurnool district would feed the whole population (amounting to nearly a million) for twelve months, even if no crops were raised except from canal irrigation."

Again, in March:—"There is little doubt that the canal water affects the health of the people considerably. When procurable, canal water is always preferred to well water; some villagers are in the habit of going a distance of two miles for it. While in camp I was unable to find a well in any village containing water fit to drink. In one place, though greatly in need of a draught of water, I was compelled to abstain from drinking any of the water of three wells, as the taste was filthy."

Thus far our quotations.

Have these things no bearing upon the famine?

As regards canal transit, grain can be carried by water at one twentieth of the cost of carriage by railway, which, besides, cannot produce one pound of food either for man or beast.

Had the millions that this famine will cost been spent in irrigation and navigation, the whole of these provinces would have been secured for ever from famine and from ten to twenty millions added to the income of the people.

Further, had the necessary preparations been made when the famine had become certain, the link of the canal might have been cut from Nellore to Cuddapah, and the districts of Bellary, Kurnool, and Cuddapah have been put in direct communication with Madras, and with Godavery and Kistnah. Thus the famine would have been turned into a blessing; and an annual benefit derived to the country far beyond the interest of ten millions.

The extension of the Coast Canal from Nellore to the Kistnah has at last been undertaken; by the latest accounts 50,000 people were employed upon it, and it was expected to be finished next month. If this is accomplished, putting Madras in communication with those great deltas and with the out tracts of Godavery, it is quite certain that far more will be gained even from this small work than the interest of ten millions. It will complete one line of transit of 550 miles from Madras to the second barrier of the Godavery, and will connect altogether 1200 miles of navigation with that city.

Viscount Mandeville, a Conservative, has been returned for Huntingdonshire by 1468 votes, a majority of fifty-eight over Mr. Henry Fitzwilliam, a Liberal.

"Liebcs Lieder" ("Love Songs") are two settings, by Herr Wilhelm, of lines by Heinrich Heine. The music proves that the composer can wield the pen as well as the violin bow; both the vocal portions of these songs and the pianoforte accompaniments being highly musician-like and effective. The publishers are Messrs. Hodge and Essex, whose names are now widely known as the managers of the recent Wagner Festival performances at the Royal Albert Hall.

The report of the educational officer of the Society of Arts gives, inter alia, the results of the recently held examination in domestic economy. The subject was introduced for examination for the first time last year. The examiners appointed for this year were Miss E. Shaw-Lefevre for "Housekeeping and Thrift," Miss Mary Willis for "Clothing and its Materials," Dr. Ogle for "Health," and the National Training-School for "Cookery." Though the number of candidates was small, it was larger than last year. The numbers last year and this year were as follow:—Clothing, 10-16; Cookery, 10-26; Health, 8-35; Housekeeping, 9-17. In Cookery all the candidates passed (15 first and 11 second class); in Health 26 failed, and only 3 passed in the first class. In Housekeeping 8 failed, and 6 passed in the first class. In Clothing 1 failed, and 9 passed in the first class. Among the successful candidates are several young men, five of them taking first class honours in Cookery. The first prize in Cookery, with the added Council prize of ten guineas (for females), was carried off by Mary S. Mugeam, of the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institution. The questions set were of a most practical character, having reference in most cases to knowledge required for every-day use.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1877.

Close upon two millions sterling have been voted by the House of Commons this week, almost without debate, for the protection of what may be fairly described as "British interests." They do not lie, however, on the line of the Suez Canal, nor in the region of Egypt, nor along the Straits of Dardanelles or Bosphorus. They are close at home. They are purely social and moral. The foes that threaten them are ignorance, lawlessness, vice, and crime. The force to be employed against them is the Elementary Education of the entire population of England and Wales. That force may be figuratively said to have crossed the line of the Danube and to have committed itself to operations upon a large scale, which, in the long run, it is believed upon reasonable grounds, must lead to success. The conflict hitherto has been complicated by many collateral causes and controversies which, if they have not altogether ceased, have comparatively subsided into silence and inaction. We do not debate now, at least in the Legislature, sectarian hopes, or apprehensions, or theories. The question of National Education has so far advanced in its practical development as to mask them, and to proceed independently of them on its beneficent career. There are still, no doubt, skirmishes at many an outpost—much needless expenditure of means and strength. But, on the whole, the National advance in support of Education has been effective, and speculation is now rife upon questions purely connected with those administrative measures which may be best suited to secure the end in view. To what cause, or causes, this result is to be attributed there is no necessity for us to speak. It is sufficient ground of congratulation that the question has been removed to a higher plane, and that it may now be treated, not as one of Party, but as one which intimately concerns the higher interests of people of all parties.

The total amount asked by Lord Sandon, the Vice-President of the Council, on Tuesday last, as the Education vote for England and Wales for the current year, was £1,910,000, an increase of £203,774 on the estimate of last year, of which increase not less than £187,000 must be set down to annual grants. During the year just closed a thousand new public elementary schools were provided, with additional accommodation for 280,000 children. Unfortunately, these are not all in the right places, or the provision for accommodation would be equal to the demand. In some quarters there are more schools than are necessary. In others those which have been provided are "not so placed as to be most readily available for the purposes of education." This result will have to be gradually corrected. The number of children now upon the register is 2,943,774, of whom 2,412,211 were in their places on the day of the inspectors' visits. The figures, it is true, are eleven months old, and give no information as to the working of last year's Act. It would appear, however, that at the time when this account was made up 64.24 per cent of all the children of school age who belong to the class usually found in Elementary Schools had their names on the books of such schools before the Act of last year came into force. So far the progress of the movement under review can hardly fail to afford satisfaction.

Everything, however, is not coulour de rose. True, the capital invested in this grand national experiment is stated by Lord Sandon to amount to something like £19,000,000. During the past year there has been an increase of 2100 certificated Teachers, 460 Assistant Teachers, 2600 Pupil Teachers, and 32 in Training Colleges. There has also been an increase of 200,000 children on the Books, and 150,000 in average attendance. All this will tell largely upon the future. But it is, nevertheless, also true that a comparatively small portion of the whole number of children in the Elementary Schools presented themselves for examination in the highest standard. The greater number of them, we fear, have not so completely mastered reading, writing, and arithmetic as to render future intellectual progress pleasant and easy to themselves. As time goes on it may be taken for granted that this deficiency will become less and less conspicuous, and that in England as well as in Scotland the range of education will become wider as the habits which it tends to form become more prevalent.

Two problems of no inconsiderable importance await a settlement—not immediately, it is true, but at some not very distant day. They loom on the horizon; and before the present generation has passed away they will have to be dealt with. To some extent they are connected one with the other, and the decision arrived at with regard to either of them will closely influence that which will be taken in reference to the remaining one. The first of these has already been started for discussion more than once by Sir John Lubbock. It relates to the kind of education which should be given in our National Elementary Schools. What is to be included in it? What is the curriculum to be prescribed? and who is to be responsible for selecting it? To what stage of knowledge is the country bound to carry forward the process of instruction, the main expense of which it really pays? Of course, the greater the variety of subjects in the elements of which it can ground its pupils, the greater is the probability that the social and moral ends which it has in view will be promoted. But how far is such an experiment to go? How far would it be fair to the numerous class of tax-payers who receive no direct advantage from a public educational system? It is a delicate question, but, as we have intimated, one that need not now be seriously discussed. Assuredly, the time for debating it is rapidly advancing. In some measure, perhaps, it will tend to solve itself, and as education advances, many of the classes which now receive the benefit of it at but a trifling expense to themselves, but at a serious expense to those above them in the social scale, may be found willing to provide at their own cost for those higher branches of Elementary Education which the system should comprehend. Difficulties frequently vanish as we approach them. This is one of those economical difficulties which will have to be solved.

Mr. Chamberlain would solve it by making all schools free, as in the United States. There is much to be said in favour of such a system. There are not a few objections, however, arising out of the structure of society in this country, which may be urged against it, of which, perhaps, the large expense it would entail may be set down as the least. The question is mainly one of feasibility. In the United States, in Canada, and in the Australian Colonies the distinctions between class and class, the different tastes which they inspire, the habits of life which they tend to form, and the general equality of condition which they foster, prepare the inhabitants to acquiesce in a common system of education, of the benefits of which all classes may avail themselves. But that is not the case in England and Wales. The children of the nobility and gentry—shall we say of the well-to-do classes generally?—are not likely, for some time at least, to seek intellectual guidance from the same sources as those used by the artisan, the petty tradesman, and even the proletaire. As things now are, it would be vain to expect them to frequent the same schools or to sit side by side upon the same benches. Free schools, therefore, would simply mean a release of a numerous portion of the population from the pecuniary expense of educating their children, at the cost mainly of those above them. Nobody, to be sure, can foresee what changes of feeling will be introduced in the lapse of time. But to us it appears more than probable that Free Schools in this country will not be generally established, or, even if they should be, will not generally succeed.

Leaving these questions, however, as unsolved problems relating to the future of National Education, we may take leave to congratulate our fellow-countrymen upon the gratifying progress which on Tuesday last Lord Sandon was able to announce. It is clear from his summary Report that in the Elementary Education of the people of England and Wales we are making up our lee way as fast as circumstances will admit of. Some years, perhaps, will have to pass before we shall see the fruit of our labours and self-sacrifice in the temper and conduct of the population. Poorhouses and gaols are not likely to be closed just yet, nor, it may be surmised, will the number of their inmates be very sensibly diminished. But the good work has not only been commenced, it is rapidly moving on. We are all, indeed, learning from experience some lessons which needed to be taught us. Henceforth, we trust, the Educational question will take its place as one of those around which sectarian controversy has ceased to rage, and in relation to which the only spirit in which differences of opinion will be maintained will be that of good sense, mutual forbearance, and genuine patriotism.

Prince William of Hesse arrived at Windsor Castle on Thursday week on a mission from his brother, the Grand Duke of Hesse, to the Queen to announce his accession, and to bring back the insignia of the Garter worn by the late Grand Duke. A salute of twenty-one guns was fired by the Royal Artillery on her Majesty's arrival in the park. The Queen was received on the review ground by a Royal salute from the troops under Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Steele, K.C.B., commanding the Army Corps. Her Majesty then drove down the lines and inspected the troops, after which the troops marched past her Majesty. The infantry then marched past by divisions in line of columns, and the cavalry brigade trotted and cantered past the Queen, after which the troops took up their original position, and advanced in review order and saluted her Majesty. The troops then marched off the ground to their camps at Ascot-heath and Chobham-common, the Royal Artillery firing a salute as the Queen left the grounds. The Duke of Cambridge took leave of her Majesty and returned to London. The Queen drove after the review in the direction of the camps, and saw some of the regiments on the march. In the course of a sermon preached by the Bishop of Manchester at Blackburn on Sunday night, he referred to the prevailing indignation against the practices fostered by the Society of the Holy Cross. There are only three clergymen in his diocese who are members of that society, and his Lordship believes that none of them had ever seen or read the book which had excited so much just disgust. He hoped that they would perhaps see it to be their duty to sever themselves from the society. Appealing to all true and loyal Churchmen not to be cast down by reason of the conduct of a few, his Lordship reminded them that the mass of the English clergy were moderate, earnest, sober-minded people, who stood aloof from either the English Church Union, the Church Association, the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, or the Society of the Holy Cross.

THE WAR.

Since our last week's record of the progress of the Russian invasion of Turkey in Europe there has been no general action, but a series of combined strategic movements on both sides, the effective result of which is not yet developed. It was not till last Saturday that the Russians occupied Tirnova, the ancient capital of Bulgaria, with a considerable force, though precursors of their army, outriding parties of Cossacks, had already visited that place. Tirnova is forty miles south of the Danube at Sistova, and thirty miles north of the Balkans. The fighting that occurred at Biela, on the Jantra, some twenty miles south-east of Sistova, and thirty miles west of Rustchuk, was not of great importance. It served, however, to prevent the Russians at once moving eastward on the roads between Rustchuk and Shumla; and the Turks have thus gained time to change their front, which is now formed across that part of the country to the south-east of Rustchuk, having its central position at Rasgrad, and extending its left wing to Eski Juma. These places will be found in our Map of the ground at present occupied by the main armies opposed to each other in Middle Bulgaria. Towards the left-hand side of the Map, southward of Nicopolis, is the town of Plevna, which was recaptured by the Turks last Monday, but of which neither army can seek just now to make an important position. The decisive battle is likely to be fought somewhere between Tirnova or Biela and Rasgrad, unless the Turkish Commander prefers to avoid such a critical encounter, and shut himself up in the Quadrilateral formed by Shumla and Varna, on the Black Sea Coast, with the two Danubian fortresses, Rustchuk and Silistria. The Russian troops, with their immense train of artillery, and waggons, baggage, and stores, are continually passing over the Danube, from Roumania into Bulgaria, taking many days to complete this movement.

Some delay was occasioned by the storm and flood that swept away a number of their pontoons collected for the bridge at Simnitsa, drowning not a few men, horses, and oxen, and sinking twenty of their field guns. The actual first crossing of troops there, on the 27th ult., as shown in our Illustration of this week, from the sketch by our Special Artist, was chiefly effected by means of boats and rafts, from the small isle of Vardin to the Bulgarian shore, over the main channel of the river. The bridge of boats that appears in the foreground of this Illustration only crossed the narrow side channel between the isle of Vardin and the Roumanian bank, so that no complete bridging of the Danube was at that time attempted in the neighbourhood of Sistova. The subsequent leisurely construction of a bridge, for the use of the whole Russian army and its future reinforcements, is a very different affair. In like manner, at Braila and the shore near Matchin, where a bridge of boats was made and brought into use on the 21st ult., it must be remembered that the chief use of this bridge has been for the bulk of the forces, with their artillery and stores, to be taken over into the Dobrukscha, after the capture of Matchin by a small detachment of troops which crossed the river in boats from Galatz, taking the Turks by surprise. In both instances, the reader will observe, the ostentatious work of constructing a bridge served to deceive the enemy with respect to the point at which the sudden assault was to be made; and the opposite bank was gained by a coup de main, with the simplest means, before the Turks could take their eyes off the elaborate preparations they saw made for laying an artificial road over two or three miles of river and flooded marshy plain. Now that the Russians have secured their possession of both shores or banks of the Danube, and of the adjacent country, except in the vicinity of the principal Turkish fortresses, they will probably make several new bridges, and roads or even railways leading to them, for the accommodation of military traffic in a war that may be prolonged till next year.

The 12th and 13th corps of the Russian army have been constituted the army of Rustchuk, destined for the siege of that fortress, with the Cesarewitch as Commander-in-Chief. General Camcosky is chief of staff to the Cesarewitch; and the Grand Duke Vladimir, brother of the Cesarewitch, succeeds to the command of the 12th corps, now heading the advance on Rustchuk. Its cavalry division is already forward in the vicinity of the fortress, driving in the outlying Turks.

It is expected that the Russian army will now cross the Danube above Widdin and Kalafat, entering on Servian territory. The Russian head-quarters are to be transferred to Batak, fifteen miles south of Sistova. The civil administration of Bulgaria is confided to the Polish Prince Tcherkassky.

The bombardment of Rustchuk was recommenced on Tuesday afternoon and is still continuing. Under cover of the darkness and the heavy cannonade the Russians made an attempt to take the place by assault. They attacked the town with great determination twice in succession, but were repulsed after two hours' sharp fighting. The fire of the Turks was murderous, mitrailleuses being used in defence of the points where a breach was thought most likely to be made. The Commandant of Rustchuk has been summoned to surrender, but had refused unconditionally, declaring that the place is sufficiently victualled to resist for three months. On the other hand, the Russians, regarding the fortress as a standing menace to their flank, have fully determined to take it, and probably will not make a serious attempt on the Balkans before it has been reduced.

The object of the Turkish flotilla which has been dispatched to the Sulina mouth of the Danube is to sink the barges which the Russians have placed there. Nothing is yet known here of the result of the operation.

With a small map, or plan, of the country between Erzeroum and Kars, which is presented in our Supplement, the reader will find some details of the serious events of the last three weeks in Asia. The Russian army, meeting that of Mukhtar Pasha in the mountainous district of the Soghanli Daghi, has been signally defeated, and forced to retreat to the Georgian frontier; while Kars has been relieved by the Turkish advanced guard. It is even said that the Czar has ordered the withdrawal of the Russians from Turkish Armenia, and great despondency prevails among the troops in consequence. After his recent defeats General Melikoff tendered his resignation, and requested a court-martial in justification. A fortnight ago the Grand Duke Michael refused any longer to incur the responsibility of carrying out Melikoff's strategical operations. A flotilla is being formed at Baku and Derbent, on the Caspian Sea, to provide a new line of communications for the Russian army operating in Armenia, in case the Circassian insurgents, or the Turks, should obtain possession of that at present in existence. The towns of Ardahan and Bayazid, in Armenia, which were captured by the Russians at the beginning of the war, are now closely beleaguered by superior Turkish forces, and their surrender is expected; while Kars is relieved by the Turkish army; and Batoum, supported by the Turkish fleet, has repulsed every attack.

They are also instructed to prevent, as far as lies in their power, the appearance of several Conservative candidates in one arrondissement. From those candidates who accept its support the Government only requires that they should stand upon the ground of the Constitution and social Conservatism, and should countersign Marshal MacMahon's manifesto.

The Mayors of Amboise and Tours have been dismissed from their posts; but it does not appear that the town councils have been dissolved, as was the case at Perpignan. The Radical newspaper Le Peuple was seized on Tuesday. It is believed that the seizure was due to the publication of an article accusing the Government of meditating a coup-d'état.

M. Gambetta has been presented with a gold watch by some Frenchmen who have left Alsace-Lorraine and settled in Switzerland. In his reply to their address M. Gambetta referred to the coming elections, and declared that he and his friends were in no way uneasy as to their results. "We have to vanquish peaceably," he said, "by the aid of the voting-urn, the last undertaking of the three or four parties who have already been condemned so often by France, but who will not resign themselves to that condemnation. Rest assured that we shall accomplish this task. There is no kind of uneasiness as to the issue of the struggle, no kind of trouble to be feared, no illegal impulses to be apprehended. We are so sure of victory, so confident in the future, that we shall give nobody an excuse to resort to violence. But when we shall have given these proofs of authority and power, and the verdict of the ballot-box is pronounced, everything will be restored to its legitimate and natural place."

INDIA.

Telegrams of Wednesday's date from Bombay announce the death of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Bart.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta, in a telegram of Sunday's date, says that Bombay famine reports for the week ended June 28 give the number on the relief works as 322,927, being 33,751 less than in the previous week. The total decrease in a fortnight has been about 70,000. The general state of the people is decidedly better, and it is hoped that all cause of anxiety will soon cease. In Madras the prospects are less cheerful than in Bombay, but are apparently improving. The number on the works and receiving gratuitous relief is still over a million and a quarter, and the continued rise in prices in some places causes anxiety. The supreme Government, however, expresses the opinion that this rise is not excessive, and considers it, on the whole, fortunate that rates are keeping up, and thus encouraging the importation of food by private trade.

The total amount of the tenders for the Indian loan of 25,000,000 rs. was 33,250,000 rs. The average rate of allotment was 96 7-16. Allotments were made in full to all applicants at and above the minimum price.

The Gardener's Magazine contains "a complete audit of City trees," accompanied with notes and an essay on City trees and gardens generally. It appears that Mr. Shirley Hibberd has been wandering about the City counting and comparing; and the results of his labours are certainly remarkable. He tells us there are 1200 fine trees within the boundaries of the City, and, in addition, over 2000 under-shrubs. The plane and the lime occur most frequently.

An addition has been made to the number of "coffee palaces" open to the public in London by the conversion of a public-house in a thickly-populated neighbourhood near Lathner-road, Notting-hill. Vice-Chancellor Malins was a witness on Monday before the Select Committee on the Companies Acts. He described the abuses to which the limited liability system was liable, and, in suggesting means whereby these might be guarded against, expressed the opinion that it was impossible to protect the public from fraud by legislation, the devices for the obtaining of money being so great and the ingenuity of man so considerable. He thought that original shareholders should be obliged to pay a deposit on application for shares, and a further deposit on allotment.

A fire, resulting in the loss of four lives, occurred on Monday night, on the premises of Mr. Heidenreich, a walking-stick manufacturer, in Little Britain. The fire was discovered by two boys, who gave an alarm. The fire-escape from the General Post Office was taken to the spot immediately, but the house was already a mass of flames. Several attempts were made to rescue the people in the upper stories, who were cut off from all means of escape, the staircase and the windows being in flames. They were, however, unsuccessful; and, the roof falling in, the inmates were buried in the ruins. When the fire was put out the bodies of Mrs. Halstead and her two children, aged seven years and one year and four months respectively, and a young woman, name unknown, were discovered. Mr. Heidenreich, who lived on the ground floor, escaped with slight injuries.

The annual meeting of the members of the Cobden Club was held in the rooms of the Century Club last Saturday—Mr. T. B. Potter, M.P., in the chair. The report alluded to the work of the committee during the past year, with a view to promote free trade in the colonies and in foreign countries. The committee looked to the development of international commerce as an important step towards a reduction of armaments, which they do not despair of accomplishing after the settlement of the Eastern Question. A communication had been opened with the honorary members of the club in the United States with a view to their moving the Government to accept their declaration of Paris. From 1866 to the present time the club had distributed 285,000 volumes. The chairman said he had reason to believe that there was the dawn of an improved state of things in the United States on the free-trade question. In the colonies he was convinced that sound opinion was spreading. Mr. W. E. Baxter, M.P., believed the club was doing good work. The report was adopted and the committee re-elected.

Last week 2220 births and 1322 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 40 and the deaths 72 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 23 from smallpox, 44 from measles, 18 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 35 from whooping-cough, 19 from different forms of fever, and 96 from diarrhoea. These deaths were 73 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. Notwithstanding the recent cool temperature, the fatal cases of diarrhoea, which in the five previous weeks had risen from 13 to 50, further increased to 96 last week, of which 80 were of infants under one year of age; this number, however, was 34 below the corrected average number in the corresponding week of the last ten years. Different forms of violence caused 56 deaths: 50 were the result of negligence or accident, including 25 from fractures and contusions, 10 from drowning, 2 from poison, and 12 of infants under one year of age from suffocation.

A recent writer on medical relief in London says:—"It is quite possible to prevent the abuse of charity and to make provision for the health of the working classes and their families up on the principle of mutual assurance." We are quite of this opinion, and believe that something should be done in this direction, as we have been startled to find that a million persons—a fourth part of the wage-earning classes of London—obtain gratuitous medical advice and relief annually. This, of course, is exclusive of the ample provision made by the Poor Law Board, at the expense of the ratepayers, for the pauper class. Moreover, it appears that with the growth of population this abuse of charity is on the increase. Surely some limit should be set to the endurance of the medical profession in this important matter. Means must be devised whereby a great part of the present gratuitous service may be systematised and brought into more reasonable proportions, and made remunerative. With this feeling, we gladly notice a scheme on the self-supporting or co-operative system of medical relief about to be set on foot by Mr. Jabez Hogg, who has for more than a quarter of a century given his services to the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital. He intends to open a hospital for the treatment of eye diseases for that class of persons able and willing to make a moderate return for the surgical skill and advice received. Thus, patients of the working class will have an opportunity afforded them of securing for a small payment what the more opulent class obtains by consulting the medical man at home.

From Hurstmonceux a move was made to Hailsham, where dinner was partaken of. The party returned to Brighton after a very enjoyable outing.

FINE ARTS.

THE NEW BELGIAN GALLERY.

The most remarkable work in this very interesting collection, the "Inaugural Exhibition" of which has just been opened at 112, New Bond-street, is without doubt the large picture called "The Break of Day" (A l'Aube), by M. Charles Hermans. This indubitably fine production has already been exhibited in Brussels, Paris, Berlin, Düsseldorf, and Hamburg. In the capital of Belgium the painting was included in the Triennial Exhibition of 1875, and gained for the artist the cross of the Order of Leopold. The curators of the New Belgian Gallery have sought to deprecate any possible adverse criticism concerning the peculiar subject chosen by M. Hermans by pointing out that "Break of Day" conveys a "moral lesson;" while the artist himself is of opinion that "scenes of everyday life afford as legitimate matter for historic painting as those drawn from the annals of bygone periods." We entirely agree with M. Hermans; and, unless we are mistaken, a certain English painter by the name of William Hogarth held precisely the same opinion more than a hundred years ago. "Break of Day" is substantially a scene from the "Modern Rake's Progress," and when we say that it represents a foreign gentleman of very dissolute mien, in full evening dress, seemingly labouring under an excess of champagne, coming out of a bal masqué in the most questionable company, while his degradation is sorrowfully watched by a venerable and virtuous artisan who is apparently related either to the profligate or to his disreputable companions, quite enough has been said about the theme on which M. Hermans has pictorially discoursed. If the propriety of his "Moral Lesson" be questioned, he may appeal to the popularity long enjoyed by M. Gustave Doré's colossal picture of the gambling saloon at Baden-Baden—a picture which has so long formed one of the attractions of the Doré Gallery, and without, to all appearance, shocking anybody in particular. From an artistic point of view, however, M. Hermans may safely challenge criticism. His picture is distinguished by splendid drawing, powerful modelling, great breadth of effect, and intensely dramatic expression. There are numerous other works of brilliant merit but of smaller dimensions ("Break of Day" is an enormous work, and the figures approach life size) in the New Belgian Gallery. Specially noticeable among these are M. Gabriel Max's "Scene in Tuscany" (3), a glowing effect in colour; M. Charles Landelle's "Christian Mother" (10), and M. Karl Bloch's "Poor Musician." The celebrated M. Charles Gussow sends a forcible genre picture, "The Artilleryman's Story of the Battle" (58), full of excellent qualities, and comprising a wonderfully well painted head of an old woman. M. F. R. Unterberger contributes a superb view of "The Gulf of Salerno" (66), and there are some beautiful atmospheric effects in M. Deu Duyt's "Sunset after a Storm." M. A. Dorgelas's "Ship in the Snow" (71) is a tenderly executed little scene of child-life, in the approved manner of Edouard Frère; while M. Charles Heffner reminds us very pleasantly indeed of David Cox in a "View near Blisworth" (113). Full of delicate treatment and poetic feeling likewise is M. J. J. Destree's "Coast near Ostend." Finally, we may sincerely commend the splendour of the colour and boldness of execution displayed in M. E. Richter's "Choosing a Shawl" (89), and in his larger and equally meritorious one, "The Fortune Teller."

To the brilliant assemblage of works of art in the galleries of the Fine-Art Society in New Bond-street, where Miss Elizabeth Thompson's four battle-pieces still continue their successful career of exhibition, there has been recently added a very admirable painting in oil by Miss Adele Hillyar. It is a view, on a large scale, of Hamouze and the Dockyards, Devonport, from Mount Edgecumbe. The scene depicted is in itself naturally panoramic, and one of the most beautiful that even the beautiful county of Devon can present. Miss Hillyar has made the utmost of the superb materials at her disposal; and the result is a most charming transcript of sylvan and maritime scenery, unsurpassed, perhaps, anywhere in Europe, save in the view of Naples from the Chiaja Santa Lucia, and of Cadix, "the ship of stone," from San Fernando. Constantly the eye must not enter into such comparisons, Stamboul being sui generis and unique. Miss Hillyar must be congratulated, first on her excellent draughtsmanship; next on the great command over the difficulties of aerial perspective which she has displayed; and, finally, on the purity and brightness of the colour which suffuses the entire picture. The foreground is full of mellow tints; the trees and foliage are delicately but characteristically defined; and the bird's-eye vista of distant Devonport, with its building-slips, factories, and magazines, is worthy, in the dexterity of its perspective limning, of the late J. B. Pyne, the great master of "things seen from afar off."

A series of permanent photographs of select pictures in this year's Royal Academy Exhibition is presented in a handsome volume published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin. It is called "The Royal Academy Album," for 1877, being the third annual publication of this kind; and is fully equal to its predecessors, both in the excellence of the works of art chosen for reproduction, and in the qualities of the photographic execution, which is done by the Woodbury-type process. Mr. Samuel Jennings, F.R.S., is Editor of the collection, which includes forty plates from the recently exhibited pictures by Messrs. Ansell, Sant, Alma Tadema, F. Goodall, C. W. Cope, R. Redgrave, Sidney Cooper, J. Pettie, E. W. Cooke, J. C. Horsley, P. Graham, Pettie, Eames, Marks, Dobson, Herkomer, Burgess, Oakes, Hayes, and others, with sculpture by Messrs. Calder Marshall and T. Woolner. These names are a sufficient recommendation of the volume.

The picture by the Dutch painter Franz Hals, in the Town-hall at Haarlem, of an assembly of the officers of the Archers of St. Adrian's Order, in the ancient times of their municipal chivalry, has been commended as the best work of that artist, and is of some historical interest. An oleograph reproduction of this painting has been published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., of Fleet-street. It would be a suitable ornament for a library or study, where Motley's "History of the Dutch Republic" has an honoured place on the bookshelves.

THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

The trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, in their twentieth annual report, which is dated May 5, 1877, state that during the past year thirty-two donations have been received. These include portraits of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., painted by Sir Martin Archer Shee, R.A.; of Sir Edwin Landseer, sketched in pen-and-ink by Sir Francis Grant; of Miss O'Neill, the actress, afterwards Lady Becher, painted in 1815 by J. Masquerier; of Lord Hardinge, Governor-General of India, painted by Sir Francis Grant; and twenty-five portraits of Judges and other eminent members of the legal profession, which recently decorated the walls of the hall and dining-room of Serjeants' Inn, and have been presented to the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery by the Society of Judges and Sergeants-at-Law. The donations also include three medallions of Queen Mary II., Philip II. of Spain, and Queen Elizabeth, presented by Mr. George Scharf.

The purchases during the year have been twenty-four in number. Among them are portraits of the Rev. Edward Irving; Thomas Gray, the poet; James Hogg; Rachael Wriothesley, widow of Lord William Russell, painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller; Princess Mary, afterwards Queen Mary I.; Mary, Queen of Scots, painted during her captivity at Sheffield, in 1587; Angelica Kauffman, painted by herself; Anne Oldfield, the celebrated actress; Prince James Francis Edward Stuart, the "old Pretender;" Prince Charles Edward Stuart, "the young Chevalier;" Cardinal York, the son of the old Pretender; a bronze bust of Oliver Cromwell; recumbent figures of King Edward II. and Robert, Duke of Normandy; portraits of James Barry, R.A. (1741-1806); Prince Edward, afterwards King Edward VI.; John Jackson, R.A., the portrait-painter (1778-1831); Richard Parkes Bonington, the painter (1801-1828); Robert Southey; Samuel Taylor Coleridge; Charles Lamb; William Wordsworth; Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, and Sir John Suckling.

The number of visitors to the gallery in 1876 was 108,252, which was a larger number than in any preceding year. The number of visitors on Whitsun Monday in 1876 amounted to 4409, against 2322 of 1875, and 1544 of the year before. On Boxing Day in 1876 the number of visitors was 2249, against 2837 of 1875, and 1128 of the year before. On Easter Monday last, April 2, the number amounted to 4534, against 4818 of last year and 4139 of the year before. The total number of persons who visited the gallery from its opening in Great George-street in 1859 to the end of last year was 676,336.

FEMALE SCHOOL OF ART.

The distribution of prizes to the successful students of the Female School of Art, 43, Queen-square, took place on Wednesday, in the theatre of the Museum of Geology, Jernyn-street—Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., in the chair. The annual report, which was read by Professor Donaldson, stated that the success of the students in the past year had been of a very satisfactory character, and that her Majesty had given an extra special mark of her Royal approbation by granting an additional sum of £10 to the Queen's scholarship and by purchasing two works from the selection sent for her inspection. A premium of £40 had again been awarded by the Lords of the Committee of Education to Miss Gann, the directress of the school, her name being fourth on the list of 138 competing schools. These premiums, it was intimated, were in future to be discontinued. In April, last year, 2034 drawings and models, the works of 238 students, were sent to South Kensington from the school. Five national awards have been won by students of the Female School of Art during the year—viz., National silver medals, by Ida Lovering and Florence Reason; national bronze medals, by Alice Hanslip and Emily Austin; and Queen's prize, by Rhoda Holmes and Gertrude Hamilton. These awards were won in competition with 138 schools of art, numbering 27,661 students. Of local awards the Queen's gold medal was awarded to Ida Lovering; and the Queen's scholarship—which, in consideration of the great merit of the successful candidates' works, was raised in value for the year from £30 to £50—was retained by Alice Hanslip. In the Local Science and Art Department Examination twenty-five students obtained third-grade prizes. The Gilchrist scholarship of £50 per annum, tenable for two years, was awarded to Miss Mary Ann Burnay. Miss Frances Harriett Newton retains a similar scholarship for the second year. Misses Alice Hanslip, Ida Lovering, and Catherine Benson have been elected students of the Royal Academy.

SCHOOLS.

Lord Sanden presided on Saturday afternoon at the Crystal Palace at the distribution of 4000 bibles and testaments given by Mr. Francis Peck and the Religious Tract Society to children attending the London board schools as prizes for proficiency in Scripture knowledge. During the proceedings hymns and songs were sung by upwards of 5000 children. Lord Sanden was accompanied by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, Sir Charles Reed, and several members of the School Board, Sir F. H. Currie, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., the Rev. Dr. Manning (secretary of the Religious Tract Society), and others. Lord Sanden said he felt it was his duty to support Sir Charles Reed and the London School Board with all his power in promoting the excellent systematic religious teaching which they were furthering to the best of their power. This system of religious instruction was fully appreciated by parents; for, out of 150,000 children who were in the London board schools, less than one in a thousand had been withdrawn from the religious teaching, and this small proportion might very likely be accounted for by children belonging to the Jewish faith. He found that no fewer than 82,000 children had voluntarily come up for examination in Scripture knowledge. He could not help expressing an earnest hope—speaking in his private, not in his official, capacity—that all the boards of the country would see their way to follow the good example set them by the London School Board. The meeting was also addressed by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, the Rev. Dr. Manning; and Mr. F. Peck, who was loudly cheered by the children and by the audience, which numbered about 37,000. The proceedings concluded with the singing of the National Anthem. A balloon ascent afterwards took place, and it was some hours before all the children had left the palace and the grounds.

The annual examination of scholars and distribution of prizes in connection with the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools took place the same day at Caterham, under the presidency of Mr. Holms, M.P. Great proficiency was shown by the children, and it was stated that no better proof could be given of the estimation in which the school was held than the fact that the boys readily obtained good situations.

Mr. Forsyth, M.P., briefly addressed an assembly at James's Hall last Saturday on the subject of education and the use of knowledge, and then handed to the students of the North London Collegiate Schools the prizes they had won.

By the invitation of Lady Burdett-Coutts, the whole of the Westminster Teachers' Association, to the number of 360, including elementary teachers of every denomination in the metropolitan division, visited the Alexandra Palace last Saturday. Luncheon was provided in the pavilion, the chair being taken by Mr. W. H. Baker, the president of the association, and Head Master of St. Stephen's School, Westminster, which was founded by her Ladyship in 1846. The health of Lady Burdett-Coutts was received with acclamation by the assembled teachers, after which they separated to enjoy the various amusements the palace afforded.

A bronze statue of Robert Raikes, the founder of the Sunday-School system, is about to be erected by national subscription in his native town of Gloucester. The movement is promoted by the Sunday School Union.

Mr. Granville R. H. Somerset, Q.C., of the Oxford Circuit and the Parliamentary Bar, has been appointed Recorder of Gloucester, in place of the late Mr. Whitmore, Q.C. Mr. Somerset was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1851, and was created a Queen's Counsel in 1863.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Prisons Bill—the cause of dreary sittings long drawn out in the Lower House—is quickly being disposed of in the Upper Chamber. All the clauses were agreed to in a very short time and the bill was reported yesterday week. The remainder of the sitting (of two hours and a half duration only) was occupied in the withdrawal by the Earl of Redesdale of his opposition to the clauses which the Government proposed to insert in certain private bills with the view of protecting the Post-Office telegraph-wires; and in the reappearance of "The Priest in Absolution," this time in the form of a query put by Lord Oranmore to the Lord Chancellor as to whether his Lordship was aware when he appointed the Rev. E. H. Cross to the rectory of St. Nicholas, Lewes, that he was a member of the Holy Cross Society—to which the Lord Chancellor replied that he was not aware of the fact. A few bills were also passed through different stages.

Monday's sitting was mainly occupied in a discussion on the earldom of Mar. The Duke of Buccleuch gave rise to the debate. His Grace, having delivered himself of an almost interminable sentence embodying the meaning of his resolution, moved that the Earl of Mar should be placed on the roll of Peers of Scotland as claiming rank and precedence from 1565 instead of 1457. The Marquis of Huntly objected to the mode of procedure in the matter, and moved the previous question. Other noble Lords, including Lord Selborne and the Lord Chancellor, followed suit in urging their objections, and the Duke of Buccleuch did not persevere with his motion upon the Lord Chancellor undertaking to move for a Select Committee to consider the petition of the Earl of Mar and Kellie. The latter course having been adopted, Earl Fortescue, in moving for a return of the Endowed School schemes, took occasion to criticise adversely the action of the Charity Commissioners, and even spoke of it as a cruel denial of justice to the lower middle-class schools. The Duke of Richmond defended the Charity Commissioners, but granted the returns. The Prisons Bill was then read the third time and passed.

On Tuesday Earl Beauchamp explained for the satisfaction of Lord Shaftesbury that, in using the Artisans Dwellings Act as a besom wherewith to sweep away certain unsavoury and unhealthy City tenements known as Blewitt's-buildings, no injustice had been done to the inhabitants. Suggestions of green glades and shady nooks noble Lords may be excused for longing for were then afforded to the fanciful: the New Forest Bill passed through Committee. The Duke of Somerset had intended to bear down upon the Government with a question as to the stability of H.M.S. Indefatigable, but sheered off, the wind having been taken out of his sails by the somewhat tardy consent of the Admiralty to appoint a Committee of competent men to settle the vexed question to the satisfaction of the public, who might rely upon this practical jury (the Duke of Richmond assured his Grace) having full and authoritative data before them.

On Thursday the Royal Assent was given by Commission to thirty-two public and private bills, including the Public Works Loans Bill, the Royal Irish Constabulary Bill, and the Prisons Bill. The Colonial Fortifications Bill was read the second time, and the New Forest Bill was read the third time and passed.

COMMONS.

If a recalcitrant few of the Committee of Supply strained at a gnat in the shape of the Army Reserve vote in the small hours of Tuesday week, they made amends the following Thursday by swallowing a veritable camel—close upon three millions for Army provisions and transport, £1,120,000 for warlike stores, £828,700 for works, £1,235,000 for widows' pensions, £1,005,200 for out-pensions, £1,000,000 for Regulars in India, besides the disputed £132,000 for Army Reserves, and many thousands for other military purposes. The House was, indeed, in a generous mood. Despite what Lord George Hamilton called the "cogent arguments" of Mr. Fawcett adverse to the East India Loan Bill, this measure for lending India five millions was read the second time without division. In the teeth of opposition on the part of Major O'Gorman and others—"There's not a man at the Irish Bar who would not jump at £2500 a year!" vociferated the mountainous member for Waterford—several clauses of the Irish Judicature Bill were agreed to. An arm-full of measures then rapidly passed through various stages. But, in Committee on Mr. Gregory's Solicitors' Examination Bill, the small Hibernian band, which made an obstinate stand against a strong majority for six long hours earlier in the week, again emphasized their virtuous aversion to the apothegm of their national bard, that

The best of all ways to lengthen your days
Is to steal a few hours from the night, my boys.

The same old game of moving that progress should be reported was indulged in by Mr. Biggar and Mr. Parnell, until Sir William Fraser could contain himself no longer, but sprang to his feet, and bluntly said the time had come when the Government ought to take steps to prevent a small minority from obstructing the business of the House. Progress was eventually reported on the motion of Mr. Gregory himself, and the House adjourned at close upon three in the morning.

Mr. Parnell has good reason for believing that there is much virtue in an "if." One of the lively incidents which somewhat relieved the memorable long sitting of July 2-3 was the rising of Mr. Blake to reprove Mr. Parnell for the language he was reported to have used with regard to the House and the Speaker in a lecture delivered in Hatton-garden. But Mr. Parnell would seem to have couched his Hatton-garden animadversions in the subjunctive mood, under which he sought protection. Anyway, yesterday week the hon. member for Meath (savagely lampooned by Mr. John Tenniel in Punch's porcine cartoon this week) pleaded "not guilty" to the charge of disrespect either to the Speaker or to the House, and defended his so-called obstructive conduct by his predilection for early hours. With wonted suavity, the Chancellor of the Exchequer threw oil on the troubled waters. The upholding of the dignity of the Speaker's office was advocated in a few earnest, apt words by Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Blake expressed himself satisfied with the apology of Mr. Parnell, whom Mr. Biggar defended, and then the matter dropped. A desultory conversation on the course of study at the Greenwich Naval University was followed by an earnest appeal to the Government from both sides of the House to remove the doubt which existed as to the stability of H.M.S. Indefatigable in the event of her unarmoured ends being destroyed in action. Captain Pim, who moved an amendment that it was inexpedient "to build any more vessels of the Agamemnon type until that class had been tried," said he had seen the model of the Indefatigable, and that on the slightest touch it would capsize. Mr. E. J. Reed repeated his objections to the Indefatigable. The tale was taken up by Mr. Sumuda, Sir J. Hay, and other hon. members; but the Chancellor of the Exchequer thought it would be inexpedient to appoint a Select Committee on the subject to sit virtually in judgment on the Admiralty. At the same time, Sir Stafford Northcote said that the views of Mr. Reed would be carefully weighed by the Government. Captain Pim then withdrew his motion. The removal of the British Fleet from the Piræus to Besika Bay was next commented on afresh by Sir Wilfrid Lawson. Sir Stafford Northcote, replying early in the evening to Mr. Gourley, had in his blandest tones—and Sir Stafford can be as bland and innocent as "that Heathen Chinese" himself when he pleases—assured the House that the British Fleet had been sent from the Piræus to Besika Bay because it was a more "convenient" and "central" station for the Admiral "to communicate, if necessary, with greater rapidity with her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, or with her Majesty's Government at home." The Leader of the House, with commendable moderation of language, now repeated this statement for the benefit of Sir Wilfrid Lawson; and, in answer to the hon. Baronet's expression of a fear that the removal might be construed into a menace by Russia, the Chancellor of the Exchequer furthermore said he was sorry it should be supposed there was anything in the action of the Government which "would be taken by one or other of the contending Powers as a threat, a hint, or a warning." In Committee at last on the Navy Estimates, the House agreed to a number of votes. Mr. E. Jenkins moved—

That a humble address be presented to her Majesty praying that, in view of the circumstances disclosed upon the proceedings, she will be graciously pleased to reinstate Captain Roberts in his rank in the Army.

Mr. Jenkins dwelt upon the alleged grievances of Captain Roberts and upon the animus which he asserted Colonel Lord John Tylour had exhibited towards Captain Roberts; but General Shute defended the gallant Colonel from the aspersions which had been cast upon him, and insisted that such conduct as Captain Roberts had been guilty of should not be sanctioned. Mr. Hopwood thought Captain Roberts had been treated unfairly, as did Sir A. Gordon, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Forsyth, and Sir C. O'Loughlin. Mr. C. Bentinck, on the other hand, defended the Horse Guards in the matter; and Mr. Hardy endeavoured to throw oil on the troubled waters in a well-considered speech in which he confessed that the case was a painful one, but trusted that the House would not, "under feelings of natural kindness," set itself against the decision of the court-martial. Mr. Jenkins's motion was rejected in the end by 137 votes to 72. The House was counted out whilst Mr. Whalley was vainly trying to introduce a motion antagonistic to "The Priest in Absolution."

On Monday Mr. Whalley, nothing daunted by the non-success attending his strenuous efforts to have "The Priest in Absolution" anathematized or suppressed by the Government, was to the fore with a question as to whether the chaplains of H.M.S. Hector and Cambridge were members of the Holy Cross Society. Mr. Egerton answered in the negative. Various other questions having been replied to, the Chancellor of the Exchequer virtually ate his own words of the previous Friday. He informed Sir J. Hay that the Government had at length resolved to refer the question of the stability of H.M.S. Indefatigable to a competent Committee not connected with the Admiralty. It is possible that when Mr. Lowther dilated upon the advantages of confederation in moving that the South African Bill should be read the second time, and approved Sir Theophilus Shepstone's policy in annexing the Transvaal, the representative of the Government reckoned without Mr. Courtney. That hon. member, in tones whose impressiveness few could hope to emulate, and with an affectation of wisdom that approached the sublime, resolutely set his face against the bill, likened Sir Theophilus Shepstone unto Shakespeare's "Man, proud man, dressed in a little brief authority," could not agree with Mr. Froude, "who has unfortunately taken to politics," and, deploring the annexation of the Transvaal Republic, moved the rejection of the measure. Sir Charles Dilke, in more modest terms, seconded the amendment. Sir Henry Holland and Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen supported the bill, the second reading of which was ultimately agreed to by 81 to 19 votes. Mr. Cross, who had "personally visited" Broadmoor Criminal Lunatic Asylum, defended that institution from the attacks of Mr. Rylands. Then arose a discussion on our Consuls in Bosnia. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre tried to fasten a charge of partiality for the Turks upon Consul Holmes by pointing out the discrepancies existing between his reports and those of Vice-Consul Freeman regarding the reported outrages on the insurgents in Bosnia. But Mr. Bourke easily succeeded in defending Consul Holmes to the general satisfaction of the House. One or two Irish members having dwelt with Milesian loquacity on the alleged grievance of a junior clerk who had been dismissed from the Irish Writ and Seal Office, General Shute, Colonel Mure, and Sir Henry Havelock protested against the favouritism shown to Colonel Wellesley in advancing his promotion by prolonging his appointment as Military Attaché at St. Petersburg. In reply, Mr. Hardy urged that the prolongation of Colonel Wellesley's appointment was desirable in consequence of his knowledge of the Russian language. The usual variety of questions having been answered, Lord Sandon was about to deliver a statement explanatory of the Education votes, but desisted upon it being pointed out by Mr. Forster that he would be out of order in doing so before the Speaker left the chair. Mr. Samuelson thereupon seized the opportunity to introduce his motion, which was negatived, however, by 121 to 78. His resolution ran thus:—

That the English education code, by requiring that all students of training colleges receiving Government aid must reside within such colleges, a condition not imposed by the Scotch code, and by withholding from graduates of Universities the encouragement offered by the Scotch code to enter on the profession of elementary teachers, tends to increase the cost of the erection and maintenance of these colleges, and to diminish the number of duly qualified teachers.

Several hon. members—Sir John Lubbock, Mr. A. Mills, Lord F. Hervey, Mr. Grant Duff, and Mr. Chamberlain, among others—then pointed out how the education code and the working of the Act might be improved; and to their criticisms and suggestions Lord Sandon gave conciliatory replies, prior to making his speech on the education vote in Committee of Supply. This speech Mr. Forster approved; and the vote was sanctioned, as was £221,789 for the Science and Art Department. Quick work was then made with certain measures, which were advanced a stage or so; and the remainder of the sitting was occupied by a fruitless discussion of the following motion, introduced by Mr. Birley, but opposed by Sir George Campbell and Lord George Hamilton:—

That, in the opinion of this House, the duties now levied upon cotton manufactures imported into India, being protective in their nature, are contrary to sound commercial policy, and ought to be repealed without delay.

The Scottish Church Rates Abolition Bill, moved on Wednesday by Mr. McLaren, was negatived on the motion of Mr. M. Stewart by 204 votes against 143. Mr. Plunket afterwards moved the second reading of the Irish Peerage Bill, the object whereof was to extinguish what he ventured to call this anomalous class of peerages without disturbing any existing right; but Sir George Bowyer talked the bill out. The Habitual Drunkards Bill and the Scottish Marriage Bill were then withdrawn, the report of Supply was agreed to, and the Consolidated Fund (£20,000,000) Bill read the second time.

On Thursday, in answer to inquiries made by Mr. Ritchie and Sir G. Bowyer, Mr. Bourke stated that reports of atrocities committed by the Russians in Bulgaria and in Asia had been made to Mr. Layard by the Porte and to the Foreign Office by the Turkish Ambassador in London. The only other information on the subject was received through a telegram from the Consul at Trebizonde stating that a private letter had been received from Soukhoum Kalé, mentioning the expulsion of 1500 families who had been driven into the mountains by the Cossacks. The name of the writer, however, was not given, and the Government had no means of inquiring into the truth of the matter. Responding to an inquiry from Serjeant Sherlock, Mr. Cross stated that, although there was no evidence as yet to show that the suicide of the boy Gibbs, a scholar of Christ's Hospital, was induced by cruel treatment, he thought, in the interests of the public as well as in those of the school itself, a thorough investigation of all the facts connected with the unfortunate affair ought to be instituted, and the Government would give every assistance in the matter. Mr. Sullivan, by moving the adjournment of the House, seized the opportunity of registering his protest against the conduct of the Government in not taking into their own charge the Sunday Closing (Ireland) Bill, or of furnishing their assistance towards passing that measure through its remaining stages in the present Session. The Chancellor of the Exchequer deprecated as highly inconvenient, especially at that period of the Session, the raising of a discussion of this kind. Having detailed the proceedings that had taken place in reference to this bill, he denied that the Government were at all responsible for the conduct of the opponents of the measure; on the contrary, he asserted that they had acted in a fair and straightforward manner in respect to the question, and they were prepared to promote legislation on the subject on the lines they had already laid down. A discussion occupying nearly two hours followed, which was principally maintained by that section of the Irish representation that was known under the name of "Irreconcilables." Mr. K. Smyth gave notice that early next Session he would move a resolution to the effect that the relations of the Government and of the House to this bill were such as to warrant expectations that the Government would, in the public interest, adopt early and effectual means for bringing about a settlement of the question. The Marquis of Hartington agreed with the Government that the discussion was inopportune, especially as the time was not far distant when there would be an opportunity of considering the whole question of the conduct of the Government with regard to legislation generally. He, however, regretted that the Government had not promised to take the measure under discussion into their own hands, and he hoped that before the end of the Session they would give a pledge either that they would give the bill their hearty support or deal with the matter themselves in some other form. After one more illustration of the disunion of the Irish members upon this question, the motion for the adjournment of the House was withdrawn. Ultimately the House went into Committee of Supply, when the vote of £288,782 to complete the sum of £488,782 for public education in Scotland, after being subjected to considerable criticism, was agreed to.

SPELLING REFORM.

The Select Committee of the London School Board on spelling reform have drawn up an amended memorial to the Committee of Council on Education. It states that as the memorialists ask for inquiry by Royal Commission they do not deem it desirable to anticipate the result of it by suggesting the methods of spelling that may best remove the anomalies of which all complain. But they have no hesitation in indicating the conditions that any acceptable method must satisfy. They have no desire that a new style of spelling should be enforced on the whole community; or that anything should be done which shall make the study of our literature more difficult, or lessen the value of books printed on the present system. As educators, approaching the subject on its practical side, they seek chiefly to secure greater simplicity and consistency, to minimise anomalies, and yet, at the same time, to preserve whatever is helpful to knowledge and thought. The memorialists hope that such a result would follow an official inquiry, and they have the conviction that the best solution of the difficulties which beset the whole subject of spelling will be found in attending to the practical purpose they have in view. They submit as questions well worthy the consideration of the education department and of a Royal Commission—1, the removal of any regulations that at present impede the introduction of new methods of teaching the ordinary English reading and writing; 2, the various plans suggested for reforming the spelling itself, with a view to determine what system would secure the greatest amount of benefit with the least inconvenience; 3, whether it is desirable to attempt a partial reform, retaining whatever is valuable as suggesting the etymological affinities of words, or a thoroughly reformed spelling for optional use alongside of our present system; 4, the best means of giving official sanction to any improvement that may be decided upon.

FLOWER SHOWS.

The eighth annual exhibition of window plants grown within the City was held on Tuesday in the gardens of Finsbury-circus. Mr. George Cornish obtained the Royal Horticultural Society's silver medal for the best plant; bronze medals being awarded to Mr. E. Cossons, Mr. George Lucas, and Miss Annie Davis. These and the other prizes were distributed later in the evening by the Duchess of Westminster, and a vote of thanks was unanimously accorded her Grace, on the motion of the Rev. W. Rogers, the same being acknowledged by the Duke of Westminster, who suggested that the churchyards and the open spaces of the metropolis might be better utilised than they were by turning them into gardens such as those they were in, and that they might be thrown open to the public.

By the permission of the Duke of Argyll, a flower show for children, which presented many features of novelty and interest, was held on Wednesday afternoon in the beautiful grounds of Argyll Lodge, Campden-hill. The weather being splendidly fine there was a large and fashionable attendance, and Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) distributed the prizes to the successful children. The performances of a juvenile band added to the liveliness of the proceedings.

A similarly interesting gathering took place in the gardens of Grosvenor House, where there was a show of flowers by the children of the schools of St. George's, Hanover-square, St. Mark's, Hanover, Curzon, and Grosvenor Schools. The Duchess of Westminster distributed the prizes, and addresses were given by the Duke of Westminster, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and the Rev. Capel Cure.

As a preliminary to his forthcoming second attempt to swim across the Channel, Professor Cavill on Wednesday undertook to swim from Southampton to Southsea. He started at ten minutes past two, and gave up opposite Haslar Hospital at twenty minutes past nine, having swam about twenty miles.

THE MAGAZINES.

In addition to its pair of fictions, of which Mr. Blackmore's continues very fresh and bright, with repeated striking turns and sparkling eddies in the narrative, the Cornhill contains an unusual number of those lively papers, half-way between seriousness and persiflage, to which it is principally indebted for its distinctive character. To this class belong the half earnest, half ironical vindications of two much-decried classes, Philistines and idlers, in both of which an unexpected number of redeeming traits are pointed out. To another class belongs another apology, "E. W. G.'s" plea for exotic forms of metre, illustrated by some remarkably graceful examples from his own pen, especially one attesting his ability to achieve the most difficult of any, "the rolling and mounting music of the chant royal." The forms selected for illustration are exclusively derived from French literature, and we accordingly find no notice of the Italian sestine, the most beautiful and one of the most artificial of all; the Sicilian octave, admirable for the expression of detached thoughts unequal to the dignity and compass of the sonnet; or that paragon of complication, the Malay pantoun, of which Mr. John Payne's and Mr. Austin Dobson's are likely to be for long the only English specimens. An equally agreeable essay on the Japanese miniature ode acquaints us with an antipodal form of composition whose speciality lies in its simplicity and brevity, and where the difficulty is to embody a thought worthy of poetic expression in thirty-one syllables. Judging from the specimens given, the Japanese bards seem equal to the task; and their terse quatrains—startling in their quaintness and abruptness, but always profoundly right—exhibit many of the qualities of the national pictorial art. Professor Ward's narrative of his trip to Delphi is full of interest; and Mr. Proctor subjects the planet Mars to a scrutiny which results unfavourably as to his capacity for maintaining life. The parched aspects of his terra firma, and the apparent shallowness of his oceans, are relied upon as indications that he is gradually drying up.

Macmillan offers nothing of especial interest if we except Mr. J. H. Fyfe's sagacious remarks on modern diplomacy, and Dr. Hueffer's analysis of the pretty, but not over moral, Provençal romance of "Flamenca." A Russian account of the Asiatic seat of war, translated by Major Wavell, is rather statistical than military. Sir Gilbert Scott rejoins vigorously to the protests against the destructive restoration of ancient churches which have recently made themselves heard in so many quarters. There are, no doubt, two sides to this as to every question; but Sir Gilbert's statements are necessarily ex parte. Mr. Fleay boldly ascribes the authorship of "Romeo and Juliet" to Pele—an apparent paradox, maintained with considerable ingenuity, partly on metrical considerations, partly from the peculiarities of the second quarto, which are asserted to betray traces of Shakspeare's revision of another's work.

Fraser opens with a valuable criticism on Dr. Schliemann's Trojan discoveries from the pen of Mr. W. Simpson, one of the few men qualified for the task alike by archaeological knowledge and by a personal investigation of the locality. Mr. Simpson considers that Dr. Schliemann has underrated the force of the evidence in favour of the Bounarbashi site, while admitting that the claims of Hissarlik are still the strongest. A weighty objection has hitherto been the absence of any Cyclopean masonry, which, however, Mr. Simpson thinks he has himself observed in a spot where, he suggests, excavations may possibly be prosecuted with better results than even Dr. Schliemann's. He entirely disbelieves in any connection between the objects discovered by Dr. Schliemann and the tale of Troy or the court of Priam. Picturesque Bassano, famous for its associations with the tyrant Eccelino and Venetian art, is the subject of a very picturesque paper. "Quarter Sessions in Devonshire under Charles II." contains some curious particulars of the levy of the obnoxious impost of hearth money. Madame Mario-White's "experience of ambulances" is but the guise of a vindication of the Italian free corps' share in the unsuccessful campaign of 1866. The mysteries of betting and bookmaking are fully laid bare in an article devoted to them. The writer on British commerce indulges in the most gloomy vaticinations of the impending ruin of Brazil; and another economist makes out such a case against the remunerativeness of railway mineral traffic as to make us apprehend that the companies will by-and-by decline to bring any more coal to London.

"Mine is Thine" promises to be a welcome and characteristic addition to Blackwood's repertory of fictions, being distinguished by all their customary humour and pleasant effervescence of healthy animal spirits. The scene is laid on the Continent, and the saucy youth and the pompous old gentleman—types familiar to Blackwood—are treated with genuine ris comica. The continuation of "Pauline" is also excellent. An estimate of Heine as a man is surprisingly indulgent for Blackwood—too indulgent, indeed, for any quarter. Some notes on the Egyptian campaign in Abyssinia show clearly enough the hopeless nature of the undertaking, and the absolute necessity for such wild schemes of conquest being sternly discountenanced, if faith is to be kept with the public creditor.

The Fortnightly Review has a very noticeable article by M. de Laveleye, the eminent Belgian publicist, exhorting England to assume the administrative control of Egypt in her own interest and that of the world. He points out what is very clear, though English writers are shy of acknowledging it, that the success of our efforts to civilise India must ultimately bring about the emancipation of that country from foreign dominion, and recommends the acquisition of an African empire as a substitute. Indian affairs are also the theme of a contribution by Dr. Lyon Playfair, who denounces the recent alterations in the regulations for candidates for the Civil Service as a scheme conceived solely in the interest of Oxford. Mr. Goldwin Smith, without much originality, discusses the causes of the Liberal defeat; for which Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, in another paper, propounds local organisation as a panacea. The Duc de Broglie is severely judged as a mere backstairs intriguer in a vigorous paper from the pen of Mr. Frank Hill. We entirely disapprove of the tone and spirit of Professor Clifford's "Ethics of Belief," where really important truths, which might easily be so stated as to command general assent, are propounded with a gratuitous offensiveness which will render them unacceptable to everybody.

The Nineteenth Century is hardly up to its usual mark, and Lord Stratford de Redcliffe's contribution to the question of the day will be found especially disappointing. The larger portion, committed to paper a few years after the Crimean War, is almost superseded by the course of recent events; while the postscript betrays the hesitation of an expert who feels himself no longer fully at home in his subject. Mr. Grant Duff's analysis of the debate on Mr. Gladstone's motion is lively and spirited, and expresses some very good ideas, marred by that self-satisfaction from which Mr. Grant Duff can never entirely free himself. The Bishop of Gloucester endeavours to put the Ridsdale judgment into a more convincing shape than the Judges themselves were able to do, and pleads for forbearance towards the offending clergy in terms which the latter will find more provoking than prosecution. Mr. Gladstone's rejoinder to Sir James Stephen is decidedly heavy reading, which is not the case with Mr. Crookes's reply to Dr. Carpenter on a personal question. The conclusion of Mr. F. Harrison's essay on the Soul and Future Life dispels the uncertainty in which the first part of his essay left his views on the latter topic. Sir Julius Vogel will have most Englishmen with him in deprecating the dismemberment of our colonial empire, but very few in maintaining that the secession of a colony ought to be prevented by force. Cardinal Manning concludes his papers on the Vatican Council, Mr. Froude continues his on Thomas à Becket, and Mr. Brassey begins a narrative of his recent voyage round the world.

Mr. Gladstone's paper in the Contemporary Review on Piracy in Borneo revives a controversy which has ceased to interest, and is chiefly remarkable for the amusing unconsciousness with which the writer delineates himself in trying to paint Sir James Brooke:—"His energies were extraordinary; his ideal was high; his affections were warm; his judgment was unsafe. He was by temperament and habit a man of very strong will, contemplating habitually objects good in themselves, but leaning to arbitrary modes of action." How like a certain ex-Premier, if he was all this! The Duke of Argyll's essay on "Morality in Politics" resolves itself into a plea for interference with Turkey to the extent of depriving her of Constantinople. At the same time, his Grace does not wish to give Constantinople to Russia, but what he would have he does not tell us. Dr. Wallace, in an able review of the present theological ferment in Scotland, directs attention to the intellectual affinity of Calvinism and Darwinism, implying that the former creed, if the position of its supporters in Scotland should become as untenable as circumstances seem to foreshadow, may pass without much violence into the latter. The gem of the number is Miss Julia Wedgwood's beautiful essay on the refined tenderness and large humanity which render Virgil a link between the ancient and the modern world.

The Atlantic Monthly commences a new story by Mr. T. B. Aldrich, "The Queen of Sheba," which promises well. There is also a good story by Miss Rose Terry Cooke. Mr. Russell Lavell and Mr. Cranch contribute short poems of considerable merit; and Mr. E. H. Knight continues his series of papers on the curiosities of the Philadelphia Exhibition, the subject this time being the musical instruments of savage nations. The most interesting among the miscellaneous contributions is General Garfield's "Century of Congress," an essay embodying several suggestions for constitutional reform.

The most important paper in The Month is a defence of the Jesuits against some recent assailants. The Argonaut has passed into the editorial management of the Rev. Paxton Hood, but preserves all its customary features.

The Gentleman's Magazine is, as usual, very lively and agreeable, the most entertaining, after Mr. Justin McCarthy's "Miss Misanthrope," is perhaps Mr. Collett Sandars's amusing and at the same time really learned disquisition on asparagus. We may add as deserving of especial attention Miss Minnie Mackay's poem, "A Dream of Sappho," and Mr. R. H. Shepherd's account of the recent discovery of Charles and Mary Lamb's long lost "Poetry for Children," with numerous specimens of the work. "Proud Maisie," spirited and brilliant as ever, continues to be the chief attraction of London Society. In Belgravia, which is much better this month than of late, we have to remark the continuation of Mr. J. Payne's tragic-comic Chinese romance, a very good short story entitled "Frighted with False Fire," and Miss Kate Field's biography of Dr. Schliemann. The Dublin University promises well under its new management, and is especially noticeable for an able essay on ancient Egyptian religion, and a memoir, with a photographic portrait, of Dr. Birch, of the British Museum.

A new journal, under the title of "Industrial Art," has appeared this month. It is a monthly review of technical and scientific education at home and abroad, and is published at one shilling.

We have also to acknowledge the St. James's Magazine, Good Words, the Charing-Cross Magazine, Cassell's Family Magazine, the Churchman's Shilling Magazine, the Poet's Magazine, Golden Hours, the Victoria Magazine, the Argosy, the Sunday Magazine, Sunday at Home, the Garden, Gardener's Magazine, Science Gossip, Weekly Welcome, and the Leisure Hour. Among the fashion magazines are the Ladies' Treasury, Milliner and Dressmaker, Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, and the Young Englishwoman.

EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK HOUSE.

To the number of public buildings which have disappeared in the march of improvements during the last few years another former landmark of commerce will soon be added. The Dock House of the East and West India Dock Company, in Billiter-square, which has long occupied a prominent position in the minds of commercial men, its history being associated with the early career of many a merchant prince, will shortly be levelled, in order to make way for new avenues and approaches to the neighbourhood of Lime-street. The directors of the Dock Company have therefore erected in Billiter-street the handsome large building which is the subject of our illustration, and which is to supply the place of the one about to be removed. The foundation-stone was laid on Dec. 6 last by Mr. Percival Bosanquet, chairman of the board, in the presence of Sir William J. W. Baynes, Bart. (deputy-chairman), Messrs. Alexander, Ewing, Hankey, Hawthorn, Hill, Kingston, Lambert, Manning, Neilson, Powell, Robertson, Schuster, Wigram, Willis, Lidderdale, and Campbell, (directors), Mr. J. L. Du Plat Taylor (secretary), and Messrs. Baily, Parton, Manning, Clark, Aslat, Sheppy, Harrison, Dring, and other leading officials. Mr. A. Manning, engineer of the Dock Company, is the architect; and Messrs. Merritt and Ashby are the builders. The new edifice comprises all the offices and other accommodation required for the extensive and increasing town business of this eminent company, which owns four great docks, besides their tributaries, and several extensive ranges of warehouses. The new Dock House is an important addition to the street architecture of the city of London.

Mr. W. J. Thoms, writing to Notes and Queries, says:—"In spite of all my inquiries I have failed in obtaining any evidence of Mr. Morgan's age; but information has reached me that the reported centenarian banquet at Richmond on May 21 has been declared to be a hoax."

When the Lord Mayor took his seat in the justice-room of the Mansion House last Saturday there was not a single prisoner on trial, and the Chief Clerk, in accordance with custom on such occasions, presented his Lordship with a pair of white gloves.—Lord Chief Baron Kelly received a pair of white gloves on the same day, for the same reason, at Dolgelly from the High Sheriff of Merioneth, and in accepting them said it was the first time during a long judicial career that he had received such a present.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Taken as a whole, the proceedings at Newmarket last week were sadly deficient in interest, and the racing on the Thursday and Friday may be dismissed in a very few lines. A capital field of thirteen contested the Chesterfield Stakes, yet such was the private reputation of Childeric, a dark colt by Scottish Chief—Gertrude, in Lord Falmouth's stable, that odds were laid upon him. He proved worthy of the confidence reposed in him; still his backers were on thorns until the numbers went up, as he only beat the Emily filly by a head, after a tremendous finish. It must be admitted, however, that he is still very backward, and it seems the general impression that he is the best two-year-old that has run during the present season. Scottish Chief thus takes the honours both in the July and Chesterfield Stakes, as Strathfleet, the winner of the former race, is also by Mr. Blenkiron's recent purchase. The match between the Prince of Wales's Arab horse Alep and Lord Strathnairn's Avowal, over the B.C., was the chief attraction of the Friday, and, for the first time, the Princess of Wales honoured Newmarket with her presence. Odds varying from four to two to one were laid on Alep; but we fancy "the wish was father to the thought," as it has been proved over and over again that Arabs have no chance with our horses, and the hitherto unbeaten Alep struggled home some forty lengths behind his very moderate opponent. We trust that it will not be long before the Prince's colours are seen again in public, and that on the next occasion he will have a more worthy representative.

In spite of the inducement of added money to the amount of nearly £4000, the Liverpool meeting has not been a genuine success this season, the fields being far smaller than the enterprising lessees had every right to expect. The result of the rich St. George Stakes seemed to dispose of any chance that Strathmore was supposed to have for the St. Leger, as Winchester beat him easily. Birdie displayed unsuspected staying powers in the Mersey Stakes, and inaugurated a series of successes for Lord Lonsdale, who won four races on Tuesday and Wednesday. Those who saw Trappist canter home under the welter weight of 9 st. 10 lb. in the Molyneux Cup could scarcely believe him to be the same horse who had "toiled in vain" behind Springfield at Newmarket last week, and the form of the latter seems more marvellous than ever. There were two pleasant days' racing at Winchester, where the crack jockey, James Goater, filled the post of clerk of the course; but the various events demand no special comment.

Continuing our remarks on the sales of blood stock at Newmarket last week, we note that ten yearlings bred at the Montmore Stud made the capital average of 415 gs., though the premier of the lot was Danby, by King Tom—Bay Rosalind, who was knocked down at 700 gs. An average of 244 gs. for nine from the Bonchill establishment hardly represents their value, and St. Bruno, a grand-looking bay colt by Musket from Monaca, was decidedly cheap at 920 gs. In the evening there was only a scanty attendance; still an own brother to that genuine stayer, Challenge, excited a good deal of competition, and eventually fell to the Duke of Hamilton's bid of 700 gs. Proceedings were very dull on the Friday, when the chief feature of interest was the disposal of the stud of Mr. A. Baltazzi, who, however, did not offer the mysterious Kisker. John Day (2650 gs.) sold well; but we do not think that Cæruleus (1050 gs.) made as much as was generally anticipated.

Lord Hartington was elected, at the last meeting of the Jockey Club, steward, in the place of the late Admiral Rous. The stewards suggested that the club should consider what form a memorial to the late Admiral Rous should take, so that the club might mark their sense of respect for the memory of one whose loss they so deeply felt. The motion was carried, and a committee appointed, of which the Prince of Wales is a member, he having been present at the meeting.

The fine dry weather of the last few days makes wickets play unusually true, and large scores have been the order of the day all over the country. In the third match between Gentlemen and Players, which came off at Princes', the former team won by nine wickets. Mr. G. F. Grace (134) batted splendidly, and he was ably assisted by Messrs. W. W. Read (72), F. M. Buckland (50), and H. G. Tykocote (not out, 37). Ulyett (53 and 118) did yeoman service for the Players. The match between Notts and Lancashire was a very curious one, as the former team could do nothing with the bowling of McIntyre and Watson—unchanged throughout the two innings—and were all disposed of twice for the aggregate of 135, leaving Lancashire to score a very meritorious victory by 191 runs. This week Kent has beaten Sussex by ten wickets, a result mainly due to the batting of Messrs. F. Penn (61) and W. Foord-Kelcey (74), and the fine bowling of Hearn, who took eleven wickets. Middlesex v. Notts, for the benefit of Hewitt, proved a great batsman's match. Oseroff (43), Shrewsbury (54), Daft (96), and Flowers (43) greatly assisted the Notts team to a victory by ten wickets; and, on the other side, Messrs. A. J. Webbe (62), H. R. Webbe (63), and I. D. Walker (34 and 89) gave the scorers plenty of work. As might have been expected, Yorkshire beat Derbyshire by nine wickets, W. Riggley (25 and 57) batting very well for the losers; but the other side were too strong, as Myers (not out, 45), Greenwood (not out, 35), Lockwood (45), and Emmett (70) all "came off."

The annual meeting held by the All-England Croquet Club to decide who is to bear the title of champion for the year came off last week at Wimbledon, and was even more successful than the other tournaments which have already been held this year. Five Englishmen entered, and against them came two Scotchmen and two Irish players, who had never before competed for the championship. Mr. Eveleigh carried off the big prize; and the second fell to Mr. Ogle Moore, one of the Irish competitors. For the ladies' championship there were two Wimbledon competitors, two from Brighton, two Scotch, and two from the west of England. The final round produced a grand fight between Miss K. Philbrick and Mrs. Davidson, who is lady champion both of the All-England and Brighton clubs. After five close games Miss Philbrick, last year's winner, succeeded in winning the rubber, and is therefore entitled to wear the champion locket for another year.

An open competition for lawn-tennis players has been held this week at Wimbledon, and at the Crystal Palace an archery fête, in which twenty-five clubs from various parts of the kingdom were represented; but neither was completed at the time we went to press with our early edition.

In a Channel race of yachts on Monday from Cowes to Havre, the Latona passed the flag-boat first; but Colonel Stirling's Rover, 100 tons smaller, came in so soon after that, with the time allowance, she was declared the winner.

The return of wrecks, casualties, and collisions from July 1, 1875, to June 30, 1876, shows that the total number of vessels reported to the Board of Trade as wrecked or as having met with casualties at home and abroad was 7998. Of these 1148 were total losses, 2344 serious casualties, and 4506 minor casualties. The total number of lives lost was 2186. In British ships only the total loss of life was 2283.

BYRON MEMORIAL STATUE.

We give an illustration of the design adopted by the Committee of the proposed Byron Memorial for the bronze statue to be erected in Piccadilly. The sculptor is Mr. Richard Belt, who was a pupil of the late Mr. J. H. Foley, R.A., and a student of the Royal Academy. The first public work executed by him was a bust of the late Charles Kingsley for Chester Cathedral, which was in the Royal Academy Exhibition last year, and for a copy of which the sculptor was honoured with a commission by her Majesty the Queen. Among other works already intrusted to Mr. Belt are the monuments of Isaac Walton for Stafford, that of the late Canon Conway, for Westminster and Charlton, and one of Dr. Jabez Burns.

The design of Mr. Belt for the Byron Monument requires no explanation; but we suppose the noble animal which here accompanies his master, as in Sir Walter Scott's monument at Edinburgh, is meant for one that we know actually belonged to the noble poet. The reader will not have forgotten, in Byron's "Hours of Idleness," some lines for inscription on the tomb of a Newfoundland dog at Newstead Abbey:—

But the poor dog, in life the firmest friend,
The first to welcome; foremost to defend;
Whose honest heart is still his master's own,
Who labours, fights, lives, breathes for him alone,
Unhonoured falls, unnoticed all his worth,
Denied in heaven the soul he held on earth.

ROYAL ACADEMY ASSOCIATES.

The election of two new Associates of the Royal Academy, Mr. J. B. Burgess and Mr. P. R. Morris, with that of a new Member, Mr. H. W. B. Davis, who had been an Associate during several past years, was lately announced. We gave a portrait and memoir of Mr. Davis in February, 1873. The portraits of Mr. Burgess and Mr. Morris are now presented to our readers.

ACCEPTED DESIGN FOR THE MEMORIAL STATUE OF LORD BYRON IN PICCADILLY.

Mr. John Bagnold Burgess has been well known these fifteen years past as a favourite painter of characteristic incidents, groups, and figures in Spanish popular life. His conception and treatment of these subjects must be recognised as eminently original; but the celebrity of the late Mr. Phillip's works, dealing with the same class and field of topics for pictorial illustration, may have tended in some degree to retard the special acknowledgment due to Mr. Burgess of his success in this particular department. He was born in London, in 1830, and is a son of the late Mr. H. W. Burgess, who was landscape painter to King William IV. This family is another striking instance of what has often been remarked concerning the hereditary transmission of a genius for art. The grandfather of the present Royal Academy Associate, William Burgess, who died in 1812, was a portrait-painter, one of whose works, in the last Exhibition of Old Masters, caused some inquiries and reminiscences of his career to appear in the daily newspapers. His father, again, Thomas Burgess, great-grandfather of the subject of this Memoir, was teacher of an art school in Maiden-lane, about the middle of the last century, and is said to have given lessons to Gainsborough. There was a younger Thomas Burgess, a landscape artist, who died at a very early age in 1807, and the late Mr. John Cart Burgess, of Leamington, water-colour painter, who excelled in the delineation of flowers, belonged also to this gifted family. Mr. J. B. Burgess lost his father very early, but was a student of the Royal Academy, where he won, in 1851, the first medal ever awarded for drawing from the life model. He was also a pupil of the late Mr. Lee, in Newman-street. He began the practice of his profession as a portrait painter, but felt himself attracted to compositions of incident and of national or social character. Having some family connections residing at Seville, he was induced to visit the kingdom of Spain, about fifteen years ago, in company with his friend Mr. E. Long; and Mr. S. Read has likewise been his travelling comrade in later Spanish excursions. Soon after his first visit to Spain, Mr. Burgess produced that most spirited picture of a scene at a bull-fight, called "Bravo, Toro!" which at once excited general admiration. He has since then continued to supply the Royal Academy Exhibitions with capital examples of the animated and picturesque looks of the Spaniards, and has once or twice crossed over the Straits of Gibraltar to seize upon a good subject from Morocco. One of the finest heads shown in the Exhibition five or six years ago was that of "A Spanish Priest," by Mr. Burgess; his picture of "The Barber's Shop" was very truthful and effective; and "The Child Stolen by Gipsies" is now being engraved for the Art-Union of London. In the Exhibition of this year Mr. Burgess has "Licensing the Beggars," which has not escaped its due notice.

Mr. Philip Richard Morris was born at Devonport, in 1830, but was brought up at Berwick-on-Tweed, and subsequently in London. His father was an engineer and iron-founder; the son was apprenticed to business. He read the biographies of Hogarth and other artists, and resolved to adopt a similar career. His persevering efforts in youth, notwithstanding much opposition, to obtain instruction in art, proved that it was his real vocation. Mr. Holman Hunt is said to have shown him kind encouragement at that period of life. After drawing, without a master, from the Elgin Marbles at the British Museum, Philip Morris, at the age of nineteen, entered the schools of the Royal Academy. There, in 1855, he won the silver medal for the best drawing from the life; next year he won that for the best painting from the nude; afterwards that for painting from the draped figure; and in 1858 the gold medal for the best historical picture, the subject he chose being "The Good Samaritan." In the same year his first picture exhibited was placed on the walls of the Royal Academy; one of an old soldier with a child on his knee, called "Peaceful Days." It was purchased by Mr. Creswick, R.A.; and Mr. Egg, R.A., in 1860, bought another of Mr. Morris's pictures, "Voices from the Sea," which represented fishermen's boats with children playing about them. Mr. Morris, besides winning so many Academy medals, gained the travelling studentship, with which he went to France and Italy. He had already produced "The Widow's Harvest," a scene of Highland peasant life, and "The Captive's Return," an incident of Scottish Highland warfare. On his return to England, while continuing to treat a few Scottish subjects, idyllic and historical, he undertook some high themes of sacred art; "Where they Crucified Him," "The Summit of Calvary," and "The Shadow of the Cross," being the most important of his works belonging to this class, which are characterised by a solemn earnestness of feeling. The incidents related of the dispersion of the Spanish Armada along the Hebrides have furnished Mr. Morris with more than one subject for his art. Pastoral occupations, and those of the seacoast, more especially in North Britain, have been happily dealt with by him. In the Exhibition of this summer he has "The Heir of the Manor" and "The Lost Heir."

Our Portrait of Mr. Burgess and that of Mr. Morris are from photographs by the London Stereoscopic Company.

EXPERIMENTS WITH THE TELEPHONE.

On Thursday afternoon the first public exhibition of the telephone which has been witnessed in this country took place at the Queen's Theatre, in the presence of a large assemblage of scientific, musical, and literary celebrities. It was originally intended that performances should be given simultaneously at the Queen's Theatre and at the Canterbury Hall, on the Surrey side of the Thames, but for the convenience of the invited guests the wires were taken to the Canterbury Hall, and brought back into the Queen's Theatre, both ends of the apparatus being thus brought within view of the united guests. An explanatory address written by the inventor, Mr. Cromwell F. Varley, was read by Mr. J. C. Bennett, who solicited the indulgence of the audience for any shortcomings which might be apparent at this first public trial of the invention, and stated that arrangements were in progress for the transmission of musical sounds from distances of 300 and 500 miles. He also stated that it had been intended to carry on a musical colloquy between London and Brussels, but that the Post-Office authorities had for the present withheld permission to place a wire at the service of the inventor. The instrument was then set to work, and a performer at one end of the two or more thousand yards of wire played "The Blue Bells of Scotland," "The Last Rose of Summer" and "Home, Sweet Home." Allowing for the difficulties attendant on an electrical experiment involving delicate details, the result was completely successful in establishing the fact that musical notes and distinct melodies can be transmitted by means of the telephone. Occasionally the contact was disturbed, and in place of agreeable notes some grunting sounds were heard, which provoked good-natured hilarity. Much oftener, however, the tones were clear, powerful, and of good quality, resembling those of a clarinet, and hearty applause was often elicited.—Globe.

Earl Nelson laid the foundation-stone of a new Mission-house in the parish of All Saints, South Acton, last Saturday.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

Ascot, Henley, Lord's, and Wimbledon, each may be said to exemplify, from one point of view, the strong desire which Society has for open-air pleasure in the season of the year when custom renders it imperative for the wealthiest part of the nation to remain in town. The racecourse, river, and famous cricket-ground whereon the Eton and Harrow Elevens are now contending for mastery have various attractions for the pleasure-seeker. But the allurements of Wimbledon are unique. On the breezy common, those favoured with invitations to Lady Wharncliffe's receptions should be thoroughly at ease, and should catch some spark of that delightful freedom which the rifleman experiences in camping out when the weather is fine. For the volunteers the Wimbledon fortnight is to a canny minority a period of strict and rigid observance of the prudent rules necessary for success at the targets, and to the majority a time of unstinted hospitality to the hosts of friends who troop to "Canvas Town." The London Scots, the Victorias, the London Rifle Brigade, the 3rd London, the South Middlesex, the Civil Service Corps, Queen's (Westminster), 1st Surrey, and the Hon. Artillery Company, as is usual with many of them, went under canvas several days before the formal opening of the National Rifle Association Meeting. But by Saturday last hundreds of volunteers had gathered together at Wimbledon from all parts of the kingdom. They were, happily, undisturbed by the thunderstorm which visited the north of London that evening. A heavy downpour of rain on Sunday, however, threatened to throw a damper on the spirits of the sharpshooters, for the benefit of whom the Rev. J. Wallis conducted Divine service. The Canadian team, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Growski and Major Aylmer, were among the most honoured guests, we need scarcely say.

Shooting began on Monday in fine, dry weather, despite the clouds of Sunday. A little change had been made in the targets. Each shot striking the corner was made to count as an "outer" instead of reckoning nothing. To counterbalance this, the concentric circles at the 200 yards range were lessened in size. On the first day several good scores were made. For the Windmill series of prizes Sergeant Paton, 1st Lanark, was credited with seven bull's-eyes, the highest possible, at 500 yards. Lieutenant Danks, 8th Worcester, was at the top of the tree with 33 in the first stage for the Alexandra Prizes. The Alfred Prize was won by Sergeant Bartlett, of the Royal Marines, with a score of 33. On Tuesday the Daily Telegraph prize, an elegant cup, was won by Private Mackenzie, H.A.C., with 34 points.

The Queen's Prize attracted 2212 entries. Competition began on Tuesday at the 200-yards range, the chief scores being made by Lieutenant Backhouse, 24th Lancashire, credited with 33; Major Young, 39th Middlesex, Lieutenant M'Kerrell, 15th Middlesex, and Private Culling, St. George's, 32; Colour-Sergeant Purcell, 29th Middlesex, and Private Rosenthal, St. George's, 31. On Wednesday, the highest aggregate scores at 200 and 500 yards returned for the first stage of the Queen's Prize were those of Sergeant Cumming, 6th Dumfriess, and Private Harriid, 26th Kent, who each scored 61. The latter made seven bull's-eyes at 500 yards, and this, the highest possible score, was also made at the long range by Private Frost, of the same regiment, whose total, however, was only 57. Scores of 60 points were recorded for Private Rosenthal, St. George's; Lieutenant Sharpe, 41st Middlesex; Private Jamieson, 15th Lancashire; Corporal Foster, 9th Lancashire; Corporal Mullineux, 40th Lancashire; Sergeant Jones, Queen's (Westminster); Private Boyd, 2nd Ayr; Sergeant Liffitt, 1st Isle of Wight; and Corporal Betts, 1st Norfolk. The shooting at 600 yards, the last range of the first stage for the Queen's Prize, was finished on Thursday, the winner of £60, with the National Rifle Association's silver medal, and the silver badge, being Corporal Betts:—

Corporal Betts (1st Norfolk)	30	31	31	92
Private Hobbiss, 2nd South Middlesex	28	points;	Sergeant Thurlow, 1st Suffolk, 87; and Sergeant Liffitt, Isle of Wight, and Lieutenant Sharpe, 41st Middlesex, 85 each.

There are three 84's.

The first prize in the Pavilion series on Wednesday was won by Sergeant Gilder, 18th Middlesex, with a score of thirty-five; the second prize falling to Private A. P. Humphry, Cambridge University, the Queen's Prize winner a few years ago. Capital scores have been made in various other competitions, not yet concluded; and there has been good practice at the running deer and at the new torpedo target—the novelty of the meeting.

The remaining fixtures will take place on the following days:—Prince of Wales's and St. George's, Friday, 13th; China Cup for county teams and Belgian Challenge Cup for volley firing, Saturday, 14th; Lords and Commons, 3 p.m.; Albert, Monday, 16th; Queen's Prize and Gold Medal of Meeting, second stage of Albert and Volunteer Cadets, Tuesday, 17th; General Eyre's Army Prizes, and the contest between the Army and the Volunteers for the Donegall Cup, Wednesday, 18th; the grand contest for the Elcho Shield, the Public Schools, the Oxford and Cambridge match, and the Army and Navy second stage, Thursday, 19th; the Mounted Rifle, the Duke of Cambridge's the Dudley, and the Bass, Friday, 20th. It has been determined that this year a United Kingdom team shall compete at Creedmoor (America) for the Centennial Trophy, and, there being no funds at the disposal of the National Rifle Association for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such team, it is understood that a subscription will be opened with the view of raising a fund for that purpose. Three new prizes are to be given. The most important is one presented by the Rifle Association of Canada, to be held for the year by the battalion to which the highest score in the Grand Aggregate Prize belongs. The value of this last prize has, by-the-way, been most materially increased this year. It is divided among the fifty whose scores in the first stage of the Queen's Prize, the St. George's Vase, the Martin's Cup, the Alfred, the Alexandra, and the Windmill, at 200 and 500 yards, make up the highest aggregates. Hitherto the amount to be divided has been £160, but this year it will be no less than £500—a very notable and handsome increase. The other two new prizes are a rifle given by Messrs. Gye and Moncrieff, of St. James's-street, to be won at the Running Deer; and 100 guineas, in lieu of a billiard-table, given by Messrs. Burroughes and Watts.

Next Sunday's camp sermon will be preached in the morning by the Rev. J. M'Connell Hussey, of Christ Church, North Brixton.

The Duke of Cambridge is to present the prizes on Saturday, July 21, when there is to be no review, but, instead, a Volunteer athletic festival, such as brought the Wimbledon meeting to a close last year.

Several metropolitan Volunteer regiments were inspected on Saturday last.

The 36th Middlesex (Paddington), numbering 1000 men, were inspected in Hyde Park by Colonel Fitzroy, of the Coldstream Guards. The regiment, of whom 845 of all ranks were on parade, under Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Ives, were in ten companies. After receiving the inspecting officer with a salute, a march-past took place in column, close column, and at the double. A long series of manoeuvres, in which the new formation of attack occupied a prominent place, followed, and the drill was brought to a close by several of the captains and subalterns being tested in their knowledge of handling a battalion and company respectively. The inspecting officer made no address, but was understood to be well satisfied. The ground was excellently kept by the 20th Middlesex and a detachment of police.

Upon the old Exhibition ground, Hyde Park, the London Irish, of whom 815, in twelve companies, assembled under Lieutenant-Colonel Ward, were inspected by Colonel the Hon. Percy Feilding, C.B., of the Coldstream Guards. After the usual reception of the inspecting officer, the regiment marched past, the distances and dressing being good. The drill which followed included the new attack formation, and at its conclusion Colonel Feilding expressed himself well pleased with their appearance and the manner in which they had performed the movements. He also paid them a compliment for the excellent condition in which he found their arms. The ground was kept by the 3rd London. Colonel the Marquis of Donegall was present during the inspection.

The 39th Middlesex (Finsbury) who mustered strongly, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, were inspected in Albany Barracks-square.

At the Lambeth Palace-grounds the 7th Surrey were inspected by Colonel Hyde Page. The corps, in six strong companies, was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Astley Campbell Smith. After the march past a series of battalion movements, including the new attack formation, were executed very steadily, and each company put through company drill by its own captain. At the conclusion of the inspection Colonel Hyde Page said he was glad to see such an improvement in the appearance and muster of the corps, and should be able to make a very satisfactory report of it to the War Office. Colonel Beresford, M.P., and Lieutenant-Colonel Moseley were on the ground during the inspection.

The Victoria Rifles, under Major Anderson, had their official inspection at their headquarters last week by Colonel Fitzroy, who, in pursuance of his usual habit, did not make any address.

A match was fired for the Inland Revenue Cup at Wormwood-scrubbs last week between the 1 company Queen's Westminster (the holders) and the H company London Rifle Brigade, which resulted in a victory for the latter by 14 points, the cup thus returning to the previous holders.

A match between teams of nine men of the 19th Surrey and 49th Middlesex took place at Esher last week, when the latter were victorious by 29 points, they scoring 596 against 567 by their opponents.

The battalion prize meeting of the 38th Middlesex (Artists') took place at Ealing on Monday and Thursday last week. The first series consisted of ten prizes given from the regimental prize fund, and Privates Bridgman, Downe, and Brock headed the list of winners. The second series was restricted to marksmen, and the prizes consisted of a study in oil, given by the commanding officer (F. Leighton, R.A.), and gifts from Private Oules, A.R.A., Major Busk, Captain Roberts, C. Cattermole, Esq., Lieutenant Wilson, and others, which were won by Private Hay, Private Webb, Lieutenant Spiers, Private Boucher, Sergeant Hart, and Sergeant Rich. On the Thursday Private Hay won the grand aggregate prize and the "Black Jack" for rapid firing. In a series for recruits Private Frapp was the winner; and in a series for second-class shots, Sergeant Horsley. A volley competition was won by B and C companies united against the rest of the battalion.

The athletic sports of the cadets of the London Rifle Brigade were held last Saturday at the 1st Surrey head-quarters at Camberwell, those of the Hon. Artillery Company also taking place at their head-quarters in Finsbury.

Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Charles Russell, V.C., late Grenadier Guards, has accepted and been gazetted to the hon. colonelcy of the 46th Middlesex.

A lecture to volunteer officers was given on Monday at the Royal United Service Institution by Captain Hummel, of the St. George's Rifles, on the Discipline of the Volunteer Force.

At the Aberdeen rifle meeting, held during the past week, the following were the winners of the bronze medals of the National Rifle Association, entitling them to compete for the Prince of Wales's prize at Wimbledon this week:—Aberdeenshire, Private Kean, 3rd Company City Rifles; Kincardineshire, Private John Ross, Banffshire; Banffshire, Sergeant G. Wood, Buckie; and Morayshire, Captain Grant, Rothes.

The Royal Agricultural Society opened its show of cattle, sheep, and pigs at Liverpool on Wednesday. In several classes the competition was very close, and the judges were occupied a long time in deciding between the almost evenly balanced merits of some of the animals. The first prize for two-year-old shorthorn bulls was taken by the Duke of Northumberland, and Mr. F. Linton, of Sheriff Hutton, was first for three-year-olds. The Earl of Ellesmere took first prize for agricultural horses; and Mr. W. Wynn, of Stratford-on-Avon, second. The entries of machinery far exceed those of any previous year. A sad accident happened about two o'clock. Whilst Mr. Wilson, the proprietor of the Railway Hotel, Cork, was watching the operation of the patent emery-grinder, the wheel flew into several pieces, one striking Mr. Wilson on the forehead and causing instant death.

THE WAR: READING WAR TELEGRAMS IN THE NEVSKY PROSPECT, ST. PETERSBURG.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

After "dropping his P.P.C.'s"—is that the correct term for taking leave per visiting card?—to the extent of about 4000 pieces of pasteboard, General Grant has bidden us a temporary farewell. He will return, I hope, with the swallows, next spring. I had the honour, recently, to make one of a party of journalists invited by Mr. J. Russell Young, of the New York Herald, to meet the whilom Chief Magistrate of the United States at dinner at the Grosvenor Hotel. There was no speech-making—even the health of the guest of the evening was, at his own particular request, not proposed—but, en revanche, the majority of the company "took it out" in tobacco. I did not hear the hero of Vicksburg utter one word; but I noted with glee that "Unconditional Surrender Grant" was the first to kindle a Regalia Imperiale, long, comparatively speaking, as the mast of "some tall ammiral," at which he proceeded to puff so vigorously that the idea of anybody else "puffing" him became absurd.

This joyful portent led me mentally to add a rider to the Arabic proverb (it is not German, and it is not Mr. Carlyle's) which tells us that speech is silver but that silence is golden. Silence combined with a cigar may surely be pronounced a diamond. "Add yet another," I continued, sotto voce, "to the catalogue of great men whom I have seen smoking. Napoleon III., George Stephenson, Dickens, Thackeray, Brunel, Bismarck, Winterhalter, John Bright, and now Ulysses S. Grant." "My father," said Mr. Jesse Grant to me, at the Grosvenor (I hope that I am not violating the proprieties by repeating the remark) "smokes all the time." It is surely better to smoke "all the time" than to carry rappee loose in one's waistcoat pocket, and snuff continually, as Napoleon I. did. And it is better, perhaps, mi fili, not to smoke at all. By abstaining from tobacco and kindred indulgences, you may live to be ninety years of age;—to survive your friends, your memory, and your eyesight, and live to die, mayhap, in the "infirm" ward of a workhouse.

I have noticed in a good many paragraphs lately the statement that General Grant is the only ex-President of the United States on whom her Majesty has set eyes. It may not, however, be generally known that Queen Victoria's august father, the Duke of Kent, saw and conversed with the First of American Presidents—the man who was First in war, First in peace, and First in the hearts of his countrymen, George Washington. I picked up, some years since, an old print representing one of "Lady" Washington's New-Year's Day Receptions (the wife of the Father of his country was always styled "Lady" by old-fashioned Democrats; and among the guests is a bluff young gentleman in military uniform, who is "figured" in the key to the engraving as "Prince Edward of Great Britain." The Prince, not yet created Duke of Kent, had come from his British American command to do honour to the Cincinnatus of the West.

I see with regret that M. Ernest Griset, the very clever caricaturist and animal draughtsman, is dead. He had in him, seemingly, all the making of a great artist; but, I know not why, he halted after he had passed the threshold of the temple of Fame, and did not penetrate much beyond the vestibule. His touch, when he drew on wood, was somewhat thick and blurred; and that defect may perchance have had something to do with the obscurity and uncertainty which occasionally veiled the humour of his artistic expression. The late Mark Lemon tried him on Punch; but Ernest Griset failed to make any very brilliant mark in the columns of that periodical. As a delineator of animals, preferably wild ones, M. Griset was, on the other hand, unquestionably powerful. I remember—it must be at least sixteen years ago—buying for a couple of shillings, in a "shop no bigger than a birdcage," near Leicester-square, a drawing of a dead lion in chalk, lightly underlaid with water colour, which was simply superb. Nor Wolf, nor Zwecker, nor even Briton Rivière, could, I think, have made a more forcible sketch. But a sketcher the poor gentleman remained.

The New York World, and not I, must be responsible for the statement that Dr. Schliemann has been so terribly lionised during the fashionable London season, now happily drawing to a close, that, on being pressed by a distinguished American lady portrait-painter, authoress, actress, and lecturer, to give her a sitting he was unable, through stress of invitations, to fix any hour less untimely for the purpose than five in the morning. So at five a.m. the Doctor arrived at the lady's studio. He was in full evening costume, having just come from the Duchess of Sennacherib's "small and early," which had begun at 2.30; but he found the fair artist in a pink ball-dress trimmed with bouillonnés—is that the word?—of white tulle. She likewise was a votary and a victim of fashion, and had been up all night.

A little query concerning Homer, Dr. Schliemann, if you please. What is the "correct card" of the seven cities which claimed to have given birth to the Father of Poetry? Laugh not at my ignorance. I do not often consult Lemprière—to whom, according to the reviewers, the wretched modern journalist is indebted for all the classical allusions in which he ventures to indulge;—but happening the other day to turn up Dr. Lemprière's diverting compilation, I stumbled on the lines with which, I suppose, most people are familiar:—

Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, Salamis, Rhodes, Argos, Athens, Orbis de patriâ certat, Homere, tui.

If the lines be familiar to all, why quote them, you may ask. I do so for this reason. In a collection of ancient Greek saws and sayings which I purchased at Athens last January I came on the following:—

Hepta poleis marmotto sophen dia risan Homerou: Smyrna, Chios, Kolophon, Ithakê, Pylos, Argos, Athenai.

Who substituted Ithaca and Pylos for Salamis and Rhodes, or vice versa, and which is the correct version of this ancient "we are seven?"

There died at Peerless Point, Lake George, U.S.A., on June 25, Robert Dale Owen, the remarkable son of a more remarkable father. He was the eldest son of the noted Robert Owen, the Socialistic Reformer and founder of the colony of Utopia—I mean of New Harmony—that strange Communitistic phalanstery which came to such signal grief on the banks of the Wabash, in the State of Indiana. Robert Dale Owen, who was born at Glasgow in 1801, and educated in Switzerland, became an American citizen, and, what is more, an American of the Americans. He was at one time a member of Congress, and subsequently served the Republic as U.S. Minister at Naples. In this country and in Spiritualist circles Mr. Owen will be chiefly remembered as the author of that queerest of books—only one out of a mass of Spiritualistic literature which he produced—called "Footfalls on the Boundaries of Another World." I will not say that he was mad. I am too mad myself to risk recrimination by accusing my neighbours of craziness; but I may hint that Robert Dale Owen was assuredly a very odd personage. One of the oddest things he did was to believe in the existence of the "bogus" spirit "Katie King," to repudiate her, and then to believe in her again. Why not? I have an old silver watch which I gave over (after believing in it for a long time) as an arrant impostor ever so many years ago. But, lo! my old watch has lately taken to keeping capital time, and I have again begun to believe in it.

The minutest item of typographical lore may be of interest just now, when the star of William Caxton is in the ascendant at South Kensington. I found the other day, in (of all places in the world) Pierce Egan's "Book of Sports," the statement that the late Mr. John Bell, one of the proprietors of the Morning Post, of "a fashionable morning newspaper called The World, and the founder of Bell's Weekly Messenger, was the first English printer who introduced the round or short s into all the papers published by him. At a venture I opened a volume of the Examiner for the year 1809, and one of the Literary Panorama for the same year, and in neither work could I find any instance of the use of the long s (ſ) at the beginning or at the end of words; so that if Mr. Bell did introduce this reform, his example must have been speedily followed by other printers. On the other hand, in a mouldy little duodecimo, an account of the Popish plot, printed in 1681, I find the long ſ in abundance; and I likewise discover it at so late a date as 1784 in a volume of Dr. Maty's New Review. An unconscionable number of years seem to be required before we consent to move, but when we once begin, we move with a vengeance.

Mem.: The Editor of Mr. Bell's World was, so says Pierce Egan, "the high-minded and dashing Captain Topham." Where did the Captain dash, and to what height did his mind attain?

Suffering last week from a slight attack of intermittent but chronic stupidity, I said that Mr. Eugene Schuyler was one of the best-hated "Europeans" in Turkey. Everybody knows that Mr. Schuyler is an American, a descendant of one of the oldest Dutch families in the State of New York. I should have said that he was one of the Franks whom the Ottomans detest most cordially. It fortunately happens that I am able to mingle with the apology for my blunder my heartiest congratulations to the distinguished American diplomatist, who was married on Thursday, in Paris, to Miss Gertrude King, of New York.

It is not a genteel, it is not an elegant, and it is scarcely a grammatical expression to say that you have been "struck comical;" yet such is precisely the kind of mental concussion which I experienced at reading in one of the Gazettes des Modes for July that there was some probability of odd gloves being worn by ladies during the seaside season. Odd gloves! Such an announcement does not strike you dumb; it does not strike you with horror. It only strikes you comical. If the new fashion be really introduced, I shall at once demand its extension to my own sex. Men who smoke in the open air, and who are continually fumbling in their pockets for money to pay cabmen, rarely wear more than one glove; the other is kept dangling or crumpled up, but it does not get so soiled as the glove which is worn. Thus, if a gentleman glove-wearer has exercised thrift, and has saved each residuary handkerchief, he should after, say, twenty years' experience be the possessor (allowing him a pair of gloves per week) of 1040 odd gloves.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE WAR.

The passage of the Danube by the Russian army, first at Braila and Galatz, to Matchin in the Dobrudscha, on the 21st ult., and five days later, on the 26th and 27th, at Simnizta, PLAN OF THE COUNTRY BETWEEN ERZEROUH AND KARS.

nearly opposite the Bulgarian town of Sistova, furnishes the subjects of our principal illustrations in this Number. The crossing at Braila, sketched by one of our Special Artists from Ghetchet, at the entrance to the Matchin channel, on the Bulgarian or Dobrudscha shore of the Danube, is represented in the large Engraving which forms our Extra Supplement. The Engraving that occupies the two middle pages of our whole sheet is from a sketch, taken of course by another Special Artist, of the Russians crossing at Vardin island, just below Simnizta; and the town of Sistova, on the opposite bank, is shown to the right hand. One of our Artists on the Turkish side has contributed the sketch of a night scene in the beleaguered town of Rustchuk, with the Turkish soldiery lounging or sitting beside their watchfires in the street, when they were in hourly expectation of a Russian attack. But no such attempt has yet been actually made at that part of the Danube, and the active operations at Rustchuk have been confined to a merciless bombardment from the Gurgevo batteries across the river. There is also to be mentioned the sketch of a halter-skelter flight of Turkish irregular cavalry, or Bashi-Bazouks, from the town of Nicopolis, when that place was threatened by the Russians at Turnu Magureli, simultaneously with their capture of Sistova. The situation of these and other towns, frequently named in recent accounts of the military operations, will be perceived by a glance at our Map of the central parts of Bulgaria, from Rahova down to Oltenitza and Turtukai, including a space of 150 miles from west to east, and ninety-five miles from north to south. The reader should look for the River Yantra, which flows northward to join the Danube some little distance below Sistova. He will observe that the Russian march through Bulgaria now lies from Sistova up the course of this river; and the most recent conflicts have taken place at Biela, or Byela as it stands in our map, where the Turks endeavoured to stop their advance, notwithstanding which opposition they have established themselves at Tirnova (Turnov or Trneva), the ancient Bulgarian capital. The names "Zimnizta" and "Nikopoli" in our map, as drawn by a German geographer, differ slightly in mere orthography from those current in the English newspapers; but this will not cause any difficulty in understanding what places are meant. The present map does not extend so far east as the Dobrudscha, of which region a separate map has been given in our Journal. One or two less important incidents of the campaign in the Danubian provinces are represented in other sketches by our Artists at the Russian head-quarters. The Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia, Commander-in-Chief of the Army, accompanied by Prince Charles of Roumania and his Princess, is seen looking on at a peculiar entertainment, the Rouman national dance of "the Hora," performed in costume by young ladies and gentlemen of that country. Another sketch, of not so agreeable a character, shows the guard escorting a few camp spies and camp thieves from the Russian army, to be confined in the State prison at Vacaresti, not far from the city of Bucharest.

In Asia, between Erzeroum and Kars, where the Russians have not been very fortunate, we have now two Special Artists employed with the Turkish army. The sketches that appear on the front page of this week's Number were taken at Baiburt, which is half way on the road from Trebizond to the city of Erzeroum. They show a great bustle of Turkish military preparations; but the portrait of Ferik Pasha, a Circassian chief, a reputed son of the famous Schamyl, may perhaps be more interesting to our readers. Schamyl, from 1824 to 1859, was the unconquerable champion and leader of his countrymen in their desperate struggle against the Russian Empire, till he became a captive at St. Petersburg, and made his submission to the Czar. We are not so well informed of the personal history of Ferik Pasha.

Our sketch map is intended to illustrate the operations of the Turkish and Russian forces in Armenia since the 12th ult. On that day Mukhtar Pasha, in command of the Turkish centre, occupied a fortified camp at Zewin, or Zivin, to the west of the Soghanly Dag. His force consisted of eighteen battalions, one squadron, twenty-four guns, and 1200 Circassians. The right wing of the Turks, under the command of Mahmoud Pasha, guarded the passes over the Kose Dag. Khorassan was held by a battalion and two guns, whilst at Delibaba, and in advance of it, were fourteen battalions, with twelve guns, three squadrons of cavalry, and 400 irregulars. The left wing of the Turks, under Rashid Pasha, had occupied Olti, after its evacuation by the Russians. It consisted of eight battalions, two regiments of cavalry, six guns, and 1200 Circassians. Smaller detachments of troops held Koprikoi, Hassankale, and the Deve-boyun Pass, on the road from Khorassan to Erzeroum, and the Girje Boghaz to the north of that town, which was occupied by six battalions with forty-eight guns.

The Turkish centre at Zivin was attacked by the Russians on the 26th ult., but maintained its position, and the Russians slowly retired in the direction of Kars. On the 30th the Turks left their intrenchments, and, proceeding very cautiously, followed the retreating Russians. On the 7th inst. the Turkish head-quarters were at Karahamza (twenty-one miles from Kars), and the advanced guard at Begli Ahmed (thirteen miles from Kars). The Turkish right suffered a defeat at Dagha (Tahir) on the 16th ult. They fought again, more successfully, on the 20th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd; and finally succeeded in forcing the Russians to retreat in the direction of Bayazid. Zeidikan, Alashgerd or Toprak kala, Karakilissa, and Uch Kilissa (Surp Ovhanes, or St. John's Monastery) successively fell into the hands of the Turks; but on the 7th inst. the Russians appear to have made a successful stand at Ipek and Mesyn Gedik, to the north-east of Diadin, and not far from the Russian boundary. In the mean time, a column of Russian troops had left Erivan for the relief of Bayazid. On the 6th inst. it arrived at Igdir, seventy miles north of that town. The Russians, who are stated to have engaged the Turks to the north of Bayazid, probably belonged to this corps, and not to the retreating column of General Tergusakof.

A review of the more recent operations of the war, during the past week, and some additional details, will be found in another page.

THE THIRD ROYAL SURREY MILITIA.

We give an illustration of the scene in Bushey Park, in the afternoon of yesterday week. Her Royal Highness Princess Mary of Cambridge, Duchess of Teck, accompanied by the Duke of Teck and attended by Lady Caroline Cust and Colonel Greville, presented new colours to the 3rd Royal Surrey Militia. The consecration ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Winchester. The colours having been handed to Princess Mary, she presented them to Lieutenants Morier and Waters, who received them kneeling. Her Royal Highness expressed her belief that, should ever the necessity arise, the regiment would know how to defend their colours. Later in the afternoon Colonel Stringer and the officers of the regiment entertained the Princess Mary at a déjeûner in the Drill-hall, Kingston-on-Thames.

Mr. Gainsford Bruce, of the North-Eastern Circuit, has been appointed Recorder of Bradford.

We have news from Capetown by telegraph from Madeira to June 10. The only important piece of intelligence transmitted is the statement that war has broken out between the two powerful native chiefs Papur and Secundi, who reside on the north-eastern boundary of the Transvaal.

The address voted by the Servian Skupstchina to the Speech from the Throne has been presented to Prince Milan by a deputation of the House. It expresses the approval of the Servian people of the Prince's views concerning the necessity of concord and circumspection under present circumstances. The address further states that the nation relies hopefully on the patriotic vigilance of the Prince, and has full confidence in the Government.—Prince Milan has conferred the gold cross of the Takovo Order upon Mr. William Collingridge, in acknowledgment of services rendered during the Tuko-Servian war. Mr. Collingridge was the first English surgeon upon the Servian field.

NAMES AND THINGS.

People are always talking of the Good Old Times; and other people are always contradicting them, and pointing out that of all names this is the one which least expresses the nature of a period much worse than the present. Yet the word remains, and is used, probably, as much now as in those days, once new, which seem to us the oldest thinkable—days when, as the Americans say, "Adam was a little boy." The old times are, as they have always been, the good times—the present age the age of iron, the past the age of gold—and those other good times for ever "coming" have, very evidently, never come.

But, if the epithet is misapplied, its very misapplication is one proof of the superiority of the past over the present—for in those bygone days, at least, they gave things their right names, and knew what they meant by every word they used. The venerable father of our race, just mentioned, when he christened the animals allowed no confusion among them—he would have been as astonished as the French classicist to hear the heroine of Victor Hugo's play address her lover as "son lion, puissant, et généreux;" and we may be quite sure that he did not, like the affectionate bridegroom in Punch, even during the honeymoon, call his Eve a "plump little partridge."

Nowadays, how entirely we have changed all that! All trades, professions, arts, have mixed and muddled their terms so that it is almost impossible to tell the meaning of any noun apart from its context. To take a most obvious instance from ordinary conversation—if I overhear the one word "donkey," how many legs am I to infer that the animal spoken of possesses? So with other common words—magazine, report, leaf, trunk: their figurative meanings have almost swamped their literal and natural sense, even among ordinary matter-of-fact people. But when we come to high art—to the region of poets, painters, musicians, and, above all, critics, of the latest schools—where are we? What would a plain-sailing farmer, or an intelligent Scotch mechanic, or, let us say, Dr. Johnson, make of people who called a thing a "pizzicato movement in E flat minor," when it was really a sketch of the tops of poplars?—or a "septette in chrome," when it was a little dirty-brown picture of nothing in particular?—or a "sepia study of moonlight," when it was a tune on the piano with no tune in it?

These things seem nothings, almost; but they have their significance. Names tell what things are in the eyes of the people who named them; and that is information worth having. More than this, they tell who named them—and therefore, probably, who knew most about them. We take the titles of our made dishes from the French—and so tacitly admit the supremacy of their cookery. They talk of grooms, of studs, of "le sport"—it was we who taught them to breed horses and to ride, especially the former. In philosophy we derive all our terms from the clear and beautiful language of those earliest thinkers of Greece whom modern culture has scarcely yet surpassed; and even musical Germany yields, by adopting all its names and phrases, to Italy the first fresh spring of melody, and even of harmony, simple but profound and stately.

And in like manner when names are not clear they betray the namer's weakness—when commonplace, his want of poetry; when too startling, his want of solid power. One can tell in what respect periods of literature have been strong, in what defective, by the titles their writers gave to what they wrote. We have no plays now as poetical as Shakespeare's fairy comedies—have we any titles like the "Midsummer Night's Dream?" Our dramatists like short, telling names, which look well on playbills—so we have "Caste," "Dreams," "Alone," titles good and suggestive enough, but of a far easier suggestiveness than, for example, "Every Man in his Humour," "A Woman Killed with Kindness," or "A New Way to Pay Old Debts." So with our novelists; see the immediate change from Richardson to Fielding—"Pamela," "Clarissa," "Sir Charles Grandison," giving way to "Joseph Andrews," "Tom Jones," "Amelia." These again are quite different from Scott's, with their ring of historical romance; from Dickens's, generally chosen from the fantastic side of the commonplace; and from those of the novelist perhaps most read at the present moment, Ouida—generally to be defined as unintentional but exquisite burlesque.

Our poets' titles have their epochs, too. In the "Augustan age" everything bore the livery of a sham classicism; the Dunciad, the Rosciad, dozens of entirely unpoetic manuals intended to resemble the Georgics, and swarms of satires not at all like their models, Juvenal's—these, followed not long after by elegies claiming descent from Ovid, tell even the reader of a catalogue how far had departed, for the time, the originality on which we English pride ourselves. Then came a period chiefly of pure romance; then our greatest living poet set the fashion of old British titles and stories; and we are now in the full swing of a revival of names—and songs to correspond—from old Italy, old France, old Germany, Greece; from everywhere, indeed, except the England of to-day. Let us hope that this, too, will soon pass away, and that England will be, to quote a very different age's poet (not Shakespeare: Colley Cibber), "herself again," healthy and complete.

But there is a class of names of which at present I have said nothing. All names of books, pictures, plays are supposed to describe more or less exactly the things to which they refer; but there are names quite arbitrary, given merely for convenience—for example, the names of streets. Of old, indeed, there was generally some reason even in the christening of these. East-street, Northgate-street, Little Church-street, the Strand have their meanings and have been useful; but the dozens of King-streets in London, its three Regent-streets (of which one has, for convenience sake, been quite lately renamed Regency-street), its Piccadilly, and its Great St. Thomas Apostle have no more geographical value than the Belindas-villas or Simpson-esplanade of the suburbs. Why they were named as they are one does not know; one can only wish, in a good many cases, that they had not been. The monotony of streets newly made, in particular, is often not only annoying but troublesome. The want of originality in the London street builder is really astonishing; having used up the name of every saint and every county—I have counted five Gloucester-streets, and I daresay there are several more—and made most of our victories do duty over and over again, he seems to have sat down in despair and given it up.

Why? Look at the French. They improve the minds of their children and the tempers of their hackney-coachmen at the same time by giving their streets—in addition to the names of provinces and saints, whom they do not neglect—a most astonishing variety of souvenirs of great men of all kinds and of all countries. They have the Rues Lord Byron, Newton, Jenner, Franklin, Robinson (in compliment to De Foe, I verily believe); Van Dyck, Velasquez, Leonardo da Vinci, Titian, Balzac, Corneille, Chateaubriand, Voltaire; any number of memorials of men whom in England the State too seldom honours in any way. Then there are more poetic names—the avenue of the Elysian Fields, the Alley of Swans, the Street of Birds, the Street of the Abbot of the Sword, the Boulevard of Mount Parnassus. We laugh at these, no doubt; but they are in many ways better names than our quiet respectabilities of Gloucester and Chester, Euston and Cavendish—they are distinctive, they strike one, and are remembered; they make the children that play in them think sometimes, and ask questions, and that is good; and they keep, in an odd little immortality, great names which would otherwise have been forgotten.

And in this last respect, as in so many others, the name is the thing. We never really remember a thing without remembering the name we knew it by; if we do not think of a name often, we do not think of the thing to which it refers. That names should be good ones, should really define the things to which they are given, and that we should know exactly what they mean, is of importance in greater matters than the building of streets—or even the painting of pictures and writing poems.

AN INSECT ALLY.

The Colorado beetle, just now so much dreaded by the agriculturist in Europe as well as in North America, where its actual ravages have been experienced in past years, was represented in one of our Illustrations given last week. There is, we are happy to announce, a certain more diminutive insect, the Uropoda Americana, which makes it a special business to plague the Colorado beetle to death. It is a matter of common justice that we should recognise this natural ally of our interests against the noxious "potato-bug;" and the Uropoda has therefore now a place among our Illustrations, on a highly-magnified scale, copied from the Toronto Globe of February last. This insect was first described by Professor Riley, the American naturalist, from specimens found in Ohio, and afterwards at Poughkeepsie, in the State of New York. It is a parasite which fixes itself on the beetle externally, and pierces its hard covering. This Uropoda belongs to the family of Acarina or mites, and is nearly akin to a well-known European species, the Uropoda vegetans. It is about the size of a small pin's head, broadly oval in shape and depressed, the body in one piece, somewhat tough in the back, and of a yellowish brown colour. It has a peculiar faculty of attaching itself to its victim by means of a thread-like filament that issues from the anus, or posterior part of the body. Professor Riley has ascertained that this filament is really excrementitious, with a flattened disk at each end, by which it adheres both to the mite and to the beetle. It is merely a fragile thread. But the Uropoda is armed also with a special implement for penetrating the beetle's hard case. This consists of a pair of extensible limbs, each terminating in a bifid claw, somewhat resembling that of a lobster. These weapons, when at rest, are drawn back to lie between the legs, just under the skin; but, when the Uropoda means to use them, are brought close together and stretched out, along its own length, reaching beyond the head. The Illustrations engraved represent, first (a), the Colorado beetle, of its natural size, attacked by the Uropoda; secondly (b), a ventral view of the Uropoda, greatly magnified, showing its long piercing tools drawn up between its legs; and, thirdly (c), the excrementitious filament by which it sticks to the unlucky beetle.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Of this establishment there is little to say, repetition performances prevailing during the short remainder of the season, which will terminate with the end of next week. During last week "Romeo e Giulietta" was given, for the first and only time this season, Madame Adelina Patti's admirable performance as Juliet having again given special effect to M. Gounod's music, particularly that of the love scenes; above all, to the balcony duet with Romeo and that with her lover in the fourth act. The encore of the waltz-aria, "No, no, non ti vo," in the first act, was due to the singer rather than to the music. Since Madame (then Mdle.) Patti's first appearance in this character, in 1867, her performance has gained much in dramatic intensity, and it is now such as could scarcely be paralleled by any other lyric artist of the day. Signor Nicolini was the same efficient Romeo as in previous representations of the opera, the cast having included also, as before, Mdle. Bianchi as Stefano, Signor Cotogni as Mercutio, Signor Graziani as Capulet, Signor Sabater as Tybalt, Signor Bagagiolo as Friar Lawrence, Signor Capponi as the Duke, &c.

The other performances of last week consisted of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," "Santa Chiara" (for the second time), "Rigoletto," "Guglielmo Tell," and "Lohengrin."

The last novelty of the season will take place this (Saturday) evening, when "Le Vispe Comari di Windsor," will be produced, being an Italian adaptation of Otto Nicolai's "Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor."

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

"Lohengrin" was given, for the first time at this establishment, on Thursday week, with one important feature of the cast the same as in the performances of the opera during Mr. Mapleson's occupancy of Drury Lane Theatre, where it was brought out in 1875. The Elsa of Madame Christine Nilsson was again a charming realisation of the poet and the composer—Wagner's operas all exhibiting him in that double capacity. Madame Nilsson's delivery of Elsa's dream, the soliloquy at the balcony, and following duet with Ortruda, and the heroine's share of the duet with Lohengrin in the bridal chamber, again manifested the artist's special gifts and requirements with marked effect. Madame Marie Roze filled the part of Ortruda, as on several previous occasions, in the absence of Mdle. Titens from indisposition, a change that was again necessitated on Thursday by the serious illness of the last-named artist. Signor Fancelli was the Lohengrin for the first time, and he declaimed the music with great effect, particularly the address to Elsa, the farewell to the Swan, the defiance of Telramondo, and the various passages in the great duet between Lohengrin and his bride. Another change from former casts was the assignment of the part of the King to Herr Rokitsansky, whose resonant bass voice gave good effect to the music of the character, especially the prayer, "O sommo Dio." The very important part of Telramondo was again admirably rendered by Signor Galassi, and Signor Franceschi was efficient as the Herald. The choruses were mostly well sung, and the scenic and stage effects, dresses, and appointments, are very good.

The fifth appearance of Mdle. Etelka Gerster took place on Saturday last, when she repeated her performance as the heroine in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and made as strong an impression as that produced on previous occasions, including her first assumption of this character on Tuesday week, as already noticed.

The last morning performance of the season took place on Wednesday, when "Don Giovanni" was given, with a strong cast, including Madame Christine Nilsson as Donna Elvira, Madame Trebelli as Zerlina, Madame Marie Roze as Donna Anna, M. Faure as Don Giovanni, Signor Tamberlik as Don Ottavio, and Herr Rokitsansky as Leporello.

The eighth appearance of Mdle. Etelka Gerster is announced for Tuesday next, as Elvira in "I Puritani"—her first performance of the character here.

The performances to be given for the benefit of Mr. Mapleson at the Crystal Palace, on July 21, will possess special interest, the most eminent artists of Her Majesty's Theatre being announced to appear, in an afternoon concert, and in opera (in the theatre) in the evening.

The Philharmonic Society closed its sixty-fifth season on Monday evening, when the orchestral pieces were Herr Joachim's "Elegiac Overture," composed in commemoration of the German dramatic poet, Heinrich von Kleist; Mendelssohn's symphony in A minor (the "Scotch"), and Weber's "Jubilee Overture." The instrumental selection was completed by two effective solo performances—Beethoven's piano-forte concerto in C minor, by M. Joseph Wieniawski; and Vieuxtemps's "Ballade" and "Polonaise de Concert," for violin, by Mdle. Marguerite Pommereul; the lady having appeared in sudden replacement of Herr Wilhelm, in consequence of his indisposition. Miss Catherine Penna and Mr. Santley were the vocalists. Mr. Cusins, the conductor, was warmly received on the close of the eleventh season of his tenure of the office.

Performances of operas in English are still being given at the Alexandra Palace. For Thursday, "The Bohemian Girl" was announced, with Madame Cave Ashton, Miss Palmer, Mr. George Perren, Mr. George Fox, and Mr. R. Temple, in the principal characters.

M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Theatre are continued with success; frequent changes of programme maintaining a variety of interest.

THEATRES.

The successful performance of Miss Bella Pateman as Lady Audley has justified the management in continuing the representation. The piece is succeeded by a petite drama, being an adaptation of "Le Luthier de Cremona" under the title of "The Violin Maker of Cremona," in which Mr. Henry Neville has dealt rather freely with the work of M. François Coppée, produced in the middle of last year at the Théâtre Français, a production remarkable for its delicacy, and now favourably received by the Olympic audience. The story may be briefly told. Filippo and Sandro are apprentices to an old violin player, Ferrari, and rivals for the love of his daughter Giannina (Miss Gerard). Ferrari is an enthusiastic old man, and promises his daughter to that one of her lovers who shall win the prize for the best violin at a forthcoming competition. The lady's affections are turned towards Sandro as the best-looking of the two young men, for Filippo is deformed, but, despite of his hunchback, is a person of superior genius, and confident of succeeding in the approaching trial. He boasts, indeed, to the lady in assurance of his future triumph, and gives her an example of the powers of his instrument. She listens, and weeps, for she loves Sandro, whom now she feels certain that she is about to lose. Notwithstanding that Filippo aims at self-sacrifice, and gives Sandro an opportunity of substituting one violin for the other, the result indeed is that Filippo triumphs. But he uses his triumph generously; he presents to Giannina the golden emblem of his victory, and then unites her hand with that of Sandro, bidding farewell at the same time to Cremona. Mr. Henry Neville himself sustains the part of the moral hero with signal pathos and ample effect. The other characters in the piece are adequately supported, particularly that of Sandro by Mr. Forbes Robinson.

Miss Glyn began on Tuesday evening at her residence, 13, Mount-street, a new series of readings from Shakespeare, beginning with "Antony and Cleopatra," to be followed on Friday morning by "Macbeth," "Hamlet," "The Merchant of Venice," "Romeo and Juliet," "Measure for Measure," and "King John," will occupy the ensuing fortnight. The excellence of Miss Glyn's highly artistic readings will, we hope, ensure their extensive popularity.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's representations close this evening, but will be resumed on Oct. 1 at St. George's Hall.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council met in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on Monday, under the presidency of Principal Caven, of Canada. The subject of discussion was the Unbelief of the Present Day, and papers were read by the Rev. Dr. Patton, Chicago, the Rev. Dr. M'Cosh, Princetown, and the Rev. Dr. Watts, Belfast. In the afternoon—the Rev. J. A. Campbell, Geelong, chairman of the council, presiding—resolutions were adopted pledging the Conference to encourage measures for the sanctification of the Sabbath and the suppression of intemperance as a means of promoting spiritual life. The Earl of Kintore presided in the evening, when the subject of the addresses delivered was the Reformed Churches of the Continent.—The closing sittings of the Council were held on Tuesday. At the morning meeting—Dr. D. R. Kerr, United States, presiding—the subject of Presbyterian Literature and the Use of the Press was discussed, and a committee was appointed to inquire as to the available materials for a general Presbyterian history. Dr. Knox, Belfast, took the chair in the afternoon, when a debate took place on the Christian Training of the Young, and the extension of the system of public schools was recommended to the churches. At the meeting held in the evening the Rev. Dr. Adams was chairman. An address to the Queen was adopted; and, thanks having been voted for the hospitality which the members had received in the city, the council was closed with devotional exercises.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

The agreeable anticipations which may be generated by recollections of "Pearls of the Pacific" will be amply satisfied by a perusal of the large volume entitled Across Central America, by J. W. Boddam Whetham (Hurst and Blackett), an author whose bright and pleasant style invests with a singular charm all that he has to give, and he gives a great deal of interesting information. In the present instance his purpose is to make the reader acquainted with "a country not often visited by travellers," and likely, therefore, on that very account, to be the better subject for his facile, graphic, and graceful pen. If it be asked where that country is, the best answer will be found in a brief statement of the route by which he travelled. Starting from San Francisco, he arrived, in October, 1875, at the port of San José de Guatemala, proceeded to the city of Guatemala, took some interesting trips eastward and westward, and, having returned to the direct line, continued his travels northward by a good road to Coban, in Alta Vera Paz, then by an Indian path over the mountain ranges to Rio de la Pasión, and so by canoe to the neighbourhood of what has been called "the mysterious Lake of Peten." Hence, after a journey of six days through the forest, he reached the village of Tenosique, situated on the Rio de la Pasión, which here becomes the Usumacinta; and thence, by canoe, he made his way to the island of Carmen, in the Gulf of Mexico. He visited some of the wonderful ruins scattered over the continent thereby; of them he professes to have given only a "general idea" for "the information of those who have not read the important works on Central America," and he says, "If my readers only know as little of the subjects of this volume before taking it up as I did before I started on my journey, I trust they will in some measure be repaid by its perusal." That trust is well founded and pretty certain to be realised. A painful interest attaches to San José de Guatemala as the place where "a drunken commandant had the audacity to imprison and flog a British Consul a few years ago;" but, as that is about the only interest that attaches to it, one is glad to leave it as quickly as possible, and follow the author to spots associated with more pleasant memories and more amusing scenes. And among those spots may be counted a road upon which the author encountered a troop of Indians going to market and saw a sight which recalls to mind, after a grotesque fashion, the nursery rhyme concerning the lady who "shall have music wherever she goes." Let it be premised that Indian women move along the road at a jog-trot, and emit the while "a peculiar sound, something between a whistle and a grunt," and the reader's mind will then be prepared to appreciate the ludicrous aspect of the following picture:—"One woman amused us very much. She carried an open-work basket of fowls and ducks on her back, on which was also slung a baby; in her arms she bore a fine young sucking-pig, and on her head was a tray of tortillas; as she jogged along the baby cried, the porker squealed, and the poultry made noise enough almost to drown her own grunting." The places, or the chief places, where the author fell in with marvellous ruins, presenting traces of "ancient Indian civilisation," are called respectively Quiché, Copan, and Palenque. Of the first it is said that "fragments of walls, two or three massive piles of stones and cement, a tower and a well-preserved floor, also of cement, constitute the ruins; but every part so destroyed and overgrown with brushwood that it is impossible to imagine the original structure with any certainty." As regards the history of Quiché, a great deal of information was vouchsafed by a guide who was so very much more voluble than trustworthy that it has not been considered advisable to publish his statements. Of Copan the author very truly observes that the mystery which envelops its ruins "detracts in some measure from the absorbing interest which a known history would impart, but at the same time gives a charm to these unintelligible monuments of a departed civilisation." Opinions will differ, perhaps, as to the extent to which the mystery and the charm are enhanced in the estimation of Englishmen by the fact that one of the monoliths, "which proved to be engraven with the finest hieroglyphics," has on its pedestal, "carved in bold characters," the familiar inscription of "J. Higgins." In his description of Palenque the author approaches the borders of eloquence. "Picture," he says, "the city as it must have been; the massive houses painted and covered with ornaments, the temple altars decked for sacrifice, the terraces and steps crowded with the plumed and fantastically-dressed people, and the streets thronged with busy life. Look at it as it is; a series of shattered hulls lost in a forest ocean. . . . And concerning the strange race of beings who inhabited the city how little is known! Who they were and whence they came is mere conjecture; whether they went, when they quitted their homes, is wrapped in mystery. They disappeared as completely as did the blind Edipus, when he wandered into the sacred woods of the Eumenides, and was never heard of or seen again." It is but fair to the author to say that he indulges only a little in this vein; and a little of it, employed as he employs it, is not only tolerable to the reader, but also creditable to the writer. Enough, it is to be hoped, has now been said to set readers inquiring after a most agreeable and a not unprofitable book. It may be added, perhaps, without offence, that a map and an index, or at any rate the former, would have looked well and done well at the end of the volume as a set off to the two pretty illustrations at the commencement, and would have been an acceptable aid in reading.

English schoolgirls and their parents and guardians are hereby strictly charged to beware how they make acquaintance with a book called Through Norway with Ladies, by W. Mattieu Williams, F.R.A.S., F.C.S. (Edward Stanford), for, so sure as they read it be but the preface of the work, the girls will be all agog to be off to Norway for a trip, and the parents and guardians will be equally anxious to follow or accompany them on the pretext of looking after them. Everybody else is strongly recommended to lose no time in becoming personally acquainted with a volume which, to say nothing of the interesting nature of its contents, is, what with its numerous and excellent illustrations, its map, its appendices, and its index, an instance of extraordinary completeness. The author, if general testimony be worth anything, hit the mark with his publication of "Through Norway with a Knapsack;" and it is probable that he will have made a still more palatable hit in the case of "Through Norway with Ladies." What the author and his convoy of ladies accomplished in what he is pleased to term "merely a school-girls' holiday trip" is really prodigious. It cannot be better summarised than it is in the words of his own preface. "We scaled the northernmost limits," he says, "of Arctic Europe, and sailed through the Arctic Ocean to the Russian frontier; this portion of our journey within the Arctic circle extending over nearly two thousand miles. We fraternised with the Laplanders, 'assisted' at the milking of the reindeer, and at the blubber peeling and cutting up of huge Arctic whales; and altogether enjoyed experiences of Arctic life and scenery that but lately were open only to the hardest and most adventurous of travellers. In the southern overland portion of our trip we hired about two hundred and fifty strange horses and an equal number of strange vehicles, with still stranger rigging to represent harness; the ladies themselves drove six sevenths of these over the mountain roads, and up and down some hills that a professional English coachman would refuse to attempt. Some of these ladies never held reins before, and yet we escaped without breakdown or collision, or even the most trivial accident." It might be considered ungallant to hint that but little credit may have been due to the ladies for the safety with which the expedition was conducted, although the author's opinion of English women was evidently raised a great deal by the behaviour of his "pupils" during their travels. He was, with good reason, rather nervous, at the outset, about the responsibilities he had undertaken; but he is "now quite convinced that English ladies can travel and endure hardship just as well as Englishmen." This conviction leads him into a digression concerning ladies, their luggage, their dress, and concerning women and their rights in general. Indeed, he digresses a great deal in various directions during the course of his narrative, whether the subject he discusses be as cognate to his main theme as a theory of glacial formation may be considered, or as alien therefrom as one would be inclined to think that the rights and wrongs of Italian organ-grinders would be. But even in his digressions he is amusing as well as instructive, and conciliates his readers' good-will and attention by the unflagging sprightliness and genuine heartiness which are the prevailing characteristics of his style. If he have a fault, it is that he misses no opportunity of puffing his work published in 1856; and if he have a weakness, it is credulity. For surely only a credulous man could believe that Château Yquem at four shillings a bottle, and Château Lafitte at six shillings and eightpence a bottle, on board of a steam-packet, "are what they are named, and of good quality." His appendices should be received with the liveliest gratitude. They are three in number: in the first he gives an estimate of travelling expenses in Norway; in the second he discourses about "the existing and projected Norwegian railways;" in the third he sets forth the "Norwegian steam-packet arrangements for 1877." Altogether, he has made a very delightful and a very useful book; but the delight is somewhat modified by gloomy prognostications; for already there are signs in Norway of the evils which follow in the wake of the tourist, who brings money in his purse; and there is a fear lest the time should be near at hand when primitive hospitality and manly courtesy and sturdy independence will be exchanged, under the influence of the English sovereign, for the different qualities so commonly conspicuous where tourists most do congregate. "On all the leading highways," says the author, "the stations have lost more or less of their old farmhouse character. The traveller does not now share the supper of the bonder and his housemen in the heavy-timbered, smoke-stained kitchen, but is provided with special apartments built on purpose for his accommodation, and fitted up as luxuriously as the ideas and means of their present proprietors admit." Alas! poor Norway! The fate of Switzerland, sold to the foreigner for several months of the year, appears to be her destiny.

When a gentleman, having a holiday to spend, looks over the map of Europe and finds little of it that he can regard as untrodden ground, having already "seen the faded splendours of the Alhambra and watched the sun set over Holy Moscow;" having "explored the ruins of Athens, Pompeii, and Rome;" having been borne along upon the waters of the Rhine, the Elbe, and the Danube; having climbed the mountains of Switzerland, and having "wandered in many cities," he may be excused for feeling a little perplexed as to whither he shall go for a tour, and he may be congratulated upon having extricated himself from his perplexity by the decision to which the public are indebted for the little volume entitled Scenes of Travel in Norway, by J. C. Phythian (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), a book published with the benevolent intention and hope of inducing "many to visit Old Norway." The intention and the hope are likely to be gratified, although the book contains but few pages, and the pages contain but little that is remarkable. The author, it appears, arrived at Christiania on June 5, 1876, "after a favourable passage from Hull." From Christiania he proceeded to Kongsberg; and thence he started in search of scenery, which he discovered in such quantities and of such excellence that it seems to have been too much (as well it might) for his powers of description. And at the end of his tour he was, apparently, quite sated; for he says farewell "to the country where enjoyment has abounded, but without any desire to remain longer, or go over the same ground again. We have had enough for the present, and are satisfied." This bears witness to the spirit of contentment in which the author took the rough with the smooth, though he shows indications of very much preferring the latter. Of striking adventures he does not seem to have had a great many; he certainly met a ladies' school making an excursion in a valley, and he certainly played croquet on a "gravel inclosure," but he escaped on both occasions without a scratch. Indeed, he himself seems to be so conscious of having but a tame story to tell that, few though his pages are, he has devoted some of them to reminiscences of former, rather more eventful, experiences. However, the tourist goes out to see the glories of nature; and, so far as they are concerned, the author's remarks are most enthusiastic. "The description of a journey in Norway," he says, "is an anthem of praise, as it cannot be anything else, for there is beauty, either prominent in the foreground, or peeping from behind, during the whole time. The grand and the picturesque meet the traveller every moment, from that when he puts his foot on shore, and bid him welcome to the scenery of fairyland." He also supplies some useful little scraps of information touching modes and expenses of travelling in Norway.

Whoever is bent upon some kind of trip would do well to consult the pages of Through Brittany, by Katharine S. Macquoid, illustrated by Thomas R. Macquoid (Daldy, Isbister, and Co.), to judge from what appears in the first volume, which treats of South Brittany. Perhaps one might easily dispense with the greater part of the introductory chapter, wherein there is a quantity of historical and antiquarian lore, calculated to appal rather than encourage the ordinary holiday-maker; but for the many pretty illustrations, for the map, for the "list of distances," for the "index for travellers in South Brittany," at the commencement of the volume, and for the general index at the end, every reader will, no doubt, be profusely thankful, feeling how much advantage is to be derived from one and all, and how greatly to be regretted were the omission of a single one. Be it noted, on the authority of the "index for travellers," that "the best places to stop at and make excursions from are—Vannes, Auray, Carnac, Quimperlé, Quimper, Pont Aven, and Douarnenez;" and let it be further noted, on an equally good authority, that the pleasantest, though not the cheapest, way to reach Vannes is by Paris, Chartres, Le Mans, Angers, Nantes, St. Nazaire, Guérande, Le Croisic, St. Nazaire again, and Redon. It is well known that the Bretons boast of their own nationality, as distinct among the peoples of France, and this fact invests them with peculiar interest. The traveller is duly warned that "at first sight the Bretons appear cold, sullen, and repelling;" that "they are sadly addicted to drink," thereby resembling other dwellers upon the face of the earth; and that they "are very dirty in their habits, especially in out-of-the-way districts," differing, in that respect, from other people who could be mentioned, who do not keep their uttermost dirt for "out-of-the-way districts." Still, those out-of-the-way spots should not be neglected, for there, it would seem, must one chiefly expect to find something "of the strange habits and customs of Brittany, of the almost idyllic charm that seems to hang about their lazy, happy, outdoor village life, with its merry-making and dances, and the never-failing ballads and tales, or the weird music of the bagpipes." But it is not everybody who is recommended to try Brittany; that country is not for "the common-place self-centred traveller, who can put up with no discomfort, who sacrifices his sense of beauty to a fastidious appetite, and who considers that he asserts his position by asking the unsophisticated innkeeper for luxuries and extra comforts." On the other hand, "to the real pilgrim in search of new ideas, and of peaceful and often rugged beauty, freshness, and originality, and, above all, constant variety and amusement," there are promised "real enjoyment, clean and comfortable beds, and, with scarcely an exception, good simple food at very moderate prices, and very honest and fair-dealing innkeepers." The descriptions are, of course, written in the author's popular style, neat, polished, pleasant, attractive; and there is a great deal, equally of course, about Bertrand du Guesclin, Anne of Brittany, and all sorts of heroic personages and heroic or other legends. It is curious that the author should use language which seems to imply that there is no printed copy of Froissart containing the famous "battle of the thirty;" there may be no such English copy; but there is, or was, a French one most easily accessible in the British Museum. Pornic, although "it is in La Vendée, not Brittany," is mentioned as the scene of "Fifine at the Fair;" and Pouliguen, which is in Brittany, has literary distinction of a modern date, as the scene of M. Jules Sandeau's charming tale called "Seagull Rock."

A manual, entitled The Chairman's Handbook, by Mr. Reginald F. D. Palgrave, Clerk-Assistant of the House of Commons (Knight and Co.), which has quickly reached a second edition, will be found of great service not only to chairmen, but to all who take part in public meetings.

In a short poem called Leszko, a Tale of Polish Grief (Chapman and Hall), Mr. Alfred Austin has shown how badly even he can write when prompted by a purpose outside the domain of art. At the same time, it must be admitted that there are some fine passages in the work, proving that not the ungainliest theme can altogether paralyse Mr. Austin's vigour.

Mr. Francis Turner Palgrave has made a selection from the lyrical poems of Robert Herrick, bearing the title Chrysolina, published in a neat little volume by Macmillan and Co. The compiler's name is full warrant for the judiciousness of the selection, while in a preface the special qualities of Herrick's poetry are clearly set forth, and obscure passages in the poems are elucidated by notes.

Persons desirous of having by them, in a compact form for ready reference, what divers poets have sung in praise of divers scenes in England and Wales, should obtain Poems of Places, in two clearly-printed volumes, edited by Henry W. Longfellow (also published by Macmillan)—of which the concluding piece, by-the-by, is written by the compiler of the last-named work.

A volume has been published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall which treats of the most brilliant and beautiful kind of things in a manner that will be satisfactory to readers desiring correct and authentic knowledge of the subject. The author of this book is Mr. Edwin Streeter, of New Bond-street, and its title is "Precious Stones and Gems, their History and Distinguishing Characteristics." He is qualified by more than thirty years' experience in the trade, as well as by scientific study in this branch of mineralogy, to instruct the generality of people upon it; but he has consulted also the learned treatise of Professor Kluge, and those of Major Beaumont and Mr. James Forster. His aim has been more especially to furnish those who have any interest in distinguishing the genuineness and determining the value of different kinds of precious stones, with a practical guide, written in a plain and popular style, to precise acquaintance with the needful points of information. The first section, historical and descriptive, has a wider range, as it discourses of precious stones in general, their discovery and use in former times, their finding and working, and their place among objects of commerce. An entire section of nine chapters is occupied with diamonds, giving separate accounts of the different species—the Cape or South African, the Australian, the Brazilian, the Indian; and of the coloured diamonds, the "bort" and carbonado, with anecdotes of celebrated gems, and of the value of rough or uncut stones. The third section presents a brief yet sufficient description of each of the really precious sorts; those of aluminous composition, which bear the name of "corundum," as the ruby and the sapphire; with the emerald, the opal, the turquoise, and several others. Among stones of inferior value, but available for ornaments, which next occupy Mr. Streeter's attention, are the amethyst, agate, carnelian, garnet, chrysolite, jasper, topaz, malachite, and a dozen besides, their chemical ingredients and their crystalline structure being noticed in each instance. His notice of amber should, as it appears to us, have been placed in the later section of his work, among the fossils and organic remains which are used as gems, though amber is not an animal product, like coal and pearl, but a vegetable deposit of resinous gum. The antiquary, not less than the naturalist, will find a vast amount of curious anecdote in this pleasant volume, which has been compiled with much diligent research. If the Goldsmiths' Company should act upon Mr. Streeter's good advice by opening their great collections to public view we shall have further occasion to consult his book. It is illustrated by some finely coloured plates, photographs, and engravings, by which last, in particular, our comprehension of the details of form, in crystals and cut gems, is rendered easy.

At a meeting of the Edinburgh Town Council on Monday it was unanimously resolved to confer the freedom of the city on General Grant.

One of the most popular places of amusement in Liverpool, the Rotunda Theatre, was destroyed by fire on Monday morning, only the outer walls remaining.

A Convalescent Home has been erected, at a great expenditure, by Mr. H. W. Ripley, M.P., in a prominent position, overlooking the valley of the Aire, at Rawdon, near Leeds; and the Marquis of Salisbury has undertaken to perform the opening ceremony, in October next.

The Dunmow flitch trial is to be presided over by Mr. W. Tegg, the publisher, who has consented to act as judge on the occasion. The trial will be held in the Dunmow Townhall on the 23rd inst., and the jury will be composed of an equal number of bachelors and maidens. There are two married couples as claimants. The festival is to be under the patronage of Mr. Harrison Ainsworth.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

T W (Liverpool).—The games are very acceptable, and shall have early attention.
N F (Oldham).—You are mistaken in supposing that variations of White's moves which are contingent upon Black's defence are distinct solutions of a problem.
H M P (Plymouth).—A check on the first move of the solution of a four-move problem does not necessarily detract from the merit of the composition. Much depends upon the combination of which the check forms or should form, a part.

St J E (Temple).—1. Alexander Macdonnell, the great competitor of Labourdonnais, died in London, in September, 1833. All the games between these players that were recorded appear in Mr. Walker's "Chess Studies."

QUESTIONS OF COMPARISON.—Your problem embodies a very pretty conception, but it is much too simple in construction. We should require your name and address before publishing any contributions; the law is inexorable on that point.

H R G (Clement's Inn).—The games shall be examined. Thanks.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

BLINDFOLD CHESS.

The following is one of the Games played simultaneously sans voir by Mr. BLACKBURN during a recent visit to Bury St. Edmunds.

(Philidor's Defence.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. C.)	WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. C.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Kt 4th	18. B to Kt 4th	B to Kt 2nd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Q 3rd	19. P to K B 4th	P takes P (en pas.)
3. P to Q 4th	P to K B 4th	20. P takes P	Q to K B 2nd
This old-fashioned line of play is decidedly inferior to that which follows
4. P takes B	Kt to K B 3rd	21. P to K B 4th	R to Q Kt sq
5. Kt to B 3rd	Kt takes P	This move appears purposeless; but there does not seem to be much resource in Black's game in any case.
6. P takes Kt	P takes Kt	22. Q R to K sq	P to Q Kt 3rd
7. Kt to Kt 5th	P to K 2nd	23. K R to B sq	P to Q Kt 4th
8. Q to R 5th (ch)	P to Kt Kt 3rd	24. Kt takes B (ch)	Q takes Kt
9. Q to R 6th	P to B sq	25. P to B 5th	Q to R 3rd (ch)
10. Q to R 4th	P to Q 4th	26. P takes P, then follows 26. B to R 5th (ch), &c.
11. Q to Kt 3rd	Q to K 2nd	27. R takes Kt	Kt to K 5th
12. B to Q 2nd	Q to K 3rd	A capital stroke. White plays the ending with remarkable accuracy and force.
13. Castles	Kt to Q 2nd	28. P takes Kt	P takes P
14. B to Q Kt 5th	P to B 3rd	29. P to K 6th	R to Kt 2nd
15. B to Q Kt 4th	Q takes B	30. Q to Q 6th	P takes R
16. Kt takes B	R to Q B sq	31. Q takes P (ch)	K to K 2nd
Black cannot, of course, take the Bishop with Queen, because of the threatened ch with the Knight; and if P takes B White obtains an attack the fully compensates for the sacrificed piece.
17. B to K 2nd	Q to K 2nd	32. R to B 7th (ch)	K to Q sq
		33. R to Q 7th (ch), and wins.

CHESS IN MANCHESTER.

An amusing little Partie played lately, at the Manchester Club, between Mr. A. STRICKLAND and another AMATEUR.—(Evans's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	We think 12 P to Kt 3rd would have been more to the purpose.
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	13. P to K 5th	P to Q 4th
3. B to B 4th	B to B 4th	14. Q to B 3rd (ch)	K to Kt 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th	B takes P	15. P to K 6th	P to Q B 3rd
5. P to Q B 3rd	B to B 4th	16. B to B 3rd	Q to K sq
6. P to Q 4th	P takes P	17. P to K 7th	B to Q 2nd
7. Castles	P to Q 3rd	18. Kt takes Q P	B to Kt 5th
8. P takes P	P to Kt 3rd	If he had taken Kt with Pawns, then follows:—
9. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to R 4th	19. Q takes P (ch)	Kt to B 2nd
10. B takes B P (ch)		20. Kt takes Kt	Q takes Kt
This sacrifice, it is hardly necessary to say, is utterly unsound.
11. Kt to Kt 5th (ch)	K takes B	21. K takes B and White has three Pawns for his lost piece. The termination that follows the move in the text is very neat.
12. Q to R 5th	Kt to R 3rd	19. Q to B 8th (ch)	Q takes Q
		20. P takes Q (ch)	R takes Q
		21. Kt to K 7th. Mate.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The handicap tourney of the City Chess Club ended last week, the three prizes falling to Messrs. Potter, Stevens, and Block in the order named.

The annual meeting of the Counties' Chess Association will be held during the week commencing on Monday, the 30th inst., at the Young Men's Institute, New-street, Birmingham. The competitors in the several tourneys will be divided into three classes, according to their reputed skill, and four prizes will be given in each class to the highest scores. A new challenge prize has been provided for the player who wins three times the first prize in the first class.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Admiral the Hon. Henry John Rous (dated Dec. 17, 1874) is in his own handwriting. The executors are Viscount Torrington and Mr. George Payne. The effects are sworn under £80,000. The Admiral has left a legacy of £500 to each of his executors, and given £25,000 to be divided between the five daughters of his brother, the Earl of Stradbroke, on attaining twenty-one. There are legacies of £4000 each to three nephews and a niece, and a few other legacies to servants and others. His silver plate testimonial presented to him by the Jockey Club and his racing friends is given to the Earl of Stradbroke, and three pictures of "Eclipse," "Jim Crack," and the "Pique" are left to the Jockey Club at Newmarket. The residuary legatees are the five daughters of the Earl of Stradbroke.

The will and codicil (dated July 6, 1859, and July 21, 1865) of Mr. James Brown, late of Rossington, of Harehills, and of Copgrove, all in the county of York, who died on April 19 last, at No. 43, Upper Grosvenor-street, were proved on the 28th ult. by James William Scarlett and Richard James Streatfield, the nephew, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testator gives a good many legacies and annuities, and makes provision for old and present servants; he also gives £500 each to the Leeds and Doncaster Infirmary; £200 to the York County Hospital, and £100 each to the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, and the Deakin Institution, Sheffield. As to the residue of his property, real and personal, the testator leaves one third upon trust for his sister, Mrs. Mary Shifner, and her children; one third upon trust for his sister, Mrs. Anne Rhodes Williams Scarlett, and her children; and the remaining one third between his said nephew, Richard James Streatfield, and his nieces, Mrs. Anne Charlotte Cooper and Miss Marian Gertrude Streatfield.

The will (dated Feb. 12, 1873) of Mr. John Hackblock, formerly of No. 12, Bolton-gardens, South Kensington, and late of Slaney Park, near Balinglass, Wicklow, Ireland, who died on May 24 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by William Henry Hackblock, the son, Clifton Whiting, and Robert George Graham, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator makes provision for his son John; and, after giving some legacies, leaves one third of the rest of his property to his son William Henry and the other two thirds to his four daughters, Elizabeth Mary, Matilda, Emma, and Alice, in equal shares.

The will (dated March 8, 1875, with one codicil, dated May 5, 1876) of Mr. Henry Booth, late of No. 200, Dalston-lane, Hackney, who died on May 14 last, was proved on the 30th ult. by George Pritchard, Alexander Towne, jun., and Benjamin Brodie Booth, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator bequeaths to his daughter, Mary Ann, all his furniture, plate, household effects, horses and carriages, and a life interest in certain sums in the funds, gas shares, and railway stock; and, amongst many other legacies, gives £1000 New Three per Cent Annuities each to the German Hospital, Dalston; the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, Moorfields; and the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park; and £700 of the same annuities to the Vicar and churchwardens of the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, upon trust, to divide the income annually equally between the inmates of the Shoreditch New Almshouses, opposite Haggerstone church. The residue he gives to his great-nephew, the said Benjamin Brodie Booth.

The will and codicil (dated Nov. 30, 1876, and April 6, 1877) of Mr. James Hedgman, late of Elm Bank, Barnes, Surrey, who died on April 12 last, were proved on the 12th ult. by Miss Louisa Anne Coxon, William Turner, the nephew, Henry John Whaley, and Ebenezer Cobb Morley, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths £3000 to the West London Hospital, Hammersmith, £3300 for the purpose of founding a free or ragged school to be situated in the parish of Barnes for the resident poor of the said parish, and a great many other legacies; the residue of his estate he gives to Miss Coxon, Mr. Turner, Mr. Whaley, and Miss Madeline Bull.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.

A meeting of this ancient and richly-endowed hospital, called by the treasurer, Sir Sydney H. Waterlow, M.P., was held on the 5th inst., for the purpose of considering, among other matters, two highly important recommendations.

One was a proposed compromise of a lawsuit which has been for many years pending between the governors of the hospital as plaintiffs and the inhabitants of Christ Church, Newgate-street, as defendants. The plaintiffs are entitled, under their charter of Henry VIII., to the great tithes at the rate of 2s. 6d. the £1, but have never enforced payment of anything like that sum. Five or six years ago, however, a few energetic governors determined to test the right of the hospital to the full payment. Sir Sydney Waterlow has from the commencement been most anxious to settle the suit by compromise; and, after many conferences with the inhabitants, has succeeded in obtaining their consent to an undertaking to pay to the hospital the sum of £1200 a year for the next five years, £1800 a year for the following five years, and £2400 a year for ever, beginning at the end of ten years. This compromise, having received the almost unanimous assent of the parishioners, was unanimously confirmed by the governors of the hospital.

The next important subject for discussion was the rebuilding of the medical school, adjoining the hospital at Smithfield. It is intended to reconstruct the theatre, museum, and library, and, as the hospital has a larger number of students on its rolls than any other in the kingdom, to provide at the same time accommodation for their education and instruction. The proposal will involve an expenditure of nearly £50,000, towards which the professors and teachers in the medical school are to contribute the sum of £750 per annum out of the school fees. The whole question has been brought before the Charity Commissioners, who, replying to the Governors, have stated "that, having regard to the great development of the school of surgery and medicine, and the rapid augmentation of the number of students in recent years, which is apparently due to the position and other advantages possessed by the hospital, the Commissioners think that their sanction may justly be given to the erection of the new theatres, library, museum, and other buildings devoted to instructional purposes." After hearing the letter read, the governors gave their unanimous consent to the proposal.

The proceedings concluded by a special vote of thanks to Sir Sydney and the Almoners for the trouble they had taken in bringing these important matters to a satisfactory conclusion.

There was a sham fight at Aldershot yesterday week in the presence of the Duke of Cambridge, the operations lasting three hours after the troops had taken their positions.

A supplementary Civil Service Estimate has been issued for £100,000, which is required to meet the immediate necessities of the Provincial Government in the Transvaal territory. It is stated that "there is ground for hoping that repayment will be made from local revenue in a few years."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1877.

The Russo-Turkish War in Bulgaria has within the last few days reached another and very important stage of development. On Saturday or Sunday last (for there is some confusion as to the exact date) the troops of the Czar south of the Danube captured Nicopolis, opposite Turnu Magurele, after a severe contest, lasting sixteen hours, and gained complete possession not only of the town but of the forts and citadel. Six thousand men, including the garrison, under the command of Hassan Pasha and Ahmed Pasha, together with two monitors (unseaworthy, however) and forty cannon were surrendered into the hands of the Russian Commander, Baron Krüdner. By this victory Russia has gained for herself the possession of thirty miles of the Banks of the Danube on both sides for an ultimate base of operations in Bulgaria. She will now, as a matter of course, build a second bridge across the Danube—probably in the immediate neighbourhood of Turnu Magurele. This, however, is not the only success achieved by the Russian Army south of the Danube. Tirnova has been permanently occupied, and has been constituted the centre of the new Civil Administration, under Prince Tcherkassky, all the arrangements of which foreshadow the future independence of the Province. But the most striking and, as it seems likely, the most pregnant fact of the week, is the crossing of the Balkans by a section of the Russian Troops into Roumelia, as far as Yeni-Saghra, on the Jamboly and Adrianople Railway. One is not compelled by this last fact to conclude that the Balkans difficulties have been completely solved. It does, however, point to a pending and comparatively easy solution of them, and it foreshadows a probable success to the Russian Arms as a result of the present campaign.

As the Russian Forces, however, draw towards Adrianople, and thereby threaten the metropolis of the Ottoman Empire, one can hardly be surprised that the military question (about which we scarcely presume to speculate) should be superseded, at least for the moment, by the diplomatic and political. Things are now converging upon that frontier region lying between the decisions of the Council Chamber and the achievements of the sword, which gives encouragement to all kinds of rumours as to the dispositions of the European Powers. People are already beginning to speculate what, in such and such apparently impending circumstances, will be the course determined upon by England, by Austria, by Italy, or by France. Almost every step hereafter taken in advance by the Russian Army will beget, on the part of these Powers, certain anxieties; and if Constantinople should seem to be on the point of being occupied by Russian troops, such anxieties will probably become so intense as to lead to the unhappy issue of enlarging the scope and area of the war. On both sides the danger of agitation will be augmented by the seeming proximity of the deprecated event. Several considerations, however, may serve to mitigate, if not to neutralise, gloomy anticipations of this kind. In the first place, it is not at all unlikely that before the Russian troops get beyond Adrianople the Sultan will invite the neutral Powers to mediate between the two conflicting Empires, or, perhaps, will sue for peace to Russia, and will be courteously if not magnanimously entertained. But, if such should not be the case, and if Turkey should obstinately resolve to push to extremities her defence of the soil which she claims as of right, one sees no reason why the engagements of Russia to Europe should not be fairly carried out. She entered upon this war professedly for the protection of the Christian subjects of the Porte in Bulgaria. She has made some arrangements with the Neutral Powers as to the merely temporary and military ends she would have in view should she be compelled by strategical reasons to occupy Constantinople. She is well aware that to advance her pretensions beyond this would excite enmities which, at no distant day, would prove disastrous to her present position and reputation. What her ambition might prompt her to desire her common sense would forbid her to appropriate. Matters, it is true, may become more complicated than they are now. But there is no sufficient ground for expecting that Russia will shut her eyes to the consequences of her own proceedings and blindly rush upon her own ruin.

A great deal has been said in certain quarters in condemnation of the truculent spirit in which the Russian Army is carrying on the present campaign. Indeed, the Turks are almost daily urging official complaints upon the Neutral Powers of the cruelties and barbarities of which their foe, wherever successful, is said to be guilty. There can be no doubt that in such a collision as that which is now taking place lamentable excesses are occasionally practised on both sides. Still, after a due and, as we think, an impartial consideration of the evidence which has come before the world, we do not find that the mode in which Russia is carrying on her warfare with the Turks differs unfavourably with that in which it is usually carried on by civilised Powers. All things taken into consideration, her proceedings, if here and there harsh and unjustifiable, are not perhaps more so than would be the case if another European Power were placed in her position. Nevertheless, every likely method should be adopted by those who look on to soften as much as possible the hard features of war. The Czar, we may be sure, will exercise the vast influence he wields in mitigating the evils he believes himself bound to inflict. The presence of the representatives of the Press with the armies of both belligerents will, we trust, to some extent restrain the cruel and vindictive passions which daily hostilities are sure to engender. The public opinion of Europe will assuredly cry "shame" upon those acts of either Army which wantonly cause more injury than strategical reasons require, especially the maltreatment of non-combatant portions of the population. The war itself is bad enough—we hope neither the Russians nor the Turks will designedly and systematically make it worse than it need be.

EARTHQUAKE AND FLOOD-WAVE IN PERU.

The terrible visitation on the coast of Peru, on May 9, of an earthquake and consequent huge tidal wave of the Pacific Ocean, causing a destructive inundation of the shore, was mentioned several weeks ago. A naval Correspondent, belonging to the British squadron in the Pacific, has sent us the two sketches of the havoc made by this disastrous occurrence at Iquique and Arica. We quote from a letter recently published the following particulars:—

"At half-past eight on the night of the 9th a severe earthquake shock, lasting four or five minutes, moved the entire southern coast, even reaching down as far as Antofagasta. So severe was the movement that in many places it was impossible to stand upright without support. The first shock was succeeded by several others of less intensity, and the sea, receding from the shore, seemed to concentrate its strength for the fearful and repeated attacks it made upon the land. It left Callao and proceeded southward. The first port visited was Pisco, where the damage done was not so great. At Mollendo the railway was torn up by the sea for a distance of 300 ft., since repaired; and a violent hurricane afterwards set in from the south, preventing the approach of all vessels and unroofing the houses of the town. The Ilet Railway also was injured, but to no great extent. At Arica the people were busily engaged in preparing temporary fortifications to repel a threatened assault of the rebel ram Huascar at the very moment when the roar of the earthquake was heard. The shocks were very numerous, and caused immense damage in the town, the people flying to the Morro for safety. The sea was suddenly perceived to recede from the beach, and a wave from 10 ft. to 15 ft. in height rolled in upon the shore, carrying before it all that it met. Eight times was repeated this assault of the ocean. The earthquake had levelled to the ground a portion of the Custom House, the railway station, the submarine cable office, the hotel, the British Consulate, the steamship agency, and many private dwellings. Owing to the early hour of the evening and the excitement attendant on the proposed attack of the Huascar, everyone was out and stirring, but the only loss of life reported is that of three little children, who were overtaken by the water. The progress of the wave was only stopped at the foot of the hill on which the church stands, which point is further inland than that reached in August, 1868. Four miles of the embankment of the railway was swept away like sand before the water. Locomotives, cars, and rails were hurled about by the sea like so many playthings, and left in a tumbled mass of rubbish. The United States steamer Waters, stranded by the bore of 1868, was lifted up bodily and floated two miles north of her former position. The cable buoy was moved a quarter of a mile northwards. Merchandise from the Custom House and stores was carried by the water to a point on the beach five miles distant. The damage done was greater than by the previous calamity, the new buildings erected since 1868 being of a more costly and substantial class. The next morning the scene was pitiable. Iquique is in ruins. The movement was experienced there at the same time, and with the same force. Its duration was exactly 4 min. 20 sec. It proceeded from the south-east, directly from the direction of the Illaga. The houses, built of wood and cane, tumbled down at the first onset of the motion, lamps were broken and the burning oil spread over and set fire to the debris. Three companies of firemen, German, Italian, and Peruvian, were instantly at their posts, although it was difficult to maintain an upright position, shock following shock with dreadful rapidity. Nearly 400,000 quintals of nitrate in the stores at Iquique and the adjacent ports of Molle and Pisagua were destroyed. Probably only ten persons were killed. The British barque Caprera, and a German barque, the Zoermis Voess, sank. Among the buildings destroyed are the railway stations, the warehouses of the Tarapacu Company, the offices of the Associated Banks and of the National Bank; the business houses of Anthony Tate and Co., T. Gildemeister and Co., Richini and Co., and the Cavalry Barracks, where a large number of mules and horses were drowned. The fire stations were demolished, and all the coasting craft and small boats in the harbour were broken to pieces and drifted about in every direction. On board occurred the loss of life alluded to. The town of Tarapacu, twenty-five leagues inland, and the villages of Rica, Matella, and Canchones were more or less damaged. The loss of life is reported as not being great. The sufferings of the people of Iquique were intense. Chanavaya, the little town at the guano-loading deposit known as Pabellon de Lica, has only two out of 400 houses standing. Here, as at Iquique, the earthquake was followed by fire. In one of the guano cuttings thirty labourers were buried by the falling earth and suffocated. The shock of earthquake was especially severe at Chanavaya. In some spots the earth opened in crevices of fifteen metres in depth, and the whole surface of the ground was changed. At least 200 persons were killed. Bodies were floating around in the bay, and a pestilence is feared. At Punta de Lobos two vessels were lost—the Havre (French) and Shamrock (English). Fourteen ships were more or less damaged. Antofagasta, Mexillones, Tocopilla, and Cobiga towns, on the coast of Bolivia, also suffered through the earthquake and the tidal wave at the same time. At Antofagasta the atmosphere was illuminated by a red glare, supposed to proceed from the volcano of San Pedro de Atacama, a few leagues in the interior. The sea completely swept the business portion of the town during four hours. Several lives were lost at Huanillos, another guano-loading station. The damage done was fearful. All the houses were destroyed, and here, as at Pabellon, all loading will be suspended for at least two months. At Huanillos the wave which succeeded the earthquake was nearly 60 ft. in height. Mexillones was visited by a tidal wave 65 ft. in height. Two thirds of the town were completely obliterated, guano-shoots, wharves, launches, boats, distilleries, railway stations, locomotives, cars, and furniture were all swallowed up by the sea. Six persons were drowned. The destruction of shipping has been very great."

ROSALIND, FROM "AS YOU LIKE IT."

We have chosen for the subject of our Fine-Art Engraving this graceful and characteristic picture of one of Shakespeare's most charming women, dressed in masculine attire for the convenience of a romantic life in the Forest of Arden, but animated by a truly feminine spirit, and betraying all the ways of her sex in the pleasant prattle of her talk with sister or cousin, or with the mystified lover, Orlando. The artist, Mr. W. S. Herrick, has succeeded perfectly in representing our idea of clever Rosalind in the costume of a woodland boy. She is apparently engaged in one of those brilliant wit-combats, the most delightful scenes in the comedy, which occur whenever Orlando comes to visit her, not recognising her for the real lady of his affections, but supposing her to be the rustic youth she appears, and contending himself, at her invitation, with a fantastic rehearsal of his love-suit, to which the pretended Ganymede, undertaking to personate the actual Rosalind, opposes a mock wilfulness and capriciousness that ought to cure him of his unhappy passion. It runs on thus:—

Rosalind. Am I not your Rosalind?
Orlando. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.
Rosalind. Well, in her person, I say—I will not have you.
Orlando. Then, in mine own person, I die.
Rosalind. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, videlicet, in a love-cause. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned; and the foolish chroniclers of that age found it was—Hero of Sestos. But these are all lies; men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.
Orlando. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind; for, I protest, ner frown might kill me.
Rosalind. By this hand, it will not kill a fly. But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on disposition; and ask me what you will, I will grant it.
Orlando. Then love me, Rosalind.
Rosalind. Yes, faith will I, Fridays, and Saturdays, and all.
Orlando. And wilt thou have me?
Rosalind. Aye, and twenty such.

The arch vivacity of this dialogue, or Rosalind's part of it, is most felicitous, and in Shakespeare's happiest vein of gentle humour. Mr. Herrick's picture will help the reader to enjoy it more fully.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The defeat of Petrarch (9 st. 3 lb.) in the Liverpool Cup last week was a sad blow to the public. Ever since the weights appeared, they had supported him sturdily; indeed, Lord Lonsdale had little or no chance of investing his money at anything like a fair price, and would have been fully justified in scratching him. However, he chivalrously determined to give his numerous supporters a run for their money, and so well did the horse perform, that such a defeat reflected more credit on him than most of his victories. At the distance Petrarch appeared to be winning easily; but then Snail (7 st. 12 lb.) suddenly drew up and challenged him. With such a heavy weight Custance was obliged to ride him very tenderly, and he would probably have won but for an unlucky stumble in the last three or four strides, which enabled Snail to get his head in front, and keep it there until he had passed the judge's chair. Nothing could have been finer than the riding of Constable and Custance, though the latter, like nearly all luckless seconds, has been most unjustifiably blamed for the result. K. G. (6 st. 10 lb.) once more ran wretchedly, and was beaten a very long way by Sign Manuel (6 st.), whom Advance (6 st. 12 lb.) just kept out of a place. La Merveille, who does not care to gallop more than half a mile, found the 3 furlongs 100 yards of the Latham Nursery Stakes exactly to her taste, and Charm had to do all he knew to beat Tartine at 12 lb. There were two fair days' sport at Southampton at the end of last week, the most noticeable feature being the easy defeat of King David by Eminence, a smart son of Cardinal York.

The present week has been one of comparative inaction, and racing men generally are reserving their energies for Goodwood. The bad weather militated against the success of the Sandown gathering on Tuesday; but matters improved greatly in this respect on Wednesday, when the scene on the lawn was as charming as ever. The Prince of Wales was present on both days, and afternoons at Sandown are rapidly taking rank among the chief attractions of the season. Never was success more richly deserved, as nothing is omitted which can contribute to the enjoyment of visitors.

The entries for the Derby, Oaks, and Leger of 1879 closed last week, and, taken as a whole, they must have exceeded the most sanguine expectations; indeed, we believe that those for the Derby and Leger are the largest on record. We are indebted to the Sportman for the following table of the entries since 1871:—

Derby	191	202	217	223	231	253	236	285
Oaks	175	139	189	142	171	177	216	198
St. Leger	198	193	204	197	213	219	245	287

The incessant rain which fell on Saturday last precluded any possibility of finishing the Eton and Harrow cricket-match; and what would have been a most interesting contest ended in a draw, the Etonians wanting 110 runs to win, and having nine wickets to fall. The attendance on both days was very large, and even on Saturday hundreds of ladies braved the persistent rain, and would not leave the ground until play was finally abandoned. The following score speaks for itself; and it is very satisfactory to note that the two captains, Messrs. Meek and Whitfield, did more than their share of scoring:—

Lancashire has obtained a very meritorious victory over Yorkshire by ten wickets, the fine batting of Mr. Appleby (not out 69) contributing greatly to this result. A close contest between Notts and Surrey resulted in the success of the former team by 18 runs, no large scores were made on either side. No cricket took place on Monday last owing to the incessant rain, consequently Gloucester and Yorkshire v. England ended in a draw, in which neither side could claim any advantage; Mr. W. G. Grace (52 and 110) for the former, and Mr. A. N. Hornby (105 and not out, 33) for the latter eleven, were the chief run-getters. Derbyshire is rapidly taking a high position among cricketing counties, and a victory over Kent by three wickets speaks well for the eleven. No large scores were made on either side; but we must not omit a mention of the fine bowling of W. Mycroft and Hickton.

Two extraordinary performances were accomplished at Lillie-bridge on Monday last, when W. Perkins walked the unprecedented distance of 22 miles 190 yards in three hours, and his opponent, W. Howes, was only beaten by 170 yards. Perkins's time for twenty-one miles was 2 h. 49 min. 20 sec., the fastest on record by no less than 4 min. 14 sec., and such a wonderful feat may never again be equalled.

On Monday the final heat for the Wingfield Sculls was decided, T. C. Edwards-Moss (O.U.B.C.), the winner of the trial-heat, having to meet the holder, F. Playford (L.R.C.), who has now been amateur champion for two years. They sculled over the usual course from Putney to Mortlake, and for two miles a splendid struggle took place; but the rough water in Chiswick Ait seemed to suit Playford far better than it did his opponent, and eventually the holder won easily in 24 min. 43 sec. The time to Hammersmith Bridge (9 min. 5 sec.) is the fastest on record for either amateurs or professionals, and Playford, who sculls in grand form, is probably the best amateur sculler that has ever appeared in public.

The entries for the Thames International Regatta show that many of the best amateur and professional oarsmen in the kingdom (including Boyd, Higgins, Lumsden, and Blackman) will contend for mastery on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday next between Putney and Mortlake. The Prince of Wales has presented the first prize for the amateur sculls, and it is hoped his Royal Highness will be present at the regatta.

Members of either House who may be lounging on the river terrace of Westminster Palace next Monday afternoon will be able to witness the close of a five and a half miles swimming-race, from Putney Bridge to Westminster Bridge, for the Lords and Commons' Challenge Cup, and various gold and silver medals presented by the London Swimming Club.

THE WAR.

The latest news, to Thursday evening, from the seat of war in the Danubian provinces, shows that the Russians are preparing to besiege Rustchuk, and to advance at the same time from Timova across the Balkans. They have taken possession of the line across the Dobrukscha, from the Danube to the Black Sea, with the towns of Medjidieh and Kustendje. The capture of Nicopolis on Monday last, with 6000 Turkish troops, two gun-boats, forty pieces of artillery, and a large store of breechloading rifles and ammunition, is a valuable success. On the other hand, there is some anxiety lest the advanced Russian force which has passed the Balkans should be cut off by a movement of Raouf Pasha, who is encamped at Slivno. There was fighting in that quarter last Sunday. The Russian forces in Bulgaria muster five and a half corps, numbering 165,000 men. Two and a half corps, 75,000 men, besides Roumanians, form a reserve, and are stationed partly at Sistova, partly opposite Silistria and Rustchuk.

The division placed under command of the Czarewitch, to operate against Rustchuk, has stood inactive these ten days past on the line of the Jantra. Its commander had been ordered not to commit his force for the moment to the task of besieging the Turkish fortress. Hitherto it has held the Turkish field army extending from Rasgrad to Osman-Bazar in check, and apparently it cannot be entirely released from this service until more troops march southwards from the Danube. Had the Turks at Rasgrad moved towards the Balkans, this part of the Russian army would have followed them. Now, however, the Czarewitch has obtained leave to advance towards Rustchuk, and is already on his way. The head-quarters move to Beleova, on the east bank of the Jantra, about midway between Biela and the Danube; and the centre of the new position will be about Domogila, a village seventeen miles from Rustchuk, between the Jantra and the Kara Lom. It is now believed that the policy of masking Rustchuk is abandoned, and that fortress will be besieged. It seems that the Russian plan of campaign is to advance from the centre of the Danube in the form of a wedge, straight on to Adrianople. Then, having established a bridge at Nicopolis, the advance of their main body will be in a double column. Some recent accounts state that the right column is already fighting with Osman Pasha, and the left with Abdul Kerim, while 25,000 men have actually crossed the Balkans. In case both Russian columns should prove victorious, the Turkish position would be desperate. On the other hand, military opinion is strongly expressed against the risk the Russians will run with fortresses like Rustchuk and an unbroken Turkish army, such as that in the Quadrilateral, in the vicinity of their line of communications.

According to instructions from Russian head-quarters, Prince Nikita of Montenegro withholds a renewal of hostilities till further orders. The Roumanians, in spite of all assertions to the contrary, intend crossing the Danube.

The Daily News observes that "a comparison of the Russian with the later Turkish accounts makes it possible to fix with certainty on the route by which General Gourko and his advance corps crossed the Balkans. It was by the Hain Bogaz, sometimes called the Hainkoi Pass, from the village of Hainkoi, which is at its southern outlet. In the first Russian despatch this village was called Khainkoi; it will be found in Handtke's or Stanford's large scale map, just north of the river Yundja, about halfway between Kazanlik and Slivno. This is a pass little used except by the country people, as it is merely a bridge-way. It is the middle one of three passes lying between those of Shipka and the Demir Kapu. The Turkish account shows that General Gourko and his corps were not expected by that route. We learn from the Russian bulletin that the Ottomans had occupied the fortified defile of Chipka or Shipka. General Gourko then advanced upon Kazanlik in order to take this defending force in the rear, and so open the larger and more convenient pass to his comrades on the other side. The Timova bulletin, referring to the fighting on Sunday south of the Balkans, says that the parties engaged were a Cossack force on the one side and some detachments of Bashi-Bazouks and Circassians supported by three tabors of infantry on the other. The Turks held their ground until the Kazan dragoons and a battery of artillery sent by General Gourko came up, when the Turks fled, and a flag, several standard-bearers, and a quantity of arms were captured. In an account from a Turkish source published in London on Monday it was represented that the Russians were defeated with great slaughter, and driven out of the pass. According to a Constantinople telegram of Wednesday's date, Raouf Pasha is encamped at Slivno. The Russians are admitted to be south of the Balkans, and are said to be at Hainkoi."

The Turkish authorities at Erzeroum admit that their investment of Bayazid was raised last week by the Russians. General Tergukasoff's account of the manner in which he effected that operation is also published. The garrison, with the sick and wounded, were taken away. The town is completely destroyed. A Russian court-martial having been assembled, General Melikoff hung twenty-one Kurdish chiefs, among them the son of General Djaffir, chief of the Zilan tribe, who are Russian subjects.

Safvet Pasha, the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, has tendered his resignation. Aarif Pasha, who has already once held the portfolio for Foreign Affairs, and was at one time Turkish Ambassador at Vienna, has been appointed his successor. Safvet Pasha has been intrusted with the Ministry of Public Works. He is to superintend the fortifications of Adrianople and of the defensive positions in Roumelia.

The Turkish regular forces are withdrawn from Albania and Montenegro to aid in the defence of Roumelia. A fleet of English steamers embarked forty-eight battalions, under the command of Suleiman Pasha, on Monday last, at Antivari, and sailed for Salonica, whence the troops will be immediately dispatched to Adrianople. But Ali Saib Pasha is still at Scutari, where bodies of Bashi-Bazouks intended for the defence of Albania are continually arriving from the neighbouring districts.

The President of the United States has presented Captain Joachim Meyer, of the Hamburg-American Company's steamship Frisia, with a handsome gold chronometer watch and chain, in recognition of his having rescued the crew, eleven in number, of the American schooner Gettysburg, of Boston, United States, in December last.

Official reports respecting the cattle trade from the British Consular officers in Europe, North Africa, and the United States have been laid before Parliament. The information given refers to the following countries:—Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Holland, Russia, Spain, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Egypt, Morocco, Portugal, and the United States. This information shows, as far as can be ascertained, the number of oxen, cattle, and sheep in the various countries, the facilities available for their transport alive or dead to this country, and the extent to which such transport trade has been already developed, &c. Returns from Brazil and the River Plate have yet to be issued.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Marshal MacMahon goes next week on a tour through the central departments of France. M. de Fourtou has sent a private circular to the prefects enjoining them to support only those candidates whose creed is fidelity to the Marshal pure and simple. M. Thiers has issued a memorandum on the subject of the period within which the French elections should take place. He condemns in strong terms the policy of the Ministry, which, he says, has deprived France of the chief organs of government while the Russo-Turkish struggle is going on in the East and a Clerical struggle in the West. According to the Paris correspondent of the Daily News, the religious orders throughout France are prepared to make great pecuniary sacrifices to carry the Clerical candidates. £80,000, much of which comes out of the coffers of the orders, has already been furnished to the Conservative committees. The Republicans, on their side, are not sparing their pockets.

M. Bonnet-Duverdier, the President of the Paris Municipal Council, appealed against the sentence passed upon him of fifteen months' imprisonment for certain remarks he was alleged to have made against Marshal MacMahon at a meeting at St. Denis. He denied that he had ever called the Marshal a coward, or that he had ever thought him one. The report of the spies of what he said was altogether inaccurate. The Court, nevertheless, confirmed the sentence.

The editor of a Paris paper, the Radical, has been sentenced to four months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 1000f. for publishing a fictitious letter purporting to have been written by Marshal MacMahon; and the Bien Public has been fined 500f. for reproducing the letter.

M. Laferrière, the well-known actor, died in Paris on Sunday, in his seventy-second year. M. Laferrière, who for many years past has gone to St. Petersburg for the theatrical season, preserved his youthful appearance so well that he was able to take the part of jeune premier until within a week of his death, which was due to a cold caught while travelling to Paris.

A man in a blouse drove up the Rue Montmartre on Wednesday afternoon in an open cab, carrying a flag inscribed with the following inscriptions:—"Vive Napoléon Quatre!" "Vive l'Armée!" He and his cab were speedily removed by the police. The Paris papers throw doubts, as well they may, upon his sanity.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso and the Princess of Asturias, accompanied by the Ministers of Justice and Public Works, left Madrid on the 12th for the provinces of Asturias and Galicia.

The Budget law for the financial year 1877-8 having been passed by both Houses of the Cortes, and having received the Royal sanction, has been published in the Official Gazette.

AMERICA.

The Times' correspondent at Philadelphia says that the Government at Washington, becoming apprehensive about the Idaho Indian war, has authorised the enrolment of 500 volunteers for service against the Indians, who are evidently too much for the forces now in the field against them. General McDowell telegraphs that he has sent thither every soldier he could avail himself of. General Howard reports that he defeated a party of Idaho Indians on the 12th. Another telegram states that a band of Indians surprised a party of thirty-one Chinamen who were descending Clearwater in canoes, and killed thirty of them.

A statue of Shakspeare, ten feet high, modelled by Herr von Müller, has been cast at Munich for erection in a park at St. Louis.

CANADA.

Though the Orangemen at Montreal abandoned their projected procession on the 12th inst. they attended service in the Knox church on that day. Turbulent crowds assembled in the streets, and there was some rioting, the chief conflict arising from an attempt to take the Orange emblems from two women. The result was that about fifty shots were fired, Mr. Hackett being killed and two persons wounded, after which the crowd dispersed. Last Monday evening, after the funeral of Mr. Hackett, some of the Orangemen who had gone to Montreal to attend the funeral were leaving the city by the Wellington Bridge when a large and menacing crowd gathered on their passage, and some stragglers in the rear of the party of Orangemen were attacked by a number of ruffians armed with revolvers. Mr. Williams, an Orangeman, was shot dead, and Mr. Elliot, another Orangeman, dangerously wounded. The police prevented further violence.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

A telegram, via Madeira, from the Cape gives the result of the division in the Cape Parliament on the question of confidence in the Ministry raised by Mr. Sprigg, a supporter of Mr. Patterson, in the debate on the Budget. Mr. Sprigg had moved the adjournment of the Budget debate till the question of colonial defence was settled. Mr. Molteno, the Premier, treated the proposal as one of censure, and the telegraph now reports the victory of the Government by a large majority. Nothing of importance is reported from the Transvaal.

CHINA.

The Government, at the request of Germany, have declared their willingness to open negotiations with the German and other interested Governments for the purpose of concerting the gradual abolition of the inland tolls and duties.

The arsenals at Foochow and Shanghai have almost stopped work from want of funds. General poverty is afflicting all departments of the Imperial and provincial Governments.

JAPAN.

We learn from Hong-Kong that severe fighting continues in Japan, and that some districts hitherto quiet have joined in the insurrection. Many thousand persons are said to have been killed since the commencement of the civil war.

The Imperial Japanese telegraph system is again in complete order, the cables in the Tsugar Strait having been successfully restored.

The Gazette notifies the appointment of Mr. Cornelius Hendericksen Kortright, C.M.G., late Governor of the West African Settlement, to be Governor of British Guiana.

The sudden death of Yakoub Beg, Emir of Kashgar, is announced. His death has a special significance at the present moment on account of the Chinese invasion of Kashgar. The deceased Emir had nominated Hakim Khan Tura as his successor; but he, having declined to accept the gift, has been succeeded by Kuli Beg, the eldest son of Yakoub Beg. The Chinese are now not only marching to attack a defeated army, but also a divided State. The late Emir was a descendant of one of the subject races of Khokand, and owed his success in life solely to his military achievements.

The Royal Agricultural Society's Show at Liverpool closed on Monday. Financially it has been a success, the proceeds considerably exceeding those of last year. The aggregate attendance was about 140,000, including the purchasers of season tickets.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

St. Swithin cast a rainy cloud over Wimbledon-common last Sunday; and this moistest of saints has since then kept his memory green by sending down a few good showers; but the spirits of our sharpshooters, tented out in "Canvas Town," have not been damped, and so St. Swithin, relenting, put on a fair-weather smile for the benefit of our Volunteers in the middle of the week. Divine service was held in camp early on Sunday morning by the Rev. Mr. Kirkwood for the benefit of the Scots; and in the Umbrella Tent by the Rev. H. Villiers (of Addisham), who preached to a general congregation of Volunteers from the text, "And it came to pass, as they went on the way, a certain man said to him, 'Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever thou goest.'"

Resuming our record of the highest scores made during the meeting of the National Rifle Association, we have first to mention the winners of the St. George's Challenge Vase and the Prince of Wales's Prizes, which were shot for yesterday week. There were 1946 entries for the St. George's Vase, the conditions for which were seven shots at 500 yards. The Challenge Vase, valued at £250, is held for the year by the battalion of which the winner is a member; the Dragon Cup, a gold jewel, and £25 in addition become the absolute property of the winner of the Vase. A silver jewel and £25 fall to the lot of the second shot, a bronze cross and £20 to the third, a miniature jewel and £10 to each of the next seven, and £400 is distributed in ninety other prizes varying from £8 to £2 each. Almost immediately after the opening of this contest it was reported that the highest possible score (35) had been made, a statement which was shortly afterwards verified when Colour-Sergeant Hyslop, of the 8th Ayr, was officially announced as having made seven bull's-eyes at 500 yards. The next highest score to Hyslop's was that of Private Angus Cameron, of the 3rd Lanark, a cousin of the world-renowned shot of the same name who was the dual winner of the Queen's Prize and the Caledonian Challenge Shield. Private Cameron scored 34, beginning with an inner and finishing with six successive bull's-eyes. Private Kimphorne, of the 5th Cornwall; Sergeant Goode, of the 10th Leicester, and Colour-Sergeant Ferguson, of the 1st Inverness, came next with 33 points each; and the scores being counted out in the usual manner, the bronze cross was taken by the Scotchman. Following these came seven scores of 32, twenty-two scores of 31, and thirty-five scores of 30 each; the remaining thirty-two prizes being taken by scores of 29 each, thus showing an improvement on the shooting of last year, when forty-nine scores of 29 each came in for prizes. The Prince of Wales's prizes consist of £200 given equally by his Royal Highness and the National Rifle Association, in £100 and a badge to the best shot, and £5 to each of the next twenty-seven shots at 200, 500, and 600 yards respectively with the Snider in any position. At the first stage the shooting was very good. At 500 yards Private Burgess, the winner of this prize in 1875 and of the silver medal last year, succeeded in putting on seven bull's-eyes, and going back to the 600 yards with 61 points. At the longer range, however, he only obtained 20, bringing his aggregate score to 81, a number which was tied by Sergeant M'Auslan, of Dumbarton, who was the winner of this prize last year, and Private Ross, of the Canadians. These ties were shot off on Saturday. M'Auslan, Ross, and Burgess each missed their first shot. At the second round M'Auslan scored a bull's-eye, and Burgess an inner, and in the third these two both made an outer, while the Canadian again missed. M'Auslan was therefore declared the winner of the St. George's Vase a second time. The money prizes, however, were divided by previous arrangement, M'Auslan taking a half, and the others a fourth each.

On Saturday last the China Challenge Cup, the National Challenge Trophy, and the Belgian Challenge Cup were likewise shot for. The shooting was good. One remarkable score deserves to be chronicled before we proceed to the principal competitions. The Ne Plus Ultra competition, which is determined by the number of bull's-eyes made out of seven shots at 1000 yards, resulted in a victory for Sergeant Ferguson (1st Inverness), who won the £25 with five bull's-eyes, while a gusty south wind swept across the range. For the China Challenge Cup (presented by our volunteers in China for annual competition among county teams) thirty-one shires entered, the conditions being that each county should be represented by ten men, who should have ten shots each, at 500 yards. Norfolk was the winner of the cup and of the added £25 prize, with a score of 391; Cheshire took the second prize of £15 with 366 points, and Lancashire came in for the £10 with 365. Edinburgh (the winner last year) scored 361. Ireland made a gallant fight with England for the National Challenge Trophy. This competition was at 200, 500, and 600 yards, and Captain Field, of the Hon. Artillery Company, was, as usual, leader of the English, while Captain Knox took charge of the Irish team. The following were the scores, and they will show that England won by 188 points:—

The Belgian Challenge Cup, given by the Chasseurs Eclaireurs of Brussels, was for volley-firing by squads of ten, each squad representing a volunteer battalion, and for Saturday's competition some twenty teams were entered. The cup and £30 went to the 1st Notts, who scored 164; the second prize, of £20, to the 1st Norfolk, who made 161; the third prize, of £15, to the 1st Berks, 156; and the fourth prize, of £10, to the 3rd Lanark, 155. Sir Henry Halford won the Whitworth Prize with a score of 25. Captain Whitton, 21st Regiment, took the first prize in the Rifle St. Leger with 34 points, his rifle being a Henry. Lieutenant Fenton, 77th Foot, made 33 with a Rigby, and took the second prize; Captain Phillips, of the 26th, making the same total for third prize with a Metford. The principal Henry prize—a new patent match rifle, for the back position, of the value of £30—was won by Captain Pixley, Victoria Rifles.

On Monday the weather was so wet that the Lords and Commons' match was postponed until Thursday; but the hardy volunteers who had entered for the Albert Prizes did not flinch from the ranges. The Albert series were open to all comers; and the conditions were seven shots with any rifle at 200, 600, and 900 yards. The prizes consist of £400 given by the association, divided into forty-nine prizes, three at each range, and forty for the aggregates. The following were the principal prize-winners:—

For the Press prizes, on Monday, there were fifteen entries

by the representatives of metropolitan and provincial journals. The shooting took place (seven shots at 200 yards) whilst drizzling showers were falling and a strong wind was blowing. The first prize fell to Sergeant Hancock (Standard), 36th Middlesex, with a score of 28; Captain Pierce (Liverpool Daily Post), of the 15th Lancashire, taking the second prize with 27 points; Mr. Petrie (Edinburgh Daily Review), third, scoring 23 points. Mr. Caiger (Volunteer Service Gazette) scored 20, and four other gentlemen made 19 points each.

The "Sixty" who stood at the top of the tree in the first week's competition for the Queen's Prize practised with their Martini-Henry rifles on Monday; and in cheerless weather on Tuesday put it to the test "to win or lose it all." There was little rain (says the Times), but there was wind, and plenty of it; a fitful wind, too, the worst that can blow for riflemen, coming in hasty gusts, when it did come, right across the ranges. All things, therefore, considered, Jamieson's score may be accounted a very good one, and so keen a struggle was, perhaps, never witnessed before. Lieutenant Potts, 2nd Roxburgh Mounted Rifles, and Corporal Weston, 12th Surrey, led at the first range of 800 yards, with scores of 30 and 29 respectively. Close behind them came Sergeant M'Auslan, 6th Dumfriesshire, and Burns, 19th Cornwall, with 28; while Major Pearce, winner in 1875, was accredited with but one point less, as also was Pattison, 3rd Lanark. The first two, however, went to pieces at the next range, while Pearce could add but 18 to his 27. M'Auslan, however, held his own manfully, and brought his score up to 52, while Pattison passed his first score by two points, and went to the last—the 1000 yards range—with a good lead of 56. At this stage Jamieson had made but 45, and but few probably were prepared for the result. His score of 25 at the 1000 yards, however, brought him prominently into notice. Still, both Pattison and M'Auslan were but one behind him, and the former had three and the latter one more shot to fire, so that Scotland was jubilant. Their joy, however, was of short duration, for their two champions could do no more, and Jamieson's 70 remained the highest score for 1877. A large and somewhat exuberant crowd accompanied him to await the final and necessary verdict of the Council, and, though "chairs" is now contrary to rule till the "last word" has been spoken, the police had hard work to keep the ground and make a path for the winner. The Duke of Cambridge, who was present, himself pinned the badge on, after Captain Thompson had verified the score, and then Jamieson was lawfully delivered up a not unwilling prey to the enthusiasm of his friends. Scotland and England may claim to divide the honours of the "Queen's Prize" for 1877, for Jamieson, the winner, though of a Lancashire corps, is a Scotchman by birth, and there were Scotch uniforms among those who, when the score had been verified, the rifle tested, and the anxiously-expected "all right" spoken, pressed forward for the honour of carrying the winner shoulder-high in triumph to his camp. Jamieson's score of 70 is less by three and four points respectively than the winning total of 1875 and 1876, when Pearce, of the 18th Devon, made 73, and Pullman, of South Middlesex, 74. It has been beaten even in the years when the highest possible score was only 84, instead of 105, as it now is, for, in 1869, Cameron, of the 6th Inverness, for the second time, won the great prize with 71 points, having three years previously been hailed the winner with 69. The following were the scores of the "Sixty" on Tuesday last:—

To the foregoing list, it will be only just to add the names of the twenty marksmen who tied at 79 in the First Stage of the competition, but only six of whom won the £12 prize and badge, and so came to be included in the distinguished "Sixty." The twenty were:—

Sergeant W. Edwards, 13th Staff.; Lieutenant J. H. Muir, 7th Renf.; Sergeant H. Davis, 1st Notts.; Corporal J. Barnes, 5th Som.; Corporal W. Caldwell, 1st Renf.; Sergeant Hale, 18th Lincoln; Private J. Currow, 1st Tower Hamlets; Private Drake, 4th Sussex; Private H. Barnes, 26th Som.; Private W. The first stage of the Army and Navy Cup was shot for on Tuesday. This cup is given by the Association as the prize for the best shot with the Martini-Henry at 200, 500, and 800 yards among the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army and the Royal Marines and the sailors of the Navy. To this cup is added the sum of £155, £10 of which goes, with the cup, to the winner. E. Hampton, able-bodied seaman of H.M.S. Excellent, proved first on Tuesday with scores of 30 and 34, at 200 and 500 yards; and was also victor in the second stage on Thursday. The conditions were then seven shots at 800 yards, and Hampton's score was 29 points; Private Howse, of the Marines, also made 29; but the bluejacket was, under the conditions, the winner. As soon as it was officially declared, the sailors hoisted him and marched off to their tents, preceded by a union jack.

The winner of the "Grand Aggregate" was known on Tuesday. The handsome prize given by the Canadian Rifle Association, together with £50 in money, will pass into the hands of Lance-Sergeant Paton, of the 1st Lanark. The winner of this prize is he who has made the highest aggregate score in shooting for the first stage of the Queen's Prize, the St. George's Vase, the Martin's Cup, the Alexandra, the Alfred, and the two stages of the Windmills. Paton's total in all these competitions is 275. The visit of the Duke of Cambridge to the Camp on Tuesday was the occasion of an agreeable and interesting little ceremony in connection with the Canadian Shield. His Royal Highness, attended by Colonel Marshall, arrived at the Canadian Camp at five o'clock, where Colonel Gzowski, President of the Canadian Association, was in waiting to receive him. Lord Wharncliffe, President of the Council, with Lady Wharncliffe, was also there, and most of the officers of the Executive Staff, while among the visitors was Lord Carnarvon, with many others, ladies and gentlemen. All the Volunteers of the Dominion at Wimbledon were drawn up in their camp, and inspected by his Royal Highness. In a well-worded speech, Colonel Gzowski handed over the Shield to the charge of the English Association, and the Duke and Lord Carnarvon both spoke in answer. Lord Wharncliffe then called for three cheers for the Canadians, which were promptly and enthusiastically given, and the Shield was then borne in triumph, preceded by the band, to the exhibition tent.

The Donegall Cup, shot for by twelve soldiers and twelve volunteers, with Martini-Henry rifles, at 200, 500, and 600 yards, was won on Wednesday by the dozen riflemen representing the "Reserved Forces," the total scores being 947 for the volunteers, and 912 for the regulars. We append the official return:—

For the Albert prize, second stage, which is restricted to the winners in the first stage, fifteen shots at 1000 yards with any rifle, the prize being £100, given by the association, a tie was made on Wednesday by Sir H. Halford and Lieutenant Moser, of the 3rd Westmorland, who scored 57 points each. Last year the prize was won by Quartermaster Cortis, S.M., of the 1st Sussex, with 68 points. The falling off in the scores to-day must be attributed in a large measure to the shifty nature of the wind, which was very trying at the long ranges. The tie was shot off in the evening. Sir H. Halford led off, making a magpie. Lieutenant Moser followed with a bull's-eye. In the next round Sir Henry obtained an inner, his opponent securing another bull's-eye, bringing the scores up to 7 and 10. With his third shot Sir Henry made a magpie. Lieutenant Moser then took a steady aim, only requiring to hit the target to win; he was, however, fortunate enough to put up another bull's-eye, thus winning easily. The Public Schools' Veterans match resulted as follows:—Eton, 203; Marlborough, 191; Charterhouse, 181; Winchester, 177; Cheltenham, 168; Harrow, 163; Rugby, 156; Derby, 150.

On Thursday the Elcho Shield, Chancellor's Plate (Oxford v. Cambridge), and Kolapore Trophy were shot for, and the Lords and Commons and Public Schools' matches were decided. Harking back a little, we may here repair an omission by recording the result of a competition similar to the Public Schools' match. This new contest was open to all schools save the recognised Public Schools, and took place last Tuesday, with the following result:—

VOLUNTEER CADET CORPS MATCH.

Challenge Trophy.	200 Yds.	500 Yds.	Aggregate.
"Felestead"	50	34	84
"2nd Surrey"	45	36	81

"Glen Almond"	51	23	74
1st London, 2nd Squad	40	28	68
Dulwich, 2nd Squad	39	18	57
1st London, 2nd Squad	25	6	31

The Elcho Shield was won by Ireland with 1568 points as the aggregate of the several ranges; England was second, with a total of 1464; and Scotland last, with 1439, having been passed by England in the seventh round at the 1000 yards' range Oxford won the Chancellor's Plate with 537 points, Cambridge making 533. Lamb, of Cheltenham, won the Spencer Cup. The Kolapore Challenge Cup was won by the home team, beating the Canadian by 22 points; the aggregate scores at the three ranges being—Mother Country, 608; Colonies, 586. The Lords and Commons match was won by the Lords, with 29 points to spare. Total scores:—Lords, 404; Commons, 375. Earl Waldegrave made only 35 points at 200 yards, but at 500 yards he made eight consecutive bull's-eyes, finishing with 47. Cheltenham won the Schools' match, after a grand struggle, their score being 393, against 392 by Eton, and 391 by Harrow.

The Duke of Cambridge, as President of the National Rifle Association, will distribute the prizes at Wimbledon this (Saturday) afternoon; and the meeting will be brought to a close with a series of athletic sports, in which both Volunteers and Regulars will take part.

Welsh literature and the Eisteddfod have lost one of their brightest ornaments in the person of Mynyddog, whose death, on the 14th inst., is announced. He was the author of several volumes of poetry, and wrote many popular ballads, which are set to music by Brinley Richards and John Thomas. But he was best known as a conductor of the Eisteddfod meetings.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

The Middlesex Archaeological Society held their annual general meeting last Monday at their rooms, St. Martin's-place. Mr. Alfred White, F.S.A., who was in the chair, congratulated the society on its increase of members and financial prosperity. He then announced the important papers that were being published in the Society's Transactions. The thanks of the society were given to their two retiring secretaries, Messrs. E. W. Brabrook, F.S.A., and John E. Price, F.S.A., for their seven years of hard work, zeal, and activity. The post was accepted by Mr. George H. Birch, F.S.A. The chairman stated that the summer excursion will take place in the south-east portion of the county; and that the society's collection will be enriched by a bequest of books and drawings from the library of the late Mr. Thomas Hugo, F.S.A.

At the usual monthly meeting of the council of the Surrey Archaeological Society, in Dames Inn, on Wednesday afternoon, an excursion to different places in Horley and Burstow was fixed to take place on Monday, the 30th inst., under the presidency of Mr. J. R. Daniel Tyssen, F.S.A.

At the weekly meeting of the London School Board on Wednesday Sir Charles Reed said that he had received a letter from Mr. Mark Wilks inclosing, on behalf of several personal friends, a cheque for £150 as a contribution to the scholarship funds of the board. The letter was referred to the school-management committee. The annual drill inspection of boys attending the board schools took place in Regent's Park on Thursday afternoon, when about 10,000 boys were officially inspected by Sir Charles Reed.

A petition, signed by upwards of forty thousand persons, has been presented to the Queen against the recent decisions of the Judicial Committee, which the petitioners allege have altered the written law of the Church. They add that they cannot in conscience accept such an arbitrary reversal of the plain directions in the Prayer Book any more than they can recognise the authority of the Committee in spiritual matters. They pray the Crown to take such steps as may prevent congregations being disturbed by any attempt to enforce these decisions, and that all such questions may be settled by the Convocations of the Church.—A number of representative clergymen and laymen have also signed a declaration, in which they recommend submission to the discretion of the Ordinary in regard to the points of ritual touched by the judgment.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The placid stream of affairs in the Upper Chamber has scarcely been ruffled, save by the introduction of a religious current yesterday week. Then a ripple of debate ran three hours on the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Bill, apropos of an amendment moved by Earl Granville to clause 15. The effect of the noble Earl's amendment (worded with a circumlocution of which he is rarely guilty) would have been simply to prevent the Commissioners from reimposing the obligations "referred to in the third section of the Universities Tests Act, 1871." The Marquis of Salisbury based his objections on the fact that the bill placed every confidence in the Commissioners, who might well be trusted in this matter as in others. Lords Morley, Carlingford, Carnarvon, and Cardwell, and the Bishops of London and Oxford took part in the discussion that ensued. Eventually, Earl Granville's amendment was negatived by 103 to 69 votes; and, the remaining clauses having been agreed to without division, a few other bills were advanced a stage.

Lord Oranmore and Browne, on Monday last, felt it incumbent upon him to raise a debate on the statistics of crime in Ireland. In his opinion they showed an increase of crime, and when crime cropped up in particular localities Government ought to enforce measures of suppression by the application of the Westmeath Act, or some such special powers, to the affected districts. The Duke of Marlborough showed, however, that on the whole crime was lessening in Ireland; and, the Lord Lieutenant's authoritative statements having been supported by Lord O'Hagan and Lord Carlingford, the matter dropped.

Less than an hour on Tuesday sufficed to settle the questions and transact the formal business before the House. The Consolidated Fund Bill was read the first time; Lord Redesdale entered a fresh protest against the new clauses for the protection of postal telegraphs; the Enclosure Bill passed through Committee; the Scottish Registered Writs Bill was read the second time; and the Lord Chancellor assured Lord O'Hagan that the revision of Irish statutes would not be lost sight of by the Government.

On Thursday the Earl of Beaconsfield desired to make some observations upon a resolution of the House of Commons amounting to a censure upon the conduct of the Government in respect to a recent public appointment. He had always vindicated the rights and privileges of Parliament, but had never maintained that the resolutions of a committee were infallible, feeling that, if they were so regarded, the effect would be to destroy the responsibility of Ministers. The report of the Committee on the Stationery Department was entitled to the greatest respect, and many of their suggestions had been adopted with public advantage; but he could not agree with them that it would be expedient or possible to appoint a gentleman with technical knowledge to the office of Controller of that department. A successful stationer would not be tempted by a salary of £1000 a year; and the appointment of an unsuccessful tradesman would scarcely conduce to the public interests. But technical knowledge in the three chief branches into which the duties of the department were divided was already amply provided for by means of a permanent staff of experts. The great saving that had been effected in the department had been referred to as a proof of the advantage of technical knowledge, but the fact was that those improvements were due not to Mr. W. H. Smith, but to Mr. Rowland Wynne, who was a country gentleman. The general administration of the Stationery Department not having been very satisfactory, it was thought desirable that new blood should be infused into it; and it was made known in official circles that any man of distinguished abilities and competent to cope with the difficulties of such a post would have his claims favourably considered. Six names were placed before him, and that of M. Pigott was selected after a very full inquiry, without any application by that gentleman or by any friend on his behalf. It was true that the father of Mr. Pigott was thirty years ago Vicar of Hughenden, but he left for a better living soon after the commencement of his (Lord Beaconsfield's) connection with the county, and after registering his vote against him. He had no personal acquaintance with the son, whose appointment had been made from the purest motives, and was actuated by the desire to advance the public interests. Their Lordships would therefore scarcely be surprised when he said that he could not feel himself justified in accepting the resignation which Mr. Pigott had placed in his hands. Earl Granville regarded Parliamentary criticism upon Ministerial patronage as one of the greatest safeguards for good government. The explanation which the noble Lord had thought proper to make was entirely a matter for the consideration of the House. Lord Penzance, the Earl of Northbrook, and Lord Cardwell testified to Mr. Pigott's ability and general qualifications. The subject then dropped. The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Bill, the Inclosure Bill, the Public Works Loans Bill, and the Companies' Acts Amendment Bill were read the third time and passed. Lord Stratheden having moved for papers in respect to the progress of the war in the East, a discussion ensued, in which Lord Stanley of Alderley and other noble Lords took part. Lord Derby, in reply to some of the statements made, observed that the time had not yet arrived for the intervention of England as a peacemaker. When the belligerents were exhausted, and an opportunity for an arrangement presented itself, the efforts of England would not be wanting in order to effect a settlement of matters. No explanation had been given by her Majesty's Government for sending our fleet to Besika Bay, simply because none was ever demanded. Earl Granville deprecated the feeling of hostility towards Russia which was manifested by a party in this country. The motion being withdrawn, their Lordships adjourned.

COMMONS.

The question of prisons has in all conscience occupied enough time this Session. But still the subject has a fascination for Mr. Parnell, who would almost seem to have extended his constituency to our convict establishments. At any rate, yesterday week, this resolute Home Ruler moved that it was desirable that facilities should be given for the independent inspection of prisons. Mr. Whalley coincided with Mr. Parnell. But Mr. Cross could vouch from personal experience—as a voluntary visitor, bien entendu—that our prisons were well managed. The Home Secretary could not, therefore, give his sanction to the motion (which was subsequently withdrawn), but promised that the subject should be considered during the recess. In Committee of Supply several votes were agreed to; and, ere the sitting closed, Mr. Cross informed the House that a Committee, consisting of Mr. Walpole, Mr. Forster, Mr. R. Gurney, Mr. Walter, and Dr. Liddell, had been nominated to inquire not only into the cause of the suicide of the Bluecoat boy, William Gibbs, but also into the general management of Christ's Hospital.

On Monday Mr. Egerton informed Sir John Hay that Admiral Sir James Hope, Mr. George Rendall, Mr. Froude, and Mr. Woolley would form the Committee to report as to the stability of H.M.S. Inflexible. Replying to Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Egerton said that the engagement between H.M.S.

Shah and the Huascar (of which we are this week enabled to give an engraving) was still under the consideration of the law officers of the Crown. The most engrossing topic was Mr. John Holms's motion to the effect that "the recent appointment of Controller of her Majesty's Stationery Office is calculated to diminish the usefulness and influence of Select Committees of this House, and to discourage the interest and zeal of officials employed in the public departments of the State." Mr. Holms implied that the appointment to this office of Mr. Pigott, a War Office clerk, could only be accounted for by the fact that he was the son of the Vicar of Hughenden, who had rendered valuable assistance to the Prime Minister in the county he had long represented. Mr. Mellor seconded the motion, and Mr. A. Brown supported it, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer defended the appointment on the plea that the Premier had selected the man he thought fittest for the post. Mr. Childers and Mr. Mitchell Henry having sent their arrows into Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. Hardy flew to the rescue, and endeavoured to rob them of their sting. The list of malcontents was lengthened by Mr. Watkin Williams, Sir George Balfour, Mr. Mundella, and Sir Rainald Knightley. Mr. Bates alone being faithful among the faithless found in the rank and file of the Conservatives. On a division, Mr. Holms's motion was carried, amid loud cheers, by a majority of four—156 against 152. Ere the House could get into Committee of Supply, Mr. Chamberlain drew from Lord Sandon a promise that the Government would carefully consider the rational suggestion made by the hon. member for Birmingham that public expenditure for national museums of art and science should not be confined to London, Edinburgh, and Dublin; and Mr. Cross made it plain to Sir William Harcourt that, as his common sense is being brought to bear upon the subject of the lengthened detention of prisoners before trial, there is a probability of the grievance being removed. A host of votes then received sanction, to the gratification of Mr. W. H. Smith; and the Consolidated Fund Bill for £20,000,000 was read the third time.

Questions of the usual multifarious character—comprising the composition of the Inflexible Committee, the Right of Search by Turkish Ironclads in the Black Sea, the effective nature of the blockade by Turkey of the Russian coast, Sunday Closing in Ireland, the Crossing of the Balkans by the Russians—were on Tuesday answered from the Ministerial Bench. Several votes were agreed to in Committee of Supply, Mr. Bright remarking on the vote for the Fiji Islands that there seemed to have been great severity shown to the natives during the late war. The particular crime of these savages was that they ate some prisoners, said Mr. Bright, adding, amid much laughter, "Well, that is merely the habit of the country." The Fiji vote was ultimately postponed.

Liquor was the subject which inspired the House—in debate—all Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Callan, who owned the soft impeachment of having used a little "gentle persuasion" in the lobby to dissuade hon. members from making a House, strove to prevent Mr. Sullivan's measure from coming on by raising a point of order. This question settled, a stream of Hibernian loquacity thoroughly drenched Mr. Sullivan's Intoxicating Liquors Bill for closing Irish public-houses at seven on Saturday evenings. Early in the day though it was, Major O'Gorman grew quite poetical. The Major's prose is never prosy; but on this occasion, emulating Mr. Silas Wegg, he dropped into poetry, accused the hon. member for Louth of being in too great a hurry to get into "The Valley of Jehoshaphat," and advised him to be content with the world as it is, raising laughter as he continued:—

You may rail at this life; but from the hour I began it
I've found it a life of enjoyment and bliss;
And until you can find me some happier planet,
More full of enjoyment, I'll content me with this.

As for those chilly orbs on the verge of creation—

He supposed that meant Londonderry and Drogheda (Much laughter)—

Where sunshine and smiles must be equally rare,
If they want a supply of cold hearts for that station,
Heaven knows we have plenty on earth we could spare.

Sir M. Hicks-Beach, whose genius cannot be said to be cast in a poetical mould, likewise opposed the bill, which was eventually rejected without a division. Athirst for yet more fluid matter, Mr. Cowen moved his measure for transferring the granting of publicans' licenses from the present licensing justices to a board of ratepayers. But the hon. member's measure was dashed to the ground. He was placed in a minority of 48—133 against 85.

Mr. Bourke, in reply to questions from Mr. R. Power and Mr. Goddard, on Thursday, stated that reports in reference to the alleged cruelties and tortures inflicted by the Russians and the Bulgarian Christians upon non-combatant Turks had been telegraphed to her Majesty's Government by our own Consuls, as also by the Turkish Government. These reports would be embodied in special papers, as in the case of the Bosnia and Herzegovina outrages, and the House would then be able to judge of them and of the amount of authenticity attaching to them. In reference to the new superintendent's lodge in Hyde Park, Mr. W. H. Smith, replying to Mr. Rylands, stated that it had been built at the expense of Mr. Albert Grant in consideration of the Government having allowed him to take down an unsightly wall opposite his house at Kensington. The operation had entailed no charge upon the Government. To a question from Mr. Hanbury, Mr. Bourke informed the House that the British Commissioner had reported that four vessels filled with stores had been sunk by the Russians, at the Sulina mouth of the Danube, in consequence of which, only a depth of four feet of water had been left for the navigation of the river there. On our Ambassador at St. Petersburg learning the fact, he expressed a hope that measures would be taken by the Russian Government to prevent the destruction of the navigation of the Danube, and our Commissioner had been authorised to join in any protest which the other Commissioners might consider it desirable to make on the subject. The Marquis of Hartington asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it would be convenient for him to make a statement with regard to the progress of public business—the measures which it might become necessary to abandon, and the probable period at which the Session might be brought to a conclusion. The noble Lord disclaimed any present intention of reviewing the conduct or proceedings of her Majesty's Government before the close of the Session. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the course of a detailed statement, stated that the Government proposed to abandon for the present the Valuations Bills for England and Ireland, the Patent for Inventions Bill, the Bishoprics Bill, and the Poor Law (Scotland) Bill. They intended to proceed with the Irish Judicature Bill, the South Africa Bill, the Irish and Scotch Prisons Bills, the County Courts (Ireland) Bill, the Summary Jurisdiction Bill, and the Sheriffs Court (Scotland) Bill. They also hoped to be able to proceed with the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Bill, the Bankruptcy Bill, and the Factories and Workshops Bills. They should ask for the Tuesdays and Wednesdays during the remainder of the Session. Next Thursday would be placed at the service of Mr. Butt for the consideration of the Irish University Bill. With regard to the probable day for the closing of the Session, the right hon. gentleman added that, if the remaining votes in Supply were agreed to within a reasonable period, he hoped they might be able to finish their labours somewhere about Aug. 12. The Marquis of Hartington thought that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had taken rather a too sanguine view of the situation, and suggested the withdrawal of the Factories and Workshops Bill. The House having resumed the consideration of the Irish Judicature Bill in Committee, that subject occupied their attention during the remainder of the night.

Mr. Froude has retired from the contest for the rectorship of Glasgow University. In a letter to the president of the Independent Club Mr. Froude explains that he has taken this step in consequence of Sir Stafford Northcote's candidature, which he looks upon as a challenge to the University to express its opinion on the great questions of the day. Under these circumstances Mr. Froude feels that he could not be instrumental in diminishing even by a single vote the majority by which he trusts the University will signify its approbation of Mr. Gladstone's conduct.

Lord Aberdare on Wednesday introduced to the Lord President of the Council a deputation which presented a memorial asking the Government to make an annual grant of not less than £2500 towards the maintenance of the University College of Wales, and also a grant of not less than £5000 towards the completion of the college building. It is understood that the school is to be removed to Kensington, a suitable site having been procured near the Addison-road. The chief prizes were taken by J. M. Schulhof for Greek and Latin verse, the Truro prize for an English essay, and the Sleath prize for Latin essay. At the conclusion of the speeches, Mr. Walker took that opportunity, the first since his appointment to the high mastership, to express his thanks to the governors, and his deep sense of the responsibility devolving upon him; and he assured them that, if industry and zeal would secure that end, the dignity and honour of Dean Colet's ancient foundation would be safe in his keeping. He felt confident that St. Paul's School had a brilliant future before it, for in all his long scholastic experience he had never met a school in which he had seen so large a proportion of boys of ability and promise as in that.

After some special company drill and a number of evolutions, Colonel Rich complimented Sir Charles Russell on the efficiency and steadiness of his corps, which, he said, was, if not superior, fully equal, to any volunteer corps he had inspected.

Mr. Goschen, M.P., presided last Tuesday night at a dinner, given at the Cannon-street Hotel, to celebrate the election of Sir John Bennett to the aldermanic chair of the Ward of Cheap. The guests, who numbered about 250, included many members of the House of Commons. In proposing the toast of the evening, Mr. Goschen remarked that the difficulties which had arisen respecting Sir John Bennett had not been foreseen by the electors, and had not been foreshadowed in any way on any other occasion when Sir John had been before the citizens. The main cause of the advancement of Sir John to his present honourable position was his unwearied labour in the cause of popular education. In reply, Sir John Bennett expressed the utmost confidence as to the result of the proceedings of the Court of Aldermen, his desire to work in harmony with his colleagues, and his determination to devote his life to the public service. Mr. Kirkman Hodgson, M.P., Mr. Watkin Williams, M.P., Mr. T. Hankey, M.P., Mr. Sullivan, M.P., and Mr. S. Whitbread also spoke to various toasts. Several of the speakers expressed a hope that the Court of Aldermen would not interfere with the freedom of popular election.

Lord Shaftesbury presided on Monday over a crowded meeting at Willis's Rooms in aid of the fund for relieving the distressed refugees from Bosnia and the Herzegovina. The resolutions expressed sympathy with the refugees, and declared that the efforts of Miss Irby and Miss Johnston in relief of the sufferers were worthy of the admiration and gratitude of Englishmen. In addition to the chairman, the gathering was addressed by Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Forster, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., Sir Robert Phillimore, Mr. Hubbard, M.P., Mr. Forsyth, M.P., the Marquis of Bath, and Mr. Mundells, M.P. About £900 was subscribed in the room.—The Stafford House committee has received the following telegram from Mr. Barrington Kennett, commissioner from the Stafford House Fund:—"Shumla, July 12. Have established Stafford Hospital at Rustchuk under Dr. Crookshank, and at Varna, also a transport service in the Shumla and Rustchuk line under Borthwick; now sending 500 wounded from Shumla. Send six more surgeons, £500 worth of quinine, £50 worth of lint, six large hospital tents, £40 worth of leg and arm splints, four regulation amputating-cases, twenty pocket-cases. I am continuing distribution of stores." The committee have also received the following telegram from Erzeroum:—"There are hardly any hospital stores here. Hundreds of wounded arrived, but surgical instruments, bandages, and surgeons greatly needed."

There were 2310 births and 1449 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 1, while the deaths were 27 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 32 from smallpox, 28 from measles, 21 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 46 from whooping-cough, 21 from different forms of fever, and 169 from diarrhoea; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 324 deaths were referred, which were 51 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The number of smallpox patients in the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals, which in the seven preceding weeks had steadily declined from 964 to 641, further declined last week to 618. The deaths referred to diarrhoea, which in the previous six weeks had risen from 13 to 96, further increased to 169 last week, which were, however, 21 below the corrected average weekly number: 134 were of infants under one year of age, and 27 of children aged between one and five years. Different forms of violence caused 60 deaths. In Greater London 2778 births and 1716 deaths were registered. In the Outer Ring 4 fatal cases of smallpox were registered in West Ham, 1 at Hayes, and 1 at Edmonton. The mean temperature was 61.1 deg., and 1.2 deg. below the average. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 40.5 hours out of 113.6 hours the sun was above the horizon.

The Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, at Upper Norwood, was honoured last week by the presence of her Royal Highness Princess Louise, with the Marquis of Lorne, at the concert performed by the pupils, which was connected with the annual meeting of supporters of this institution, and with the opening of its handsome and commodious new buildings. The Duke of Westminster, its munificent president, Sir Rutherford Alcock, the honorary treasurer, and the Dean of Westminster were among those who took part in the proceedings. Mr. F. J. Campbell, the very zealous and efficient Principal of the College, though himself blind, has exercised a high degree of managing ability in its domestic and educational conduct during the past four or five years. A special feature of the institution, as we have frequently explained, is that it seeks to train many of the blind, who have a talent for music, to the occupations of organ-playing, music-teaching, and pianofortetuning, besides giving all the inmates of the College a sound English education, at a moderate charge for board and tuition. There are between sixty and seventy young persons now in the College, and those who have passed through its course are mostly doing very well. It is to be hoped that the public will respond liberally to the appeal for additional funds, to the amount of £7000, to pay off the building debt. We are sufficiently acquainted with the merits of this institution to be enabled heartily to commend it, as we have done on several former occasions.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

The quarterly court of the subscribers to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls was held last Saturday at Freemasons' Hall—Colonel Creton presided. The number of candidates for the October election was declared to be sixty, for ten of whom there will be vacancies. It was resolved to admit twenty-five girls in addition to these ten.

The quarterly court of the subscribers and governors of the Masonic Boys' School was held on Monday at Freemasons' Hall, under the presidency of Mr. John Symonds, vice-president. Vacancies were declared for nine boys at the election of next October, for which there are sixty-three candidates. Mr. Constable was elected an honorary vice-patron of the institution in recognition of his services to the school in bringing up £1226 as a steward at the last festival. Mr. J. B. Monckton is to be presented with a testimonial in recognition of his services to the institution.

The thirty-third annual general meeting of the governors and supporters of the Asylum for Fatherless Children, which is situated at Reedham, near Croydon, and is under the patronage of the Queen, was held on Tuesday at the Cannon-street Terminus Hotel, under the presidency of Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Hadley. At the asylum during the year all things had gone on prosperously. The health of the family had been uniformly good, and the progress made in the instruction of the children most satisfactory. The annual subscriptions showed an increase of nearly £100, but the life subscriptions and donations showed a decrease of £400. The legacies had reached an amount never before attained, £3650. An earnest appeal was made for increased pecuniary support. At the election which subsequently took place thirteen boys and seven girls were elected to receive the benefits of the institution, where there are now nearly 300 children.

The fortieth annual meeting of the members of the Coffee and Eating House Keepers' Association took place last Tuesday evening at Anderson's Hotel—Mr. C. H. Elliott presided. The object of this association is to afford relief to the aged and decayed members of the trade, with their widows and orphans. The report showed that the receipts for the past year amounted to £652. In addition to the usual payments to seventeen annuitants, adequate temporary relief had been granted to some poor widows. The funded capital of the association now amounts to £6317.

The annual gathering of the friends and supporters of the Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home was held at the institution in Prince Arthur's-road, Hampstead, on the 12th inst. Captain the Hon. F. Maude, R.N., presided. The children passed very creditably through an examination in Scripture, history, geography, &c., and interspersed the proceedings with singing. The Home contains forty-three elected children and forty-eight admitted on the nomination of the Admiralty. The institution is wholly dependent on voluntary contributions and payments by the Admiralty for the support of its nominees, and the daughters of sailors in the merchant service are equally eligible with those of the Royal navy.

Sir H. Edwards, Bart., the Grand Master of West Yorkshire, opened a new Masonic Hall at Sheffield on Wednesday. The building will cost £10,000.

COMBAT BETWEEN H.M.S.S. SHAH AND AMETHYST AND THE PERUVIAN IRONCLAD TURRET-RAM HUASCAR.
FROM A SKETCH BY AN EYE-WITNESS.

SKETCHES OF THE WAR IN ASIA, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SIR ARNOLD KEMBALL AND CAPTAIN NORMAN CHASED BY COSSACKS.

THE EXODUS FROM ERZEROU—FUGITIVES PASSING THROUGH GUNESH HANEH.

formed us that the Huascar had surrendered that morning to the Peruvian squadron. We remained off Iquique till daylight, when we anchored under salutes from the Peruvian squadron. We found the Huascar at anchor surrounded by the squadron. Pierola and his officers were prisoners, and the revolution was at an end. This is the third time Pierola has attempted to overthrow the Government and failed; his last venture being also at Ylo, in the Talisman, an English vessel, the seizure of which gave rise to a difference between England and Peru.

"Admiral De Horsey gave Piccola five minutes to consider and haul down his flag. At the expiration of this time a blank charge was fired; then a shotted gun across her bows. The flag remaining up, we commenced the action at six minutes past three o'clock in the afternoon. The Huascar replied with shell from her turret guns, and immediately steered full speed towards Ylo. Her continued manoeuvring backwards and forwards in front of the town, frequently causing us to cease firing, to avoid destroying property. The Huascar moved in evidently with the intention of drawing us after her, her draught of water being only 14 ft., and that of the Shah 27 ft.; while the navigation was rendered highly dangerous owing to rocks and shoals at the entrance of the bay. Our range was principally from 1500 to 2500 yards; but at this distance our two 9-in. guns were able to penetrate her turret and our broadside 7-in. guns her hull at the extremities; our 64-lb. shell guns and those of the Amethyst were only available for clearing the upper deck, destroying boats and upper works, which they did most effectually. Owing to the size and weight of the Shah, and the confined space to manoeuvre in, we were unable to benefit by steaming up to an effective range of 1000 or 1200 yards, and stopping to deliver a steady fire—the greater rapidity of the enemy's movements rendering such action dangerous, and the risk of being rammed before we could "gather way" again too great. About five o'clock the Huascar being clear of the shoals, we seized the opportunity to close. The enemy likewise closed, with evident signs of running, firing shell from her 40-pounder. Our Gatling gun then commenced firing from the foretop, causing the men on her upper-deck quarters to desert their guns. Our port guns immediately commenced "independent firing." A Whitehead torpedo was fired at the moment of passing, but as the Huascar at that instant altered course, turning stern on, the torpedo failed to reach her. The Huascar was going certainly eleven knots, and the torpedo, having only a speed of nine knots, could not overtake the vessel—the torpedo's track was observed going direct about half the distance towards her. The Huascar then steamed full speed close in under the town, and, darkness coming on, we ceased firing, at a quarter to six, and steamed out of range.

"The gunnery Lieutenant and a Lieutenant of the Royal Marine Artillery were sent on board the Huascar, by permission of the Peruvian commodore, to make notes on the damage done during the late engagement. The Huascar is an ironclad turret-vessel, built by Laird, of Birkenhead; the plating on the hull is 4½-inch iron, tapering to 2½-inch at bow and stern, with 14-inch teak backing and inner skin of ½-inch iron; the turret 5½-inch plating, with 14-inch backing and ½ inner skin. The turret mounts two 300-pounder Armstrong M.L.R. guns, throwing segment and common shell and chilled shot, and a steel battering shot—the two former being fitted with percussion fuses, were used during the action; 40-pounder on each side of quarter deck, one 12-pounder aft under the poop—all Armstrong M.L.R. As near as could be judged, from seventy to eighty projectiles must have struck the vessel, principally about the upper deck, funnel casing, bridge, masts, and boats, with numbers of pieces of shell sticking into the woodwork; one 9-inch common shell struck the hull, the starboard side, about two feet from the water line and 50 feet from the stern, in the foremost ward-room cabin, bursting in the backing—the head, splintered in all directions, wounded one man; the base continued its course, killing the sentry and going through the casing in an opposite cabin, brought up against the inner skin; the plating at this spot was 3½ inches, same backing and skin. One bulwark each side was blown away, two 64-pounder shell had penetrated the bulwarks and left indentations in the plating; one heavy shot, evidently a ricochet, hit upper edge of plating, starboard side, scoring it to a depth of three inches, after going through the bulwark; another hit the plating two feet from water-line at an angle, making a dent of 2 in. in depth and 18 in. in length. On the port side there was a similar shot to the ricochet. The hull itself showed that several 64-pounder shell had struck it, only leaving a mark; one shot struck the poop on port quarter and went out on starboard side, splintering on an iron beam. The funnel-casing and funnel had been struck about twelve times by shot and pierced by the Gatling gun. The turret had only been struck once by a 7-in. projectile, hitting direct and penetrating 3 in. The port fore rigging was shot away, and every boat destroyed. The Huascar was admirably fought and manoeuvred.

“With regard to casualties, only one killed and one wounded have as yet been authenticated, though rumours are rife of a larger number. The former was buried at Iquique, covered with the Peruvian ensign, and a placard placed on the coffin bearing the following inscription:—‘This man died while fighting for his country against the British.’

"This is the first instance of an English man-of-war engaging an ironclad of any description, and the first, also, of wooden ships attacking a turret-vessel; and it cannot fail to be of interest."

Our correspondent's sketch represents the moment when the Huascar attempted to ram the Shah, and had run on within four hundred yards of her. The Huascar could not stand the fire of the Shah's guns, and therefore suddenly turned about, and ran in to the shore. It seems, however, that the propriety of Admiral de Horsey's conduct, in attacking the Huascar, is likely to be questioned. Some persons deny that the Huascar had really committed acts of piracy or done injury to British property, and the Peruvian Government itself is disposed to complain, though its ship was in the hands of rebels.

The July publication of the Quarterly Review has brought to bear on the ecclesiastical controversy of these days a rather formidable piece of literary artillery, entitled "The Ridsdale Judgment and the Priest in Absolution." It has also two articles upon the political and military aspects of the conflict between Russia and Turkey, and upon the interests and duties of Great Britain in this matter. But the most interesting papers are those on recent discoveries in art and archaeology in Rome; on the geography and ethnology of New Guinea and Polynesia; and on the novel applications of electricity to useful purposes in peace and war. Two of the accustomed topics of biographical and antiquarian discussion are treated in the usual style.

Danube and the Balkan, just now so much in question.

There is somewhat too much of Portuguese scenes and wayside incidents of travel in the New Quarterly Magazine, contributed by Mr. John Latouche, though pleasant enough of its kind. Miss Cobbe touches a profound mystery of our mortal nature, "the riddle of Death," in a paper which she has chosen to call "The Peak in Darien." Mr. R. Jefferies endeavours to forecast the social changes of English middle-class life in the rural districts. The dismal German philosophy of Schopenhauer and the strange poetic genius of Edgar Poe are analysed by critical essayists here. Mr. R. H. Horne and Mr. George Meredith supply pieces of entertaining fiction.

In the Church Quarterly, as might be expected, a theological inquiry takes the lead, being that provoked by the Rev. E. White's doctrine of utter annihilation instead of eternal torment. The condition of the English Church in the eighteenth century is then reviewed, with reference to the Methodist and Evangelical movements. The life of Titian, the biography of Harriet Martineau, the Indian Mutiny, and the historic character of Falkland, are treated with fair literary taste and skill. Church and State, and the recent judgment concerning Ritual, are made the subjects of two concluding articles.

A protest has been forwarded to the Lord Mayor and the committee formed at the Mansion House to reward the rescuers of the miners who were imprisoned for a length of time through the colliery disaster at Pontypridd, in which it is stated that the list drawn up by the Rev. D. W. Williams and accepted by the committee is grossly incorrect. So satisfied are the signatories of the protest—who state that they were in charge of the rescuing parties—that the list of those to be rewarded is an unfair one, that they emphatically decline to receive the rewards as proposed, and ask for a reconsideration of the whole matter.

In answer to this protest the Lord Mayor has addressed to them the following communication:—

"Mansion House, July 17.—Sirs,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of yesterday, in which you express your dissent from the result at which, after long, patient, and mature deliberation, the committee arrived as to the rewards to be given to those who took part in the rescue of the miners at the Tyn-y-wydd Colliery, in April last. Your ground for such dissent is the assertion that the committee adopted the list (which you say was incorrect) prepared by the Rev. D. W. Williams, a gentleman whose indefatigable exertions for the relief of the sufferers entitle him to much praise, and whose advice the committee not only sought but profited by. Now, the names of the widows and orphans and of the rescued men were common to all, and the committee made their awards in accordance with the universal view. The rewards also to the shift colliers and pump-men have been left entirely to Mr. Wales to settle at so much per day, and the carpenters, carters, &c., are to be remunerated on the same principle. As for the colliery agents, engineers, and others, among whom you rank, it is but just to Mr. Williams to state emphatically that his list was not made the standard of adjustment, and that he took no part in the discussion as to the amount of those awards. The vote was adopted by the whole committee; and, while I, personally, held (and still hold) that no part of the fund collected by me at the Mansion House was subscribed by the public with the view or for the purpose of rewarding gentlemen in your position of life, yet I thought that pieces of plate of considerable value, with appropriate inscriptions, might be acceptable to you in recognition of the meritorious services you rendered. I am sorry you think it right to decline a memento of such an event, but I fully accept as final your determination in that respect.—I am, Sirs, yours very faithfully,

THOMAS WHITE, Lord Mayor of London.

To James Thomas, Esq., Tyn-y-wydd Colliery, and others.

It is understood that, consequent upon this exhibition of ill-feeling, the Lord Mayor has decided to abandon his proposed visit to Wales to distribute the fund. Of the gentlemen who signed the protest three had been voted presents of the value of 60 guineas each, and the others of £30 each.

IV The NEXT TERM will begin on MONDAY, SEPT. 24.

THE WAR: A STREET SCENE IN NICOPOLIS.
FROM A SKETCH BY ONE OF OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS ON THE DANUBE.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE WAR.

Our Special Artists, both in Armenia and in Bulgaria, with the Russian and the Turkish armies, have supplied numerous Illustrations of the warlike proceedings, in Asia as well as in Europe, which have lately assumed a more sanguinary character. The Russians have been thoroughly defeated in their Armenian campaign, as we stated last week, and have been driven back to their Georgian frontier. The Turkish garrison of Kars has been relieved, and the siege of that fortress is abandoned for the present time. The Russian garrison of Bayazid has been withdrawn, after standing a brief siege, till the arrival of help.

Our Special Artist with the Turkish army in Asia contributes the sketch, reproduced in a two-page Engraving, which represents the battle of Taghir or Dagha, fought on the 16th ult., when the Turkish right wing sustained a temporary check, but four days afterwards, under the command of Ismail Pasha, retrieved its defeat by beating General Tergusakoff in several repeated encounters, and forced him to retreat on Bayazid. The place mentioned as Taghir is about forty miles eastward of Erzeroum, on the road from Erzeroum to Bayazid, and the same distance to the southward of Kars, as is shown in our small map of that district, in last week's Paper, with a summary account of the close of the Armenian campaign. General Sir Arnold Kemball, the British military commissioner accompanying Mukhtar Pasha's head-quarter staff, had a narrow escape of being killed by the Cossacks in pursuit after the Turkish defeat. This unexpected personal danger was shared by Captain Norman, his companion and official assistant. The Times' correspondent at Constantinople speaks of having heard "wild reports that Sir Arnold Kemball had been shot, according to one account, in the hat, according to another, in the head; and that Captain Norman, who was with him, was wounded. There had, however, been more than the usual foundation for these stories, as a shell did burst between them, and a fragment tore Captain Norman's right sleeve, slightly grazing his arm. They also, like the Frenchman in the story, made a body of Cossacks run for nearly twenty-five miles—a feat which may be the foundation of another wild rumour here, that Sir Arnold took, at one time, command of the Turkish forces. It was really the Cossacks whom he led, keeping well to the front. It was a most exciting stern chase; but, fortunately for all concerned, Sir Arthur and Captain Norman were well mounted, and had got information at a critical moment that the Cossacks had been making special tender inquiries after 'the English General.' We have received from an eye-witness of this remarkable incident the sketch reproduced in one of our Illustrations. There are tolerably exact accounts of that day's engagement, according to which the same troops who were then defeated would seem to have been reinforced, and, after a hard fight, in which they showed great gallantry, to have driven the Russians back. Sir Arnold Kemball very soon rejoined the staff of the Turkish Commander-in-Chief, and has accompanied his army to Kars, entering that place on the 7th inst.

It is the intention of Mukhtar Pasha to strengthen the defences of Kars, and remain there for the winter.

Some further Illustrations are given this week of Russian military movements on the Danube and in Bulgaria, and of the condition of Nicopolis, and other towns and villages along that river, when the Russians bombarded them and stormed the Turkish positions on its left bank. Nicopolis, or Nikopol, as its Greek name is more commonly pronounced and spelt, stands nearly twenty miles above Sistova and Simnitsa, where the Russians actually crossed the river on the 27th ult. Opposite Nicopolis is the mouth of the Aluta, which flows into the Danube on the Roumanian side, at the village of Turnu Magurele. The Russians had made a great show of preparations for crossing at Turnu Magurele, and the Emperor and the Grand Duke Nicholas were there on the day before the troops went across the river at Simnitsa. Nicopolis had been fiercely bombarded several days before, when one of our Special Artists was in the town. It has since been treated with more than one repetition of the bombardment, and was finally captured, last Monday night, by the Russians under command of Baron Krudener. We are told that on Thursday week, and again on Saturday and Sunday last, the town of Nicopolis was severely bombarded by the Roumanian batteries at Ialacz and the Russian field artillery posted south and west of the fortress. The fortress was actually surrounded on the land side by the Russians, and their shells could be plainly seen from the Roumanian side bursting upon the Turkish fortifications. The fight on the last day was very stubborn, especially upon the storming of the southern forts, the possession of which was vigorously disputed for several hours. The Turks, however, overwhelmed by superior numbers, were compelled to retire into the fortress. While this column was effecting its retreat another battalion made a sortie, and attacked the advancing Russians on their flank. At that moment, however, the Roumanian batteries from Islacz directed their fire upon the Turkish battalion, which was soon compelled also to re-enter the fort. The battle lasted till nine at night, when the Russians had occupied all the positions before the city formerly held by the Turks. The Russian troops fought bravely; they belonged to the 9th Corps, and consisted of two divisions of Infantry and one Division of Cavalry. Their losses are reported to be severe. On Monday night the Turkish troops, numbering 6000 men, including the garrison, under command of Hassan Pasha and Ahmed Pasha, surrendered, with two monitors and forty cannon. This most recent news gives additional interest to our Special Artist's sketch of a street scene at Nicopolis, where great consternation was caused by the enemy's approach and attack upon that town.

The advance of the Russian vanguard to Tirnova, fifty miles south of the Danube at Sistova, was mentioned in our last. It appears that a small detachment of light cavalry reached Tirnova on the 2nd inst.; it was unable to remain there, but went back to report that there was no Turkish force in the neighbourhood; and on Saturday, the 7th inst., General Gourko arrived and took possession of Tirnova, with half a squadron of the Guard and 200 Don Cossacks. The new Provisional Government of Bulgaria, under Russian orders, is to be installed at this place, which was the ancient ecclesiastical and political capital in the Middle Ages. It stands in a picturesque and romantic situation among the hills, on the banks of the river Jantra, as the reader will see in the view presented on our front page this week. The road from Tirnova to Gabrova, at the foot of the Balkan range, and thence by the Schipka Pass over those mountains, is described in another notice; but we learn that General Gourko has contrived to pass the Balkans, with his cavalry force, by a different route, some little distance to the east, and has descended upon the Roumanian plain in the neighbourhood of Yamboli and Yeni Sagra. The Turkish forces in Bulgaria seem to be concentrated within the Quadrilateral, or space between the four principal fortresses, Rustchuk and Shumla, Silistria and Varna. The Russians are about to besiege Rustchuk, and to cut off the communications of Shumla, which will oblige Abdul Kerim to fight a decisive battle. Such are the immediate prospects of the campaign in Bulgaria; but the latest news, to Thursday evening, is given in another page of this week's Number.

The minor incidents of Turkish camp life and ordinary regimental business are displayed in a series of small sketches, occupying the reverse side of our Extra Supplement.

PASSES OF THE BALKANS.

The Danube was the first line of defence for the Turkish Empire in Europe, and that line has been forced. The second line of defence was the Balkan mountain range, and the advanced guard of the Russian army has crossed it; but we have yet to see how it will be surmounted by the bulk of the invading host. This great natural bulwark, as shown in every map, separates Bulgaria, strictly so called, from the province of Roumelia, which is partly inhabited by the Bulgarians and partly by the Turks, the latter dwelling around Adrianople, and eastward towards the Sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus. The Balkan range in its highest peak, Orbelus, attains an altitude of 9000 ft., and all along the western portion of it the summits are covered with snow till about the middle of June. The eastern portion of the range is lower, never rising beyond 4000 ft. or 5000 ft., and to the traveller approaching the range from the Bulgarian side appears to be far less lofty than it really is, from the fact of his having to scale a low range of hills lying close along the foot of the mountain range. In general character the mountains which now lie before the Russians appear to be round hills densely covered with woods, huge masses of granite rock appearing only in the valleys. It is not, however, with the actual Balkans that the difficulties of an invader begin. According to Moltke, who describes the country now before the Russians from a purely strategical point of view, the Bulgarian plains at this part of the range are covered for an immense distance with underwood of oak, which renders it impossible for troops to march straight across the country. The hills rising from these plains constitute apparently no inconsiderable difficulty. "They are of limestone rock," says Count von Moltke, "their tops are perfectly flat, and from these the sides fall in perpendicular walls of rock, varying from 10 to 200 feet in height, often forming the most singular defiles. Towards the valleys the face of the rock slopes more and more as it descends. The hill tops, therefore, are accessible only at a very few points; they are mostly wooded, not with the magnificent trees of the Balkans, but with almost impenetrable brushwood." The idea of the Balkans presenting an insurmountable barrier against an invader, Count Moltke makes somewhat light of. He thinks it is not warranted by the height or formation of the mountains. It is partly a traditional notion, he says, and in so far as it has any foundation, it is based upon "a number of small difficulties which are accumulated in five or six marches, and which have to be encountered by all the troops in succession." The roads, too, are few and bad; they are, in fact, mere bridle paths, and the defence of the Balkans, therefore, might be carried on, "not so much by erecting forts on the principal defiles, as by bodies of troops which would occupy them, and with the assistance of barricades, abatis, &c., oppose a very formidable resistance to any force attempting to cross the mountains."

The famous German tactician next proceeds to discuss the practicable passes for troops. Excluding from consideration the road from Widin through Servia, which enters Turkey by way of Nissa and Sophia, we may describe six routes leading southward from the Danube, above the Dobrudscha, and crossing the Balkans, from Bulgaria into Roumelia, converging upon Adrianople:—

1. From Rahova or Nicopolis, on the Danube, by Lovatz, thence over the Balkans to Philippopolis, and by Hirmenli to Adrianople.
2. From Sistova or from Rustchuk, the roads from these two places joining at Biela or Senovzy, and thence proceeding by Tirnova and Grabova, the Schipka pass over the Balkans, and down to Kazanlik and Eski-Sagra, and to Hirmenli.
3. From Rustchuk to Osman Bazar and to Kazan, whence there are roads over the mountains to Karnabat and Yamboli, at which last-named place there is a railroad to Hirmenli, and by Buyuk Derbend there is direct communication with Adrianople.
4. From Rustchuk to Rasgrad, where the Turtukal and Silistria roads join, and thence to Shumla, and Tschulikevak and Indschikbi, whence a road goes to Kazan. There is also a direct road from Silistria to Shumla.
5. From Silistria to Pravadi and Aidos.
6. All the Dobrudscha roads unite, and, passing by Karamured and Hadji Oglu Bazarjik, pass to Kolydscha. At Kolydscha, one branch turns to Pravadi, and the other to Varna and Podbashi, and eventually to Aidos.

Route No. 1 is the longest, but an army moving some way further still to the westward could cross the mountains at the lowest point west of the Jantra.

Route No. 2, by Rustchuk, Tirnova, and Kazanlik, is blocked by Tirnova, which, being surrounded by the Jantra river, offers a strong position. Von Moltke, however, considers this is the easiest pass to force. The road is also the best, though even on this the mail-cart takes eighteen hours to go from Rustchuk to Tirnova, sixty-four miles, rather more than three miles an hour. The late Lieutenant Burke, R.E., wrote of this road in 1854 as being quite passable for artillery.

Route No. 3, by Osman Bazar, Kazan, and Slivno, is very difficult, the track near the latter place crossing a number of deep wooded dells, with numberless streams running down to the Kamtchik river.

Routes Nos. 4 and 5, by Silistria, Shumla, and Aidos, offer no difficulties as far as Tschulikevak. Thence the road winds through ravines, and along the sides of precipices to the summit, whence it descends by a steep defile. A recent writer states that these roads have been made passable for carriages, but he apparently discredits his own statement.

Route No. 6, Kolydscha and Pravadi, presents some, but not very great, difficulties. The passage of the Kamtchik is difficult, and in one spot the valley is only fifty paces across, with high perpendicular walls of rock. Nevertheless, this passage is quite possible, as General Diebitch crossed in 1829, though virtually unopposed, and with only a small force.

South of the Balkans the soil produces silk and flax, besides cereals, the valley of Kazanlik being dotted with orchards, and rose-bushes for the manufacture of attar of roses. If the Russians are to protect all the districts where Bulgarians have been ill-treated, this will leave the Turks merely a narrow strip of country lying to the south of Adrianople, as many of the outrages occurred in the Philippopolis district.

There is little doubt that, once over the Balkans, the Russians would endeavour to press on to Constantinople. Nature has, however, provided the Turkish imperial city with a stronger position than the art of man has been able to construct for any other capital. Advancing from the Balkans the Russians will come, at about twenty miles from Constantinople, on a natural barrier formed by a chain of steep hills which runs from the Black Sea to the Sea of Marmora, its base protected by the Kara-su river, forming wide marshes, and the lake of Buyuk Tchekmedj. The length of this line of defence is twenty-five miles, but only the central portion, about eight miles, needs defensive fortifications. With these properly held it will be almost impregnable.

TORPEDO WARFARE.

We recently gave a few sketches illustrating torpedo attack; but the subject of torpedo warfare generally is of a very interesting and novel character, and is now engrossing public attention by entering so greatly into the operations of belligerents in the East. We are therefore induced to return to the subject, and publish two sketches illustrating the defence against torpedoes. These occupy one side of our Extra Supplement this week.

Our first Illustration represents the Turkish fleet at anchor in Suda Bay, prepared for and exercising against a supposed attack, either by the Whitehead torpedo, which travels under water, the Harvey torpedo, which is towed into contact by a fast steam-launch or other vessel, or the outrigger torpedo, which is carried at the end of a spar projecting from the bow of a boat.

It should ever be remembered that one of these dangerous weapons, successfully exploded under the bottom or against the side of an ordinary ironclad or other vessel not specially built to withstand them, is sufficient either to sink her or to render her entirely unfit for immediate service. The defence, therefore, against them demands careful study, for negligence in this respect has enabled two successful attempts to be made out of the many attempts of the Russians to destroy the Turkish squadrons or single ships during the present war. Since these disasters greater precautions have been taken, and the Turkish fleet at the Sulina mouth of the Danube is declared to be at the present moment perfectly protected against any similar attacks which may be made, and of course will be made.

In the first place each ship is entirely surrounded by nets, kept at a distance of from 12 ft. to 20 ft. from the side "and extending to 12 ft. below the surface" by means of struts. These nets are calculated to keep out the fish torpedo, or any floating mechanical mine which may be sent down the tide against the vessels. The approaches to the fleet are further guarded by a line of floating spars, moored at a distance of from eleven to fifteen hundred yards from the ships. These are quite sufficient to check the advance of any steam-launch armed with the Whitehead, Harvey, or Outrigger Torpedo; and as the action of the former weapon is ineffectual unless it be used within 1000 yards, it is of no use operating with them outside that distance. A very simple arrangement of electric wires attached to these spars, and communicating with the ships at anchor, will at once designate to those on board the exact point where an enemy is trying to break through. The ships' guns, having been previously laid for certain points in this line of defence, can accordingly be discharged immediately at the threatened point, on an alarm being raised. A line of small floating torpedoes can also be used inside the line to augment the defence.

Swift Thorneycroft steam-launches and gigs are told off as patrols, to destroy any intruder, either by rockets or with outrigger torpedoes; and the ships are supplied with the electric light, by the aid of which any operations carried on during the darkest nights can be disclosed.

Our second Illustration represents what has actually taken place on the eastern shores of the Black Sea, where the torpedo obstructions previously laid down by the Russians for the defence of Poti have been removed by divers working with Denayrouze's submarine electric or with the common light. Different means have been devised for removing such obstacles, but the quickest and most efficient is the one to which we now refer, by which Hassan Pasha has been enabled, off Poti and Soukhoun Kaleh, to clear the water of all torpedoes, removing eleven at the former place alone.

There is a special instrument which warns the defence of the approach of an ironclad, and which can explode a torpedo laid down in connection with it. It must be understood that a friendly vessel would be previously informed of the exact position of sunken torpedoes, and accordingly steer clear of them. Although this little instrument acts the part of a most perfect sentry, it has the one drawback of not being able to discern between friends and foes; and, should anyone but an enemy be passing through the channel, he must either be piloted through, or all the torpedoes must be rendered harmless by detaching the firing-wire at the torpedo station.

We shall give some further illustrations of the apparatus used with torpedoes, and the methods of its application.

THE NEW ACT ON PRISONS.

The new Act "to Amend the Law relating to Prisons in England," which received the Royal assent on the 12th inst., has been issued, containing sixty-one sections, divided into two parts—the first part relating to the transfer and administration of prisons, and the second to the obligation to maintain prisons and prisoners, with the mode of treatment to be adopted. The statute as to its general provisions will not take effect till April 1 next, which is termed the "commencement;" but it has immediate operation as to the rules and regulations to be made by the Secretary of State, and the appointment by her Majesty, on his recommendation, of "Prison Commissioners," not to exceed five in number, and the salaries of the Commissioners, with the other officers and servants, to be such as the Secretary of State, with the consent of the Treasury, may determine. On April 1 the maintenance of prisons and prisoners to be defrayed by moneys provided by Parliament, and the prisons to vest in the Secretary of State. The duties of the "Prison Commissioners" are set forth, and reports to be made by them to the Home Secretary when required, and annual reports to be laid before Parliament. The duties of the visiting justices are specified, and other matter set forth for the management of gaols. In the second part of the statute there are supplemental provisions as to the obligation to maintain prisons, as to contracts and debts; the discontinuance of prisons, the status of prison officers, and other miscellaneous matters.

It is announced in Tuesday's Gazette that the Queen has appointed Lieutenant-Colonel E. F. Du Cane, C.B., R.E., Vice-Admiral W. W. Hornby, J. W. P. Watlington, Esq., and W. J. Stopford, Esq., to be Commissioners under this Act.

The Royal Historical Society held its last meeting for the session in the rooms, 11, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, on the 12th inst.—Dr. B. W. Richardson in the chair. Dr. Rogers read a paper on "The Collegiate Church of Crail," in which he referred to the chartulary of Crail now being printed for the Grampian Club. The Collegiate Church was that in which John Knox, in June, 1559, first inculcated the doctrine of destroying the churches in order to the downfall of superstition. A paper by Mr. William Kelly, of Leicester, was read by the secretary on "The Visitation of the Plague at Leicester." This paper, which was founded on materials derived from the borough records of Leicester, abounded in graphic detail. Dr. Heinemann next gave an address on the history of Baron Stein, the Prussian statesman. In closing the business, the chairman stated that the present session had been the most prosperous in the society's career.

The first annual Congress on Domestic Economy, promoted by the Society of Arts, was opened at Birmingham on Tuesday evening by a conversazione. Amongst those present were Professor Huxley, Sir Henry Cole, General Cotton, and the Mayor of Birmingham, who presided. Letters were received expressing sympathy with the objects of the congress from Lord Sandon, the Earl of Litchfield, Lord Wrottesley, the Earl of Harrowby, Lord Hampton, Lord Leigh, and numerous members of the House of Commons. On the two following days there were morning and afternoon sittings, when various papers relative to the subject in question were read. Amongst the papers were the following:—"A Birmingham School-Board Bank," Dr. Langford; "Head to Foot Washing," Edwin Chadwick, C.B.; "Elementary Instruction to Children in Physiology," Professor Huxley, F.R.S.; "Infant Life," the Countess of Ebersburg; "Substitution of Scientific Subjects for Fancy Work in Girls' Education," Mrs. F. E. Hoggan, M.D.; "Nursing in connection with Education," Miss Helen Taylor; "Provident Dispensaries—a means for providing for sickness," Lawson Tait, F.R.C.S.; "Warning and Ventilation," Captain Galton, C.B., F.R.S.; and "Nursing," Mrs. W. E. Gladstone; "The Practical Development of Elementary Education, through Domestic Economy," Sir Henry Cole, K.C.B.; "The National Training-School for Cookery," Mrs. Charles Clarke; "Combination of Practice with Theory in Cooking Lessons for Public Elementary Schools," Mrs. Rowland Williams; and "Errors in Diet," Dr. Wilson.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This establishment is to close for the season this (Saturday) evening.

On Saturday last "Le Vispe Comari di Windsor" was produced, being an Italian version of Nicolai's "Die Lustigen Weiber von Windsor."

Born in 1810, at Königsberg, Otto Nicolai died at Berlin in 1849, not long after the first performances of the opera, the best and most successful of his stage works—his compositions having also comprised much pianoforte and other music.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the text of the work now referred to is based on Shakespeare's comedy, and that Falstaff is a prominent character in the opera, that name having been given to it when brought out by Mr. Mapleson at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1864. The cast then included Mdlle. Titians as Mrs. Ford, Signor Giuglini as Fenton, Mr. Santley as Ford, Signor Bettini as Slender, and Signor Junca as Falstaff. This distribution was afterwards (in 1867) changed in some respects. Signor Giuglini had died in the meantime, and the part of Fenton was transferred to Mr. Hohler, as was that of Falstaff to Herr Rokitanaky, and that of Anne Page to Madame Sinico, Mdlle. Titians and Mr. Santley having again represented the characters before associated with them.

Nicolai's music, if not very original or individual in character, abounds in genial melody of a graceful and vocal character; the movements are well constructed, and the instrumentation is skilful and effective. Although the opera has not had many representations in this country, the overture has frequently been introduced in concert programmes. This bright and characteristic prelude was finely played on Saturday, and was redemanded and repeated. The characters of the merry wives, Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, were admirably filled, respectively, by Mdlle. Thalberg and Madame Scalchi—the former lady having obtained a special success, and greatly enhanced thereby the favourable impression created by her previous performances. Her singing and acting were both characterised by grace and vivacity; her brilliant voice and florid execution having been particularly manifested in the scene (recitative and air) in the first act, in which Mrs. Ford meditates on the projected treatment of Falstaff by the Merry Wives. In the introductory duet with Mrs. Page, in that with Ford in the second act, in subsequent scenes with the infuriated husband, in those with Falstaff, Mdlle. Thalberg's performance was of great merit. In the opening duet for Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, in other concerted passages for these characters, in the trio with Falstaff in the last act—not to mention other instances—Madame Scalchi sang with great effect. Mdlle. Bianchi was a very satisfactory representative of Anne Page, and gained great and deserved applause by her excellent delivery of the scene in the third act. Signor Piazza gave the music of Fenton in very artistic style, having been especially successful (and encored) in the romanza, "Odi, canta l'usignol." The love duet for Fenton and Anne Page was another specialty of the evening. It was admirably sung, and much enhanced in effect by Mr. Carrodus's fine playing in the violin obbligato, the concerted cadenza for voices and solo instrument having been a special feature. The music belonging to the part of Ford was well rendered by Signor Pandolfini, who was thoroughly efficient in the duets with Mrs. Ford and that with Falstaff. The last-named character was filled by Signor Capponi, who was more successful in his singing than in his acting. The composer has not succeeded in impressing any humour on the music of this part—the quaintness of the Knight's drinking-song, with its sudden changes of time, being forced rather than genial. The other principal characters were well filled by Signor Scolaro as Mr. Page, Signor Rosario as Slender, and Signor Caracciolo as Dr. Caius. The new scenery, including the final view of Windsor Park, with Herne's Oak, by moonlight, is very beautiful. The dresses and appointments are in the style of excellence usual at this establishment, and the ballet action in the last scene is picturesque and diversified.

"La Traviata" was announced for Monday, and "Le Vispe Comari di Windsor" for Tuesday, its second and last performance this season, the occasion having been for the benefit of Mdlle. Thalberg. Other benefit nights were to follow—that of Madame Adelina Patti on Thursday, when "Faust" was to be given; and that of Mdlle. Albani yesterday (Friday), in "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Hamlet" having been the opera on Wednesday, and "Aida" being promised for this (Saturday) evening, the closing night of the season.

The season just terminated opened on April 3 with the familiar "Un Ballo in Maschera," cast as often before. As promised in Mr. Gye's prospectus, three out of the five novelties named by him have been produced—Wagner's "Der Fliegende Holländer," Italianised as "Il Vascello Fantasma," the Duke of Saxe Coburg's "Santa Chiara," and (as stated above) Nicolai's "Le Vispe Comari di Windsor." Great and deserved success attended the production of Wagner's and Nicolai's works, which will doubtless be the result of their performances next year. The opera of his Royal Highness will scarcely, perhaps, be heard much more of.

In addition to the singers specified above, other well-known artists have contributed in their several degrees to the attraction and efficiency of the performances. Mdlles. d'Angeri, Marimon, Smeroschi, Cottino, and Ghiotti; Mesdames Saar, Dell'Anese, and Corsi; Signori Nicolini, Marini, Carpi, Pavani, M. Capoul, Signori Sabater, Rossi, M. Maurel, Signori Cotogni, Graziani, Baggiolo, Ciampi, and M. Raguer, have appeared.

Several new appearances have been made, the most successful having been those of Signori Gayarré, Pandolfini, and Ordinas.

The orchestra—with Mr. Carrodus as principal first violin and soloist—has maintained its reputation, and the chorus-singing has been as effective as hitherto; the duties of conductor having been, as before, skilfully fulfilled, in alternation, by Signori Vianesi and Bevigiani. The ballet department has been well sustained, with Mdlle. Girod and Mdlles. H. and L. Reuters as principal dancers.

Some beautiful new scenery was supplied by Messrs. Dayes and Caney for the operas newly brought out here, and the dresses and appointments throughout the season have been on the scale of splendour usual at this theatre; Signor Tagliafico having proved himself thoroughly efficient in his new office of stage manager.

Mr. Pittman's skilled co-operation at the organ has again been serviceable in some of the grand operas; and he has, moreover, proved his literary ability by his clever adaptations of an English version of the Italian text of the operas newly produced.

The last Floral Hall concert of the season took place on Saturday, when, as on previous occasions, most of the eminent artists of the Royal Italian Opera company (including Madame Adelina Patti and Mdlles. Albani and Marimon) and the choristers of the establishment contributed to a varied programme. Mdlle. Gaul played a pianoforte fantasia by Thalberg with much brilliancy. Sir J. Benedict, Signor Vianesi, and Signor Bevigiani conducted.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The season of this establishment is announced to close on Saturday next, July 28.

The performances since our last notice have consisted of repetitions of operas cast as previously.

On Tuesday Mdlle. Etelka Gerster obtained another great success as Elvira in "I Puritani," her vocalisation having been throughout of the most brilliant kind. The Polacca aria "Son vergin vezzosa" was encored, and several recalls testified to the impression made by the singer. Other characters were well filled by Mdlle. Robiati (Enrichetta), Signor Fancelli (Arturo), Signor Rota (Riccardo), Herr Rokitanaky (Giorgio), Signor Brocolini (Walton), and Signor Rinaldini (Bruno). For Wednesday "Faust" was announced, for the benefit of M. Faure, and his last appearance this season. On Thursday "Lucia di Lammermoor" was to be given; and this (Saturday) evening "I Puritani" is to be repeated—each with Mdlle. Gerster in the principal character.

To-day (Saturday) Mr. Mapleson takes a benefit at the Crystal Palace. The programme is of special attractiveness, comprising an afternoon concert, to which Mesdames Nilsson and Trebelli, and other eminent artists of Her Majesty's Theatre, and Mr. Sims Reeves, will contribute; and operatic performances, in the Sydenham theatre, in the evening, sustained by members of Mr. Mapleson's company. The benefit is under Royal patronage, and can scarcely fail to prove a great success, the programme being one of rare interest. Such a result, too, is well deserved by Mr. Mapleson, on account of the energy and enterprise which have distinguished his long career as an operatic manager. For some years before the destruction by fire of the old opera-house in the Haymarket (in 1867), Mr. Mapleson was the lessee of that establishment, having again occupied the same ground on the long-delayed opening of the new theatre for the season just about to close. In the old house, and in his temporary occupation of Drury-Lane Theatre, Mr. Mapleson has produced some great works and brought forward some great singers; among the former, Cherubini's "Medea" and Gluck's "Iphigenie;" among the latter, Madame Christine Nilsson. During the present season Mr. Mapleson would have revived "Medea," and brought out Gluck's "Armida," but for the lamentable illness of Mdlle. Titians, for whom no substitute could be found as the representative of the principal characters in those operas. Notwithstanding this serious hindrance, Mr. Mapleson has well sustained the interest of the performances at Her Majesty's Theatre, and has recently (as we have more than once recorded) added another—Mdlle. Gerster—to the list of excellent artists brought forward by him. On every account, therefore, it is to be hoped that the Crystal Palace benefit will prove a special success.

Music still flourishes at the Alexandra Palace, where grand promenade concerts are being given, in the central hall, on Thursday and Saturday evenings. The permanent band of the establishment is increased for these occasions to eighty performers, besides which there is a military band, and the Alexandra Palace choir of 200 voices. The first part of last Thursday's programme consisted of opera recitals, "Faust" and "Masaniello;" the second part, of ballads and dance music. Mr. H. Weist Hill conducts the performances. For Thursday afternoon "Maritana" was announced, with Madame Edith Wynne in the title-character, and Mr. George Perren as Don Cesar de Bazan.

The Telephone, introduced into M. Riviere's concerts at the Queen's Theatre, of which we gave some account in our last issue, is improving nightly.

Among the benefit concerts given this week are Miss Carrie Pringle's morning concert, on Wednesday, at Langham Hall; that of Miss Alice Sydney Burvett, the Australian pianiste, at Willis's Rooms, on Thursday morning; in the evening of the same day the tenth and last of Mr. Richard Blagrove's concertina concerts at the Royal Academy of Music; and, yesterday evening, Mr. A. L. Oswald's concert in the same locality.

Mr. Vernon Lushington, Q.C., presided on the 19th inst. at the opening soirée of the season at the Tonic Sol-Fa College, at Plaistow. Students to the number of fifty have assembled from all parts of the three kingdoms. They are nearly all engaged as choir masters, preceptors, and teachers of music in choral societies and day schools, and come up to London during their holidays for six weeks of training in the art of teaching music and the practice of singing and playing various instruments.

The Crystal Palace Company have made arrangements for an autumn series of operas in English, to begin on Saturday, Aug. 4, and to be continued on succeeding Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. The first series of ten operas will comprise some works never before performed at the Crystal Palace, including Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Donizetti's "Don Pasquale," and Sir Julius Benedict's "Brides of Venice," &c. Among the artists with whom engagements have been made or are pending are Mesdames Rose Herasée, Cave-Ashton, Arabella Smyth, and Louisa Pyne; Mdlles. Franklin, Palmer, and St. John; MM. Perren, Pearson, Cotte, Wood, and Parkinson; MM. Celli, Temple, Lithgow-James, Arthur Howell, and Pyatt; and Signor Campobello. Conductor, Mr. Sidney Naylor. The season will open with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro."

The Carl Rosa Opera Company will resume its performances in the first week of August at Dublin. Several important additions to the company have recently been made, and the repertory has been enlarged. A leading novelty will be an English adaptation of Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," with the dialogue almost entirely taken from Shakespeare's play. The part of Falstaff will probably be filled by Mr. Aynsley Cook. Other novelties are in preparation for the provincial tour of the company, which is likely to extend at least to the end of November.

THEATRES.

"Flirtation," a comedy by two young authors new to the stage, was represented on Saturday afternoon last for the first time before a London audience at the Globe. Messrs. Romer and Bellamy, the authors, may be commended for recasting old and familiar materials in a fresh and amusing form. Their dialogue, crisp and humorous, provoked abundant laughter. Their plot, if conventional, was unquestionably interesting; and, worked out as the story was very much after the fashion set by the late Mr. T. W. Robertson, the authors of "Flirtation" deserved the applause they received, in common with the actors and actresses, at the fall of the curtain. We may return to the theme of the play in the not improbable event of its being reproduced for a run at one of the many theatres in town. Now it is only necessary to add that, whilst all concerned in "Flirtation" acted with finished ease, Mr. E. Righton convulsed the house by his exceedingly humorous impersonation of a fiery little love-maker, Major Shoreshot, a creation distinct from, but quite equal in fun and drollery to, Major Wellington de Boots; and Miss Lydia Foote made a fresh bid for popularity by her bright and laughing, albeit at times pathetic, embodiment of the rôle of a captivating coquette. The comedy was preceded by the farce of "Perfection," in which Miss Constance Owen made a favourable début as Kate O'Brien.

Drury-Lane is announced to reopen for the autumn and winter season on Saturday, Sept. 15, with a romantic and realistic drama, which is further described as "entirely new and original." The scenery will be supplied by Mr. Beverly.

Madame Chaumont has closed her engagement at the Gaiety, and on Monday the Paris Vaudeville company put in an appearance. The pieces performed were the "Perfidie comme l'Onde," a comedy in one act, by M. O. Gastineau, sustained by the talent of three excellent actresses, Mdlle. Rejane, Mdlle. Berty, and Madame Lagneau; and another comedy in three acts by Messrs. Delacour and Hennequin, full of practical jokes and noisy incidents, entitled "Procès Vauradieux." The principal artists were M. Parade, M. Dieudonne, M. Train, Madame Alexis, and Mdlle. Massin, to whom others might be added as worthy of the esteem of a select audience, such as they are able to command at a theatre under the management of Mr. John Hollingshead, whose judgment and discrimination are now almost proverbial. The drama is already well known to the English stage under the title of "The Great Divorce Case;" but, on the whole, the French version and the correspondent action are far less boisterous than the Anglican. The whole, however, forms a farce in three acts, rather heavy and elaborate, albeit full of force and fun. The part of Gatinet, sleepy and forgetful, was amusingly rendered by M. Parade, as was also that of Madame Laiguier by Madame Alexis. Mdlle. Massin, as Cesarine, was admirable; and M. Train, as De Bagnolie, cannot be excelled. It is understood that the ingenious company to which these artists belong will appear in other pieces, especially including "Nos Alliés," "Le Capitaine Tic," and "Les Grandes Demoiselles." The director of the scene of these French plays is M. M. L. Mayer, who conducts the business with extreme care. The English Gaiety Company will return to these boards on Monday week.

The Polytechnic is successfully essaying to keep pace with the time and its demands by the production of novelty in the style and subjects of the lectures delivered. On Saturday Mr. J. L. King lectured on the Russo-Turkish war, illustrated with photographs from engravings in this Journal and a contemporary, and described its progress in a manner well calculated to enable the auditor to realise its terrible scenes and incidents. Professor Gardner also presented a new entertainment called "Spiritism," accompanied with various forms of optical, chemical, and mechanical illusion, and a new and extended example of the Davenport cabinet trick. This was followed by the story of "The Sleeping Beauty," told by Mr. George Buckland in his usual animated style. Mr. H. Page's patent Human Arm Writer deserves especial notice as a very extraordinary invention.

The Duke of Richmond and Gordon has appointed Mr. Francis A. Campbell, of the Foreign Office, as his private secretary, in the place of Mr. Richard Durnford, appointed an Assistant-Commissioner of Charities.

The Dublin Corporation have passed a resolution protesting against the placing of the intended Government Science and Art Museum in Dublin under the Science and Art Department at South Kensington. They argue that it should be managed by Irishmen directly responsible to the Government.

At a conference of delegates, about one hundred in number, of "the whole of the co-operative societies in the area known as the north-western section," held at Rochdale last Saturday, resolutions were passed recommending that in the formation of all new co-operative societies provision should be made for the appropriation of a percentage of the profits to purposes of education, and that existing societies should adopt this plan.

The Hemel Hempstead branch of the Midland Railway was opened for passenger traffic on Monday. The new line is a single one, is nine miles in length, and has been nearly thirteen years in course of construction. It leaves the Midland Railway just beyond Harpenden station, and affords railway accommodation to the districts of Redbourn and Hemel Hempstead. It is intended to connect with the London and North-Western system at Boxmoor, but the line at present opened is two miles short of the latter station.

A great gathering of Durham miners took place last Monday, on the City Race-Ground. The numbers present were computed at 30,000. The secretary of the Miners' Association said it had during the past year paid £25,000 in support of members thrown out of work. Mr. Macdonald, M.P., attributed the depression in the coal and iron trades to over-competition on the part of mine owners. Sir Arthur Middleton, M.P., spoke strongly in favour of the assimilation of the borough and county franchise, which Mr. O'Connor Power, M.P., also supported. Mr. Burt, M.P., was present and addressed the meeting.

The Charity Organisation Society have drawn up a useful report upon the importation of Italian children into this country and their employment here by the padroni who profit by their services. It is clear that these helpless children are often treated with cruelty, are over-worked, and ill-fed, and that the girls specially require protection. Besides regular dépôts of these children in London, there are independent centres of the traffic in different parts of the provinces. The committee recommend the enforcement of the provisions of the Vagrant Act. The children would then be sent home by the Italian Benevolent Society; but it is suggested the traffic might be soon stopped if the English public refused to give money to these children, knowing now that it really goes to their taskmasters, and that it condemns many of them to "a life of sin and shame."

The members of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, to the number of 200, were entertained last Saturday evening by the President, Dean Stanley, at a conversation, held at The Deanery, Westminster. It was intended that the entertainment should take the form of a garden party, but the state of the weather was such that this intention had to be abandoned. The showers were so frequent and so heavy that the tea, which it was intended to serve in the college gardens, had to be laid in the dining-hall of the college. The working men present represented about eighty affiliated clubs from all parts of the metropolis and the provinces. These clubs, which number 800, have been all established in ten years. After tea the guests were conducted over the cathedral by Dean Stanley, who pointed out, and rehearsed the history of, many of the most important monuments to virtue, genius, and honour which the venerable structure enshrines. After passing through the cloisters, catacombs, and other places of interest, the Chapter House—that ancient place of parliament—was reached. Here Mr. Babbs moved, and Mr. Lowe (both members of the council) seconded, a vote of thanks to Dean Stanley for his hospitality. The Dean acknowledged the compliment in graceful terms, and then invited his guests to the deanery, where the remainder of the evening was passed in friendly discourse, and in inspecting the many rare works of art, science, and literature which adorn the walls and tables of the various apartments.

THE PRINCE OF WALES UNVEILING THE STATUE OF ALFRED THE GREAT AT WANTAGE.

LOCKINGE HOUSE, VISITED BY THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO WANTAGE.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales visited the town of Wantage, in Berkshire, on Saturday last, being the guests of Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, M.P., at Lockinge House, and the Prince unveiled Count Gleichen's marble statue of King Alfred, presented by Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, which stands in the market-place facing the church. Wantage, sixty miles from London, is situated between the main line of the Great Western Railway, beyond Didcot, and the range of the Berkshire Downs, along which runs the great Roman military road, called the Ridgeway. Its neighbourhood includes many places of historical or traditional interest; one place is Ashdown, or Æscendune, where a great battle was fought between the Saxons and the Danes, in the year 871, and where Alfred, who was born at Wantage, helped to gain the victory for his brother King Ethelred I. Here is the famous White Horse, cut out in the turf of the hill-side, for a perpetual monument of that great English victory. There was a millennial or thousandth anniversary celebration, in 1849, of the birth of King Alfred at Wantage, but a statue or monument has long been desired. Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, who resides at Lockinge House, between Stevenage, the nearest railway station, and the town of Wantage, has made this handsome gift to his neighbours and fellow-countrymen. The statue is by his Serene Highness Count Gleichen (Prince Victor of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, and connected with our Royal Family), whose accomplishments as a sculptor are well known. It is 8 ft. in height, of Sicilian marble, standing on a granite pedestal. It represents King Alfred with his right hand on a battleaxe, and with a roll of parchment in his left hand, as both a great warrior and a great legislator, teacher of sound knowledge, and author of English books. We shall give an illustration of the statue in our next week's publication.

The Prince of Wales is a lineal descendant of King Alfred, by the intermarriage of the Saxon with the Norman reigning houses in the eleventh century, and by the subsequent derivation of the Plantagenets from the Normans, of the Tudors and Stuarts from the Plantagenets, and of the House of Brunswick from James I. Though Alfred reigned only over the southern part of England, his kingdom was unquestionably the basis of that over which Queen Victoria now reigns, and it was most fitting that the heir to the throne should be invited to perform the ceremony of unveiling this statue. Their Royal Highnesses on Saturday afternoon travelled from Paddington to the Wantage-road station, with their suite, in a special train of saloon carriages. They were met at the station there by Colonel Loyd-Lindsay and a party of ladies and gentlemen, including the Earl of Abingdon (Lord Lieutenant of Berks); Mr. W. G. Mount (High Sheriff), the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Walter, M.P., and Mr. Wroughton, M.P. The carriages in waiting conveyed their Royal Highnesses and the whole party to Wantage, a distance of two miles, with an escort formed by a troop of the Royal Berks Yeomanry. There were several triumphal arches on the road, and the inhabitants were gathered in crowds to welcome their Royal visitors. On arriving in the market-place, they took their places on a dais, beneath a canopy, close to the statue of King Alfred, which was covered with a blue and white cloth. The band of the Grenadier Guards played "God Save the Queen." Mr. H. De Vitre, Chairman of the Wantage Committee for the reception of their Royal Highnesses, as well as for the acceptance of the statue, read an address to the Prince of Wales. His Royal Highness was also presented with a copy of the address, which had been illuminated by the Sisters of St. Mary's Home, Wantage. He made an appropriate brief speech in reply, in which he said, "I feel that I cannot visit this town, ever memorable as the birthplace of my illustrious though remote ancestor, Alfred the Great, without calling to mind his eminent virtues, his noble deeds, and his devoted patriotism." He also complimented his gallant friend, Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, on the generous gift, and his cousin, Count Gleichen, on the statue as a work of art. The Rev. Canon Butler, Vicar of Wantage, presented to their Royal Highnesses five children from the different parish schools. One little girl brought the Princess a bouquet; and all the assembled scholars, boys and girls, sang "God Bless the Prince of Wales." Their Royal Highnesses then planted a lime-tree in the market-place, as a token of their visit; and the Prince of Wales uncovered the statue, amidst the cheers of the people, while the band played the National Anthem. The ground was kept by a company of the Wantage Rifle Volunteers. We give an illustration of the scene in the market-place, as the Prince drew the cord to remove the covering of the statue.

Their Royal Highnesses stayed till Monday afternoon at Lockinge House. They were entertained with a garden party on Saturday afternoon; and, though it rained nearly all the time, a spacious pavilion marquee sheltered the company, and they were amused with an exhibition of Indian jugglers. A dinner party was given to about eighty guests that evening. A view of Lockinge House, with the adjoining church, forms our second illustration of this Royal Visit.

The Orange anniversaries this month have, on the whole, passed off quietly, both in Ireland and in Liverpool.

With the view of adding to the efficiency of the mercantile training-ships as recruiting centres for the Navy and naval reserves, the Government has decided to supply all training-ships for boys with guns, rifles, and single-sticks free of charge.

The coroner's jury which has been inquiring into the causes of the fatal bridge accident at Bath on June 6, has returned a verdict of manslaughter against the proprietors of the structure and the toll-keeper.

The annual country congress of the British Archaeological Association is to be held at Llangollen during the week beginning Aug. 27. It will be held under the patronage of the Prince of Wales and the immediate presidency of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn. The opening meeting and dinner will take place on Monday, Aug. 27, and there will be excursions every day in the week, and meetings at night for the reading of papers. Among the places set down to be visited are Offa's Dyke, Denbigh Castle, Chirk Castle, Castell Dinas Bran, Valle Crucis Abbey, Elyse's Pillar, the Gaer, an ancient British encampment, site of Owen Glendower's house, an ancient stone castle, and several ancient churches at Dolgelly, Denbigh, Wrexham, and other places.

Mr. Gladstone visited Plymouth yesterday week, and met with an enthusiastic reception. In his reply to an address of welcome he insisted upon the interests of this country being identical with its duties, and, urging the people to act on the conviction manifested in the meetings of last autumn, he advised an unremitting attention to the conduct of the Government, since proposals might be made at any moment to prevent great duties from being fulfilled. The right hon. gentleman, Mrs. Gladstone, Lord Coleridge, and a distinguished party breakfasted with Dr. Temple, the Bishop of Exeter, at the palace, on Saturday morning; and, after visiting the cathedral and other places of interest in Exeter, left by the Flying Dutchman, amid cheers, for London.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

It is almost a pity that Mr. Sergeant Sherlock did not interpellate Mr. Secretary Cross in the Commons immediately after that remarkably unsatisfactory verdict of "temporary insanity" had been returned by the Coroner's jury in the lamentable case of the poor little Blue Coat Boy Gibbs; and it is a greater pity that the Committee appointed by the Home Secretary to inquire into the whole matter did not commence their labours until after the newspapers had been flooded day after day with appalling letters from "Old Blues" denouncing the atrocities which, it was alleged, used to take place at Christ's Hospital thirty or forty years ago. Some of the stories of cruelty and oppression have, indeed, so very ancient an odour that they might have been inspired by the ghosts of Coleridge and Charles Lamb, whose records of their experiences as "Blues" are simply harrowing.

The inquiry, of course, must be thorough; and it is to be regretted that the Committee should have elected to hold their sittings with closed doors. The heart paternal and maternal of England has been deeply moved by this deplorable case; and it is indispensable that the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, should be elicited. For my part, I do most earnestly and sincerely hope that the most noble, venerable, and beneficent foundation of Christ's Hospital will come unscathed out of the trying ordeal to which it is being subjected. I love the very name of the Blue Coat School; and if I am prejudiced in its favour my prejudice, I trust, springs from no unworthy motive. Forty years ago my Mother used to sing at the Public Suppers in the old hall in Newgate-street; and forty years ago I had a dear brother (C. K. S., sheu!) who was a "Blue" (Dr. Rice Head Master, Mr. Huggins Steward), and who was Monitor, "Great Erasmus," Deputy Grecian, and what not.

I never heard my brother speak of any cruelty or oppression, scholastic or monitory, at the Blue Coat School in his time. I never heard Thornton Hunt, whose father, Leigh Hunt, was a "Blue," speak ill of the place; and I have often heard poor dear Peter Cunningham, my predecessor in the column of Table-Talk, which, at intervals, these seventeen years past, I have had the honour of contributing to this Journal, speak in any but terms of love and veneration for the school in which he had been a distinguished scholar. That the rod has always been one of the "institutions" of Christ's Hospital everybody knows. It has been, time out of mind, an "institution" in every famous school in England. All readers of quaint old Tusser are familiar with his apostrophe to Nicholas Udall, the plagius Orbilius of Eton—

From Paul's I went, to Eton sent,
To learn straightways the Latin phrase;
Where fifty-three stripes given to me
At once I had,
For fault but small, or none at all,
It came to pass thus beat I was;
See, Udall, see the mercy of thee
To me, poor lad!

Only last night, reading myself to sleep with Howell's Letters, I came on that exquisitely pathetic letter to his father in which J. H. thanks him for "the indulgent and costly care" he bestowed on his breeding by placing him in "a choice methodical school" near his dwelling, "under a learned (though lashing) master." "Old Boys," Blues or otherwise, bore no grudge to their schoolmasters in those days. One word more ere I conclude an unconscionably protracted series of "Echoes" on one theme. This is not the first time that I have said in print, yet this is a time when I may perhaps appropriately repeat, that I was educated in a foreign school containing a thousand boys, where I forgot what little I knew of my own language, and never subsequently learned to speak any other with propriety. In this school there was neither flogging, nor caning, nor corporal punishment of any kind. On the other hand, I passed a considerable portion of my collegiate career in the collegiate black hole, in the company of a loaf of sour bread and a pitcher of water, and in constant dread of rats. And if I have any memory at all, I owe the development of that faculty to the horrible long "impositions" which were set me (not to write out, but to learn by heart) at school. Which is the right way of teaching boys? We have been squabbling over different systems ever since Martial wrote his epigram on the "lashing" pedagogue, and we seem as far from agreement on the subject as ever.

A "Domestic Economy Congress" has been opened with great clat at Birmingham; and as the indefatigable Sir Henry Cole is "running" the undertaking, it cannot fail, I should say, to achieve brilliant success. I always thought that "Domestic Economy" was a branch of "Social Science," which is likewise about to be congressionally discussed; but when the health and comfort of the people are the topics under discussion "the more the merrier" may emphatically be said of Congresses. Cooking, nursing, warming, ventilation, "elementary instruction to children in physiology," and so forth, will be the subjects taken up by the domestic sages in the Midland metropolis. I have no time to go down to Birmingham myself, nor, if I went there, perhaps, should I be welcome; yet should I dearly like to write, or to get somebody to write, a paper to be read at the next session of the Congress on "the Possibility of teaching Housemaids how to dust china ornaments and other drawing-room 'curios' without breaking them into little bits." In these days of "blue and white" such instruction is imperatively needed; and I can't help thinking that the first lesson to be taught to a housemaid is, while she is dusting, not to turn her head in a contrary direction to the object which should claim her entire attention, in order to listen to the strains of "Said the old Obadiah to the young Obadiah," in the next street, or to stare at Sarah Jane cleaning the second-floor windows (and risking her life thereby) at Number Ten, opposite.

I have always thought that the centre of the court-yard of the British Museum would be the very best site which, in the entire metropolis, could be found for the erection of Cleopatra's Needle, which—thanks to the munificence of Professor Erasmus Wilson and Mr. John Dixon—should soon arrive in the Thames. Mr. Dixon, however, seems to be of opinion that the transport of the enormous mass of stone from the river side to Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, would be not only a very expensive process, but might likewise be perilous to the integrity of the roadway and the subterranean network of gas and water pipes, subways and sewers. Moreover, Mr. Dixon decries the grass-plot in the Museum's court-yard as "sooty," and the façade as "dingy." As a parishioner of St. Giles's, Bloomsbury (I wish that the poor rates were a little lighter), I indignantly protest against the insinuation. We have more bright greenery in our squares and in the grounds of the Foundling than in any other part of London; and the Messrs. Smirke's magnificent Ionic façade (praised by Professor Cockerell as second only to the constructions of Trajan and Hadrian) is, in fact, not half so "dingy" as the frontage of the new Houses of Parliament. There! For the rest, I say all honour to Dr. Erasmus Wilson and Mr. John Dixon; and good luck may they have with their obelisk on the site selected for it by the Earl of Harrowby, "at Whitehall steps, halfway between Charing-cross and Westminster Bridges."

Mem.: Mr. Dixon says that the Adelphi terrace casts a "dismal shadow," and that Charing-cross railway bridge is "hideous." De gustibus, &c. I am Goth enough to hold that the bridge which has supplanted the old Hungerford cobweb structure is, with its colossal piers and its titanic reticulations of sombre ironwork relieved by golden bosses, one of the most superb engineering structures in Europe. The twenty-first century will do it justice.

Captain Hawley Smart, who when I knew him first was a dashing hauptmann of foot in Canada, and not long from the battle-fields of the Crimea, and is now an equally dashing writer of sporting and military novels, has begun a new story, promising excellently well, called "Sunshine and Snow," in the July number of the St. James's Magazine. The magazine itself, which has passed under new management, has been developed to abnormal dimensions, and now looks "as deep as a well and as wide as a church door." To be sure, it is the United Empire Review as well; and a Review must needs be imposing in size.

In that immense treasury of human learning, the Common Place Books of Robert Southey, who, quite apart from his attainments as a poet and a historian, may, on the score of curious erudition alone, be qualified as the English Duncane and the English Bayle,—in four closely-printed volumes of a thousand pages each, the indices contain but two trifling references to Alfred the Great, whose statue by Count Gleichen was unveiled at Wantage, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, on Saturday last. The paucity of references to the great King in Southey (who probably knew Asser and the Venerable Bede by heart) puzzles me.

Mem.: It has been noticed as a curious coincidence that Wantage is on the verge of the Vale of the White Horse, the periodical "scouring" of which has been so graphically described by Mr. Thomas Hughes, and that a White Horse is the ancient heraldic cognizance of the House of Hanover, whose august Head is lineally descended from Alfred.

Pinning my faith to a statement made in a usually scrupulously accurate contemporary, the Athenaeum, I desecrated last week on the presumed death of that very talented artist M. Ernest Griset. I rejoice to learn that M. Griset is alive. As my estimate of his artistic merits was made in perfect good faith and with a hearty appreciation of what he had already done, I do not see anything to alter in it, save to express a hope that M. Griset will live long enough to develop all the "sketches" of which I spoke into first-rate drawings.

THE CLAIM OF LORD DUNDONALD.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the case of the late Lord Dundonald recommend in their report that steps should be taken to vindicate his character, and that a pecuniary compensation be granted to the present Earl.

The Committee say they "have arrived at the conclusion that complete reparation will not have been done to Lord Dundonald unless the claim for back pay, which he bequeathed to his grandson, is recognised. Everything connected with his restoration to the naval service and to his rank and honour proceeded upon the principle that, so far as possible, he should be placed in the same position as if he never had been removed from the service. This appears, of necessity, to imply that the reparation spoken of in the Treasury Minute is not complete. In the opinion of your Committee, no technical rule should be permitted to stand in the way of such reparation, the justice of which seems to be followed by a natural inference from the steps that have already been taken. In reviewing the whole case, your Committee have to observe that under one Government, in 1832, Lord Dundonald received the free pardon of the Crown and was promoted to that place in the Navy which he would have held had he never been dismissed the service. Under a subsequent Government, in 1847, he was restored to the honours conferred upon him previous to his expulsion. It appears to your Committee that these steps could not have been taken by responsible advisers of the Crown who believed Lord Dundonald to have been guilty of the charges of which, in 1814, he was convicted, and the course pursued towards him amounts to nothing less than a public recognition by the Government of his innocence. It should further be borne in mind that the exceptionally brilliant services of Lord Dundonald rendered to the British Crown as a naval officer would, but for his dismissal, probably have earned for him more ample and adequate reward than any which he received for his services. Your Committee have arrived at the conclusion that this is a case peculiarly exceptional in its character, and deserving her Majesty's most gracious and favourable consideration."

The Mercers' Company have appointed Mr. Holmes as the agent to their estates in Londonderry, the post being worth £800 a year, with a residence.

Bristol, which some time ago began an importation of dead meat from America, has begun to import live stock also. The Acadie on Monday brought 300 sheep from New York, which arrived in excellent condition; but, in consequence of there being no distinct place at Bristol for the reception of foreign stock, the whole cargo had to be slaughtered either on board or close alongside the steamer.

The fund which has been raised for the relief of Mrs. Williams and her family now amounts to £1200. The committee who have charge of the fund have advised Mrs. Williams to send her eldest boy to Christ's Hospital, a nomination having been offered; and the second boy to the Royal St. Anne's School, a gentleman having undertaken his election on condition of the expenses being paid. Any votes for St. Anne's School sent to the hon. treasurer will be much appreciated. The investment of the money collected will be resolved upon at a meeting on the 31st inst.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the annual expenditure on public offices and buildings have presented their report to Parliament. They state that at the present time £20,080 is paid annually for the hire of houses for the use of the public departments at the west end of London, and that the evidence taken by the Committee shows that, independently of the deficient accommodation, the system of hiring, when applied to the great departments, is unsatisfactory. They call attention to three plans for the concentration of certain public departments which have been submitted to them, and, in conclusion, remark that "they cannot too strongly insist on the expediency of the Government losing no time in proposing some plan by which the evils complained of may be remedied." It is their opinion that "delay will lead to greater expense in the future, and that immediate action is demanded for the efficiency and comfort of the public departments and the dignity of the country."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEJEEBHAY, BART.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart., of Bombay, whose death in India is just announced, was born Oct. 9, 1811, the eldest son of Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, a Parsee merchant of wealth and ability and a great philanthropist, who was created a Baronet Aug. 6, 1857. He succeeded to the baronetcy at his father's death, April 14, 1859, and the following year relinquished his original names, "Cursetjee Jamsetjee," for those of his father, under a special Act of the Council of India authorising all successors to the title to bear the names of the first Baronet. Sir Jamsetjee was twice married; by his first wife he had one child, who died in 1872; by his second wife he had three sons and ten daughters. Of the former, the eldest, his successor, formerly Manockjee Cursetjee, now Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, third Baronet, was born March 3, 1851.

SIR F. F. ECHLIN, BART.

Sir Ferdinand Fenton Echlin, Bart., died on the 4th inst., at Leisulip, in the county of Kildare, aged eighty. He was a younger son of the late Sir James Echlin, fourth Baronet, and succeeded to the title at the decease of his elder brother, Sir Frederick Henry Echlin, in May, 1871. He married, 1840, Mary, only daughter of Mr. William Cavanagh, of Orangeby, in the county of Westmeath, and leaves, with other issue, a son and successor, now Sir Thomas Echlin, seventh Baronet, born Nov. 8, 1844. The baronetcy was conferred, in 1721, on Sir Henry Echlin, Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, but came eventually, divested of all estate or property, to the branch of the Baronet whose death we record. The melancholy story of these landless Baronets Echlin forms a touching episode in Sir Bernard Burke's "Vicissitudes of Families."

SIR GEORGE BELL.

General Sir George Bell, K.C.B., Knight of the Legion of Honour and of the Medjidie, Colonel 1st (Royal Scots) Regiment, died on the 10th inst., aged eighty-three. He saw much service in the Peninsula, Burmah, Canada, Crimea, &c., and had the Indian, Crimean, and Turkish medals. At the Alma and Inkerman he commanded the Royal Regiment, and was wounded at Sebastopol. He was author of "Rough Notes by an Old Soldier." Sir George was son of Charles Bell, Esq., of Bellevue, Ireland, and brother of Henry Nugent Bell, whose successful management of "the Huntingdon peerage" was one of the most interesting instances of energy and skill. Sir George married, first, Alicia, daughter and heiress of James Scott, Esq., of Ecclesjohn; and, secondly, Margaret Addison, daughter of Thomas Dougal, Esq.

MAJOR-GENERAL TINLEY.

Major-General R. N. Tinley died at St. Helier's, Jersey, on the 10th inst. His services from the year 1832, when he obtained his first commission, included the campaign against the Rajah of Coorg, the Battle of Maharajpore, wherein he was severely wounded, and the Crimean War, in which he commanded the 39th Regiment. He had the bronze medal for Maharajpore, a medal and clasp for the Crimea, and was also decorated with the Legion of Honour and the Medjidie. His commission of Lieutenant-Colonel bears date 1855, Colonel 1858, and Major-General 1868.

MR. D. B. MORIER.

David Richard Morier, Esq., formerly H.M. Minister Plenipotentiary to the Swiss Confederation, died on the 13th inst., at 45, Montagu-square, at the advanced age of ninety-three. He entered the diplomatic service so far back as 1804, when he went out as secretary to a political mission to Ali, Pasha of Janina, and to the Turkish Governors of the Morea. He was for several years engaged on various missions in the East; in 1813 was attached to the Austrian Embassy, and in 1814 was employed on matters relating to the Treaties of Paris, and at the Congress of Vienna under Lord Castlereagh and the Duke of Wellington. He was Consul-General in France from 1815 till the abolition of that office in 1832; and subsequently, from 1832 to 1847, was Minister Plenipotentiary to the Swiss Confederation.

MR. MERRITT.

The death is announced of Mr. Henry Merritt, who has for the last quarter of a century gained high repute as a picture-restorer and art-critic. Self taught, save what knowledge he acquired from an old picture-restorer at Oxford, his birthplace, he was considered one of the most accomplished experts and judges of the authenticity of pictures. He was not only engaged by the possessors of large private collections, but also by the authorities of the National Gallery and the Royal Academy. Perhaps his chef-d'œuvre in the art of restoration was that of the ancient portrait of Richard II., which hung formerly in the choir of Westminster Abbey. This picture, in which it was stated the fidelity of the likeness had been destroyed by previous restorers, was confided to the care of Mr. Merritt, in conjunction with Mr. Richmond; and so successfully did they perform this difficult feat that they removed the outer and unfaithful portrait, leaving the original an almost perfect tempera painting of the style of the fourteenth century. Another interesting restoration of his was that of a portrait of Henry VII., in the National Portrait Gallery.

William Kynaston Gaskell, Esq., on the 12th inst., in his eighty-first year.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Frederick Johnstone, late Grenadier Guards, on the 14th inst.

Dr. James Bryce, of Edinburgh, the well-known geologist, killed by a fall from a rock in the Pass of Inverfarigag.

Thomas Hall, Esq., B.A., F.C.S., late Lecturer of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy at the City of London School, on the 10th inst., at Ryde, Isle of Wight, aged fifty-nine.

The Rev. Daniel Nantes, Vicar of Powderham and Chaplain to the Earl of Devon, one of the leaders of the Evangelical clergy of his district, on the 11th inst., aged above eighty.

Captain L. B. Mackinnon, R.N., formerly M.P. for Rye in the Liberal interest, author of "Atlantic and Transatlantic Sketches," "Steam Warfare," and other works, on the 10th inst., in his sixty-third year.

Thomas Lomax Openshaw, Esq., of Heaton-grove, Bury, Lancashire, J.P. and D.L., eldest son of Jonathan Openshaw, Esq., of Bank House, in the same county, by Eliza, his wife, daughter of Joseph Holt, Esq., of Heaton-grove, on the 2nd inst., aged forty-nine.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

CHESS IN LONDON.

The following interesting Games were played between two of our best English players, Messrs. BODEN and BIRD.—(Evans's Gambit declined.)

WHITE (Mr. Bird).	BLACK (Mr. Boden).	WHITE (Mr. Bird).	BLACK (Mr. Boden).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	18. Kt takes B	Q takes Kt
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	19. Kt to K 5th	Q to K 3rd
3. B to B 4th	B to B 4th	20. P to B 4th	Q R to Q sq
4. P to Q Kt 4th	P to Kt 3rd	21. P to B 5th	Q to Q B sq
5. Castles	P to Q 3rd	22. Q B to B sq	P to Q B 4th
6. P to Q B 3rd	Kt to B 3rd	Evidently the best move.
7. P to Q 4th	P takes P	23. B takes Kt	R takes B
8. P takes P	B to Kt 5th	24. R takes P	Q to Q sq
9. B to Kt 2nd	Castles	25. R takes R	Q takes R
10. P to Kt 5th	Kt to K 2nd	26. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q
11. Q Kt to Q 2nd	P to Q 4th	27. R to Q B sq	P to B 3rd
12. P takes P	Q Kt takes P	28. Kt to Kt 5th	K to B 2nd
13. Q to Kt 3rd	P to Q B 3rd	29. P to Kt 4th	B to Kt 3rd
This move subjects Black to a tedious and defensive game. It Kt to K 5th would, we venture to think, have been a better line of play.		30. B to B 3rd	R to Q B sq
14. Kt to K 5th	P to Q 2nd	31. B to Q 2nd	R takes R (ch)
15. K to R sq	P to K R 3rd	32. B takes R	R takes P
16. P to R 4th	B to R 4th	The remainder of the game was not recorded, but it was eventually won by White.
17. Q Kt to B 3rd	B to K sq

Between the same Players.—(Irregular Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. Boden).	BLACK (Mr. Bird).	WHITE (Mr. Bird).	BLACK (Mr. Boden).
1. P to Q R 3rd	P to K 4th	12. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt
2. P to K 4th	P to K B 3rd	13. Castles	P takes Kt
3. B to B 4th	P to B 4th	14. R to K sq	P to B 3rd
4. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to B 3rd	15. B to Kt 3rd	K to Q 2nd
5. P to Q 3rd	P to B 4th	He does not appear to have any better move at his disposal. White threatens to win the Kt by 16. B to Kt 5th, and should Black play 15. P to K R 3rd, then follow 16. Q to R 5th (ch) and 17. Q to B 7th, &c.
6. Kt to B 3rd	B to Q 3rd	16. B to Kt 5th	R to K sq
The situation is now one that frequently occurs in the King's Gambit declined.		17. Q takes P (ch)	An exceedingly fine finish to a pretty little game.
7. P to Q Kt 4th	B to Q 5th	18. B to K B 4th (ch)	K takes Q
Mr. Bird plays rather carelessly here. This move and the exchanges that follow it lose time.		19. B to K 6th.	Mate.
8. Kt takes B	P takes Kt
9. Kt to K 2nd	P takes P
10. P takes P	K Kt takes P
11. B to Q 5th	Kt to B 5th

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The close of the regular season at the City Chess Club was signalled on Saturday last by a dinner party at the residence of the president, Mr. H. F. Gaskell. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather a large number of London amateurs attended, and, engaging in consultation and alternation games, passed a very pleasant day. The next season of this flourishing association will commence in September; but, in the meantime, the club will be open on the Monday, Wednesday, and Friday of each week, and the committee, not unmindful of our younger sort, have arranged a set encounter between Mr. Blackburne and twenty-five members simultaneously for the 25th inst.

It is announced that Mr. Blackburne has challenged Herr Steinitz to a match for a stake of £50, and that the def will, in all probability, be accepted. It cannot with any grace be refused, we should think, for the result of the last match between these players—the Austrian scored every game—can only be ascribed to the shattered state of Mr. Blackburne's health.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Aug. 12, 1870) of the Most Hon. Cecil Chetwynd, Dowager Marchioness of Lothian, late of No. 15, Bruton-street, who died on May 13 last at Rome, was proved on the 16th ult. by Lord Ralph Drury Kerr, the son, and Lord Henry Francis Charles Kerr, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testatrix directs her body to be buried with plainness and privacy in some churchyard or vault attached to a Roman Catholic church or chapel, and provides that her funeral and testamentary expenses shall be paid out of the money in the hands of her bankers, and the rest of such money she gives to the Rev. Robert Whitty, or the officiating priest for the time being of St. David's Roman Catholic Mission at Dalkeith. The deceased Marchioness has also bequeathed all her railway stock and shares to her executors upon trust to be applied by them as they shall in their absolute discretion think most proper for the spiritual benefit of the Roman Catholic children of that part of Scotland called the Roman Catholic Eastern District, the preference being given to the schools or children of St. David's, Dalkeith; all her Bank of England Stock to the Roman Catholic Mission at Jedburgh; to the said Rev. Robert Whitty or the officiating priest for the time being of St. David's Chapel, at Dalkeith, for the use of the services of the said chapel a gold locket with the word "Rome" engraved on the back, containing a relic of the true cross, which formed part of the relic of the true cross formerly in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. There are legacies, both specific and pecuniary, to different members of her Ladyship's family, and the remainder of her property she leaves to her son, Lord Walter Talbot Kerr.

The will (dated May 24, 1875) of Sir James Phillips Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., late of Barbon Manor, Westmorland, and of No. 68, Cromwell-road, South Kensington, who died on May 26 last, was proved on the 29th ult. by Sir Ughtred James Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., the son, and Joseph Kay and Edward Ebenezer Kay, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. Subject to some bequests, as his eldest son and successor in the baronetcy succeeds to the Shuttleworth estates, the testator leaves his property to his children, Lionel Edward Kay-Shuttleworth, Janet Elizabeth Kay-Shuttleworth, Robert Kay-Shuttleworth, and Stewart Marjoribanks Kay-Shuttleworth.

The will (dated Sept. 23, 1876) of Mr. Ellis James Gilman, late of Crown-court, Old Broad-street, and of The Boltons, Torquay, who died on April 13 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Mrs. Amelia Christiana Gilman, the widow, and Ellis Gilman, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves to his wife his residence The Boltons, with the furniture, plate, pictures, wines, household effects, horses, and carriages absolutely, and the sum of £40,000 for life, and at her death to their children or issue, as she shall by deed or will appoint; the advowson of the rectory, vicarage, or benefice of Chudleigh, Devon, and certain pieces of freehold land in the said parish, he leaves upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Amy Amelia Macartney. There are other provision for his children, and the residue of his real and personal estate he gives to his said son Ellis.

The will and codicil (dated Dec. 23, 1873, and Aug. 12, 1874) of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir John Stepany Cowell Stepany, Bart., K.H., late of No. 5, St. George's-place, Hyde Park, and of Llanelli, Carmarthenshire, who died on May 15 last, were proved on the 6th inst. by Sir Emile Algernon Arthur Keppel Cowell Stepany, Bart., the son, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. With the exception of a legacy and annuity to his late wife's maid and legacies to his butler and housekeeper, the testator gives all his property to his said son.

The will and codicil (dated April 15, 1872, and March 27, 1876) of Mr. Henry Weekes, R.A., art-sculptor, late of No. 96, Buckingham Palace-road, who died on May 28 last, were proved on the 25th ult. by Henry Weekes and John Ernest Weekes, the sons, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The only persons interested under the will are testator's wife and children.

The will, with three codicils, of the late Mr. Robert Garrod, of Ipswich, was proved on the 14th inst., the personal property being sworn under £45,000. The testator devotes the sum of £32,000 to legacies to his four daughters, and to one or two minor bequests. The residue of his personal property he bequeaths to his son, Alfred Baring Garrod, M.D., F.R.S., to whom he also devises the whole of his real estate.

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF WILLS FROM YORK TO LONDON.

A deputation, introduced by the Archbishop of York has had an interview with Mr. W. H. Smith, at the Treasury, on the subject of the proposed removal of the old wills and testamentary records of the province of York to London. Memorials were presented from the Corporations of York and Leeds, the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, the Yorkshire Archaeological and Topographical Association, the Incorporated Law Societies of Leeds, Yorkshire, and Manchester, and the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, all protesting against the removal of the wills to London. Mr. W. H. Smith, in reply, promised to lay their views before the Government, and to carefully consider the memorials on the subject. He would undertake to say, on the part of the Government, that the treatment which was applied to the rest of the kingdom in respect to the custody of such documents should, if they desired it, be applied to the important province of York. The Judge of the Probate Court had said that the documents were not at present in such custody as to be secured against fire, and that the building was not such as to justify their continuing where they were; and further added that there was ample provision in Somerset House for the old records. He would take care to bring under his Lordship's notice the statements made, and would inquire respecting the arrangements made in other parts of the kingdom.

There was a contest yesterday week between wings and steam, in which the former won. A carrier pigeon, which had been "homed" to a building in Cannon-street, City, was tossed through a carriage window of the Continental express-train from Dover to London as the train moved from the Admiralty Pier, the wind being west and the atmosphere hazy, but with the sun shining. For upwards of a minute the pigeon circled to an altitude of about half a mile, and then flew towards London. By this time the train, which carried the European mails and was timed not to stop between Dover and Cannon-street, had got up to full speed, and was proceeding at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The pigeon, as soon as it ascertained its bearings, took the nearest homeward route in a direction midway between Maidstone and Sittingbourne, the distance "as the crow flies" between Dover and London being seventy miles and by rail seventy-six miles and a half. When the Continental mail-express came into Cannon-street station the bird had been home twenty minutes.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1877.

Proverbial philosophy teaches that "misfortunes never come singly." The life of the world is analogous in this respect to the life of an individual. The history of humanity shows its clusters of evils which group themselves without any necessary association one with another but that of contemporaneous action. At any rate, such seems to be very much the case at the present time. A summary glance of what is happening East and West, North and South, takes in an unusual number of dark spots, terrible in their magnitude, which, like those which occasionally present themselves upon the sun's disc, forebode impending disturbance. Optimism, it is true, is a comforting creed, but it does not invariably produce corresponding fruit. Hope, based upon the laws of nature and of Providence, seldom fails altogether; but there are occasional seasons when it is hard pushed to obtain the ascendancy; and just now it must be confessed that the ills of life, looked at on a large scale, seem to preponderate over the good.

The calamities which arrest attention in glancing over the condition of men at the present time may be divided into two classes, those which are still, for the most part, in the germs and casting ruinous shade over the proximate future, and those which are immediately operative and which have already left their mark of suffering and death upon the parts of the world which they affect. To begin with that which least excites the imagination—there is the Colorado Beetle. It is as though one of the plagues of Egypt were making a slow, an almost visible, but an irresistible approach to our shores. Its origin appears to be wrapt in mystery. The phenomenon in all its appalling power is a secret seemingly impetrable to modern science. To what cause is it due that the incalculably rapid growth of this insect tribe has only lately developed itself? Why has it started from its original breeding-ground and multiplied so enormously in transition from west to east. A hundred questions of a speculative kind may be put in reference to this modern invasion. The issue, however, is mainly of a practical character. That the insect has crossed the Atlantic is certain. It has made its appearance in Germany. Will it thrive in this hemisphere? or will its nature undergo such modification consequent on its migration to this part of the globe as will render it comparatively harmless? Who shall say? The probability seems to be that in the course of a year or two it will establish itself in Europe. We know too well what followed the prevalence of the potato disease in the British Isles some years ago. But the evil which now threatens us, not as possible only, but as probable, seems likely enough to transcend that in magnitude. Every attempt will be made, no doubt, to prevent the invasion. We can only fervently pray that a success which appears most unlikely may nevertheless be achieved.

Before turning from the West to the East our attention is arrested by the railway strikes in the United States. They also astonish one by the rapidity of their development and by the extent of the social mischief they are inflicting upon American interests. Already they have assumed, though upon a minor scale, some of the characteristics of civil war. They have injured, we might almost say severed, some of the main tendons which knit together the frame of social unity in the West. They indicate, perhaps, a more deeply-seated disease than that which shows itself upon the surface. They compel one to look forward to a struggle in future even more severe than that which is now taking place. The spirit which is ablaze in the United States may easily communicate itself to the still more inflammable materials which abound in Europe. For the present, however, there can be little misgiving as to the issue of the conflict. Authority will maintain its supremacy over lawlessness. Our cousins in America are too sober and law-abiding a people to give anything like free scope to the Dictatorate of a class. The fire which seems to have spread with unexampled rapidity over nearly the whole surface of the country will probably as speedily burn itself out. But doubtless it is a great calamity—a calamity not for the United States only, but for the world. What good may hereafter come of it we will not venture to predict. Just now, and looking at it as it stands, we must set it down in the category of unmitigated misfortunes.

Then there is the anticipated Famine in Southern India, the extent of which can hardly be foreseen. We have had some experience now of this order of afflictions. We know to what a loss of life they will run if left uncontrolled by the Government of the country, and we know also how far they may be averted by prompt, prudent, and energetic administration. But it does not necessarily follow that what has been done with success in Bengal and Berar will be equally efficacious in the Presidency of Madras. The impending calamity threatens to be of greater duration, and even to involve a greater number of sufferers. Under any circumstances, the crisis must needs prove a fearfully calamitous one; and, even if should not be attended by a greater loss of life than that of Bengal, it cannot fail to overshadow with melancholy and even despondency no small portion of the teeming population of South India.

We need hardly point to the Russo-Turkish War. This is naturally the focus of European attention. How it may end it is not for us to prophesy, though there are reasonable bases upon which to found conjecture. Our hope is that it will end soon. The waste of human life (to say nothing of property) which it involves is such as cannot be contemplated without shuddering awe. There is little consolation to be gathered out of the chaos of mutual destruction which now characterises it. It will probably take its place in the annals of the human race as one of the most sanguinary of modern conflicts.

Such are the gloomy scenes which simultaneously force themselves upon public notice in taking the most superficial and cursory glance at passing events. We do not say, we do not wish to imply, that the picture has not another and a brighter side to it. The sunshine of history is never very obtrusive, and even a grey sky is less noticed, though it may continue unchanged for a considerable length of time, than one covered with stormy clouds. The prospect before us, if it do not extinguish hope, assuredly does not inspire joy. But we may continue to exercise unfaltering trust in the principles upon which the moral government of the world proceeds, and we may be sure that out of evil, however dark it may be, the Ruler of the Universe will eventually educe good.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Mr. Cecil Foljambe, eldest son of Selina Viscountess Milton and the late Mr. George Savile Foljambe, of Osberton Hall, Notts, was married to Miss Susan Louisa Cavendish, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel William H. F. and Lady Emily Cavendish, at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, on Saturday last. The bride was accompanied by her mother to the chapel, where she was received by Colonel Cavendish and her bridesmaids—namely, Miss Evelyn Cavendish, her sister; Miss Foljambe, Miss Caroline Foljambe, Lady Beatrix Lambton, Lady Evelyn Campbell, Miss Florence Craufurd, the Hon. Mary Cavendish, and Miss Portman. She wore a dress of white satin duchesse trimmed with Brussels lace, a wreath of orange-flowers, and tulle veil, fastened to her hair by a tiara of pearls and diamonds, the gift of the bridegroom's mother. Her other ornaments were also of pearls and diamonds. The bridesmaids wore white cashmere and silk dresses trimmed with gold braid, and lace mob cap trimmed with blue and pink ribbon. Each wore a gold locket with monogram in pearls, the gift of the bridegroom. Mr. Gerald Howard was best man. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Hon. and Rev. Francis R. Helen and the Hon. Evelyn Trefusis, sisters of the bridegroom; the Hon. Ada Trefusis, daughter of Lord Clinton; and Miss Rolle, daughter of the Hon. Mark and Lady Gertrude Rolle. BOOKS OF POETRY.

There is an inducement, of which it is difficult to foretell the effect, to fall to hastily and multitudinously upon the volume of Historical Dramas, by Tom Taylor, M.A. (Chatto and Windus), for the author intimates that, if we do not show what he considers a proper appreciation of his learned and ingenious "historical dramas," we shall not have the nice collection of "romantic dramas" and the still nicer collection of "comedies and comediettas," which, if we are good, he has more than half a mind to publish for our amusement and edification. We may, of course, reply that we do not care a doit, that we can see them and hear them upon the very boards for which they are far better adapted than they are for reading; but, if we conquer our petulance and take time for a little reflection, we shall probably conclude that it will be better to read them. For it is only by reading that we shall be able to discover how much their success, which cannot be gainsaid, is due to the author and how much to the actors and actresses and accessories. We shall be able to decide how much it was owing to Mr. Phelps that we were electrified by "The Fool's Revenge," how much to Mrs. Rousby that we were charmed with "Twixt Axe and Crown," how much to Mr. A. Wigan, Mr. Emery, Mr. Robson, and Mrs. Stirling that we were enchanted with "Plot and Passion," supposing that we saw those plays to such advantage. And similar remarks will apply to the other pieces in the volume. On the whole, then, it is probable that the reader will recognise in the author the master-spirit and the master-hand, most ably seconded, no doubt, but capable, nevertheless, of riveting the attention and swaying the feelings, without any extraneous assistance, by the mere influence of his own faculties reflected upon the printed page. It is true that, whether knowledge of the fact be responsible for the fancy or not, it seems as if the author had taken the business-like view of things, had kept the foot-lights steadily before his eyes, had confined himself almost entirely to the consideration of what would "act well" and what would "tell" with an audience, and has seldom or never permitted his genius to soar away into the regions of sheer poetry, those regions where the mere playgoer would be lost and bewildered, but where the reader and thinker would be perfectly at home and would revel in abundance of intellectual gratification. And this idea, in whatever way it may originate, whether spontaneously, from the impression produced in the course of perusal, or from the author's own explanation of his purpose and declaration of his method, is very much strengthened by the profusion with which "stage directions" are scattered over the pages, by the instructions which are given touching the costumes, and by the hints afforded concerning the grouping of the characters at the end of a play. The adoption of this course has a great tendency to spoil the effect of the plays from the literary point of view; but, on the other hand, it is pretty certain that, if it were not for the assistance thus supplied, some of the situations would fail to be appreciated, and some portions of the dialogue would be almost unintelligible to the reader. Besides, the plays are thus rendered more easy of representation for the lovers of "private theatricals." The author is himself of opinion that "every drama submitted to the judgment of audiences should be prepared to encounter that of readers." When he says "prepared," he, of course, uses a term which may be misunderstood; but he, no doubt, means that such dramas should, in the form in which they were acted and without any further "preparation," be able to hold their own as specimens of literature; and it will be strange if his "historical dramas" be not generally considered to stand that test triumphantly.

That Homer sometimes nodded is universally admitted, and there is no reason for surprise, whatever there may be for regret, if Harry, by the author of "Mrs. Jerminham's Journal" (Macmillan and Co.), be found to disappoint the great expectations with which a host of readers will be sure to take up the poem. This is a case such as often arises: if the author had published nothing before, a very favourable impression would be made by the present publication; but, as the author had already acquired no small reputation, the inevitable penalty has to be paid, and inferior work produces a feeling of discontent approaching to a sense of injury. One is almost ashamed to offer so truly poetical a writer one's acknowledgments for a budget of pretty verses; but it is scarcely possible to go further in the way of complimentary language. Nor, indeed, are all the verses pretty: to only some of them can even that unsatisfactory epithet be truthfully applied. Many of them are little better than doggerel. And it is to be feared, both from internal evidence and from reasonable conjecture, that the great Wordsworth is responsible for this melancholy fact. Not even he could always handle his simplicity so as to keep himself clear from reproach; he could certainly wield it in such fashion that what he produced by its means was often almost sublime, and more often irresistibly touching, but he sometimes so mismanaged it that what he wrought thereby was grotesquely ludicrous, or ludicrously grotesque. And in less skilful hands than his it is a very dangerous tool to employ. And so it happens that in the case under consideration what should have been, and was most likely intended to be, simple and pathetic becomes commonplace and unimpressive, prosy and marred by bathos, conventional and tinged with vulgarity. So long as the poem is confined to love-dreams, in which flowers and scents and stars and dew and "everything that pretty bin" are as plentiful as usual in such happy visions, the verse is as melodious as need be, the language is, for the most part, appropriate enough, and the scenes are sufficiently idyllic and graceful, illuminated with some pleasant gleams of playful humour; but so soon—which is very soon—as the realities of life, whether ordinary or tragic or comic, begin to be depicted, then, indeed, the writer's flight is very near the ground, and the writer's muse seems to be less familiar with Helicon than with the neighbourhood of Aldgate Pump. The fact is that few writers can safely indulge their inclination, however great it may be, to make poetry, or rather verse, the vehicle for introducing to public notice a tale told in a style—a half burlesque style—which might do, perhaps, for a prose story in a magazine. And the story itself is hackneyed enough. The sweet girl loves and marries the handsome captain, whom she believes, of course, to be a paragon, and whom she expects, poor soul, to be content with her attractions alone for ever. She soon finds that he can neglect her for the more attractive cards. He quarrels over them, and is supposed to have killed a comrade. He flies to a distant land, and his faithful wife insists upon going with him. There they live a not very joyous life, chiefly on account of the husband's remorse; until one day the supposed-to-be-murdered man stands suddenly before them, all is set right, and the paragon, returning home "a sadder but a wiser man," behaves in a manner which meets with his wife's full approbation. Such a theme could hardly bear to be treated in the semi-burlesque style in which the author has treated it without detriment as regards the poetical element: for the muse is not congenially employed in the portrayal of a policeman with his finger on his nose, slang and bad grammar on his lips, and not an A to his alphabet.

What a chaste, elegant, simple cover can do towards recommending a volume has been done for A Dream of the Gironde, and Other Poems, by Evelyn Pyne (Smith, Elder, and Co.); nor will the curiosity which may prompt a reader to peer within the covers go altogether unrequited. "A Dream of the Gironde" is a drama in five acts; and the "other poems" are four in number, entitled respectively, "The Star-God," "Lost Happiness," "Thistle-Blossom," and "Dulcamara." And each of these pieces has its own charm of thought, passion, eloquence, grace, metre, or rhythm, though none of them may attain to grandeur or disclose the properties expected of those whose birth took place beneath the very eye of Melpomene or her sisters. Still, a certain degree of elevation is reached, and the standard arrived at is above the common. The drama, which is in the orthodox five acts, cannot have been written with any view of being acted. The guillotine and the tumbril are introduced too often for representation upon the stage. Moreover, there is quite an embarrassment of prominent characters, so that it would be almost impossible to divide the whole into harmonious, duly subordinated portions, with that carefully graduated scale of interest which is the surest means of fixing the attention of an audience. The drama, besides, is peculiar in other respects. The dialogue and the soliloquies are written sometimes in blank verse, sometimes in rhymed verse; and, in the latter case, one of the personages will be found to soliloquise in separate stanzas. This is not at all according to the rules of the dramatic Cocker. Some pretty little, airy songs are interspersed; and there are one or two very tender, affecting, simple, graceful scenes between Madame Roland and her little daughter. For the title will have led the reader to correctly conclude that the period of the drama is that of the French Revolution; so that the names of Louis and Marie Antoinette, of Roland, Vergniaud, Danton, Desmoulins, Robespierre, and many another celebrated or infamous contemporary of those momentous times throng, one after another, upon the bewildered gaze. And it is as a study, in verse, of those characters that the drama must be regarded; and so regarded it is likely to meet with appreciation, although it is quite plain that the multitude of interesting personages precluded anything like a profound study or a complete picture of any. In the "Star-God" the author exhibits his imaginative powers, in verse of simple construction; in "Lost Happiness" he indulges his plaintive vein, displaying considerable skill and musical mastery in the management of a somewhat complicated metre; in "Thistle-Blossom," a longish poem, he shows himself in various moods and various metres, uttering thoughts and melodies of many kinds; and "Dulcamara," a melancholy wail, a tale of love and loss, of happiness cut short by ruthless Death, concludes the volume with a touching strain, a song of mixed sweetness and sadness, in unpretentious language and in the minor key.

THE WAR.

Our Illustrations of the War, both on the Danube, or farther on in Bulgaria, and in Armenia, on the road between Erzeroum and Kars, continue to be supplied by the Special Artists who have been appointed to go through those campaigns, as well with the Turkish as with the Russian armies. These gentlemen have personally endured, along with the literary correspondents of the daily journals, English and foreign, their necessary share of the hardships and perils of military life in the field of actual warfare. The scene at one of the gates of Rustchuk, which is represented on our front-page Engraving, shows the narrow escape of Mr. Melton Prior and Mr. Coningsby from the bursting of a Russian shell directly in front of their carriage, as they were about to enter the town during its late bombardment. In the foreground is an armed Turk, intent, as a good father, on carrying off his three little boys to a place of safety; but horrible accounts have lately been published of the cruelties practised on Turkish children, besides the ill-treatment of women, in some villages of Bulgaria, since the Russian invasion of that country. The fosse or moat outside the walls of Rustchuk, at the time of this incident, which is represented in our Artist's sketch, was crowded with Turkish women, some of whom, says our correspondent, were badly hurt by the exploding shells. Having made his way into the town, he witnessed that extraordinary scene in the streets which he has delineated in the sketch that furnishes our two-page Engraving, placed in the middle of this week's sheet. It shows the hurried and mingled flight of a multitude of private families, with part of their household furniture and stores of clothing or provisions, hastening to take refuge in the villages upon the neighbouring hills. The scene was rather distressing than amusing; and it is most grievous now to consider that many of those unfortunate people are likely to have been overtaken, some days later, either by the Cossacks or by the infuriated Bulgarians, who presently rose up to wreak their vengeance indiscriminately on the Turks, at the approach of the Russian army. It is but fair to say that some of the Russian Generals in command have exerted their authority to prevent the Bulgarians, or the licentious and ferocious troops of irregular soldiery, perpetrating such deeds of cruelty and wanton havoc and insult in the places abandoned by the Turkish Government officials. General Zimmermann, who commanded the army corps that crossed the Danube at Braila and captured Matchin on the 22nd ult., refused to accept the customary offering of "bread and salt," in token of ceremonious hospitality, from the elders, the pastor and schoolmaster of the Bulgarian parochial community at Hirsova. The Russian General rebuked them severely for having permitted an attack upon the houses of their Mussulman neighbours or fellow-townsmen. This incident was witnessed by our Special Artist there, whose sketch of it is engraved for the present Number; and it is also narrated by the Daily News special correspondent. The sacking of the Turkish coffee-house at Matchin, and the destruction of tombstones in a graveyard, and of a small mosque adjacent to it, by the mob of native Bulgarians, were noted by our Artist, and were made subjects for his pencil. One of his minor sketches is that of the comfortable apartment in the Konak, or Turkish Government House, at Matchin, where two of the Special Correspondents were fain to accept a lodging.

Referring once again to the bombardment of Rustchuk in the last days of June, we may remind our readers of the complaints then made that the Russian batteries at Giurgevo, on the opposite bank of the Danube, had directed their fire, apparently of set purpose, against the house of Mr. Reade, the British Consul, and likewise against the Konak or Government House, which was then used as a military hospital. The fact is scarcely denied, and we presume that the Russian Government has been asked to give some explanation, or to make some apology, for that gratuitous insult to the British flag, if not for the offence to humanity implied in such treatment of a building devoted to the care of the sick and wounded. Our Artist then in the town of Rustchuk contributes several illustrations of the damage thus caused to the British Consulate, and to the Hospital also, which was consequently broken up and removed elsewhere.

The subject of one sketch by our Artist at the Imperial Russian head-quarters is of much more pleasant character. It is an incident that took place on the 6th inst., at Simnitsa, when the Emperor Alexander II. and his staff had just finished dinner. A detachment of Turkish prisoners, under strong escort, were marched into the yard fronting the Emperor's house for his Majesty's inspection. These prisoners had been taken during the crossing of the Danube and in the fighting which ensued; they consisted of regular soldiers, Bashibazouks, and ordinary peasants. The Emperor entered into conversation with them, through an interpreter, and distributed his cigarettes among them, much to their astonishment and pleasure. The staff followed the Emperor's example, and soon every cigar-case was empty, and the prisoners were actually asking the Russian officers for a light. This treatment had evidently a great effect on the wretched men, who had fared miserably in the Turkish service.

"The School Board of Asia Minor" would not be an inappropriate name for the sketch we get from one of our correspondents at Erzeroum. The local educational government at the seat of war have decided that, if they don't actually "teach the young idea how to shoot," they will at least make him useful in bringing up the guns. It is a very curious sight to see these urchins hard at work, from 100 to 150 of them to each battery, toiling with a hearty will in a cause of which they know but little; while the village schoolmaster, proud as a generalissimo, gallops hither and thither directing the movements of his little battalion of light infantry. By this system, taken up in turn from village to village, do the Turks bring their "Krupps" to the front in Asia Minor.

Our Extra Supplement large Engraving is a view of the bombardment of Nicopolis, with the troops moving to the assault upon that town, which was captured in the manner already related, with a large number of Turkish soldiers, forty guns, and a store of ammunition.

The progress of military operations, as shown by the latest reports to Thursday evening this week, has not been of a decisive character since our last week's account of the campaign in Bulgaria. The Turkish Commander-in-Chief, Abdul Kerim Pasha, has been recalled to Constantinople in disgrace, and his post is now held by Mohamed Ali Pasha, who arrived at Shumla and took command on Monday evening last. Redif Pasha has also been dismissed from the Ministry of War.

The Russian advanced column beyond Tirnova has forced the Shipka Pass of the Balkans, from Gabrova to Kazanlik, and has firmly established its hold there, which will enable the main body to enter Roumelia, and to come down upon the line of railway between Philippopolis and Adrianople. There was much fighting in the Shipka Pass on Wednesday and Thursday week, and it was renewed on subsequent days, but the Russians kept the advantage. They will probably be called upon to fight a more serious battle in the valley of the Tundja, where the position of Yeni Zagra is likely to be contested. The Turkish forces on that side, collected under the joint command of Sulciman Pasha and Raouf Pasha, number about 60,000, which is double the Russian force at this time south of the Balkans. It seems therefore possible that a check may be administered to the invading army in that direction, unless it remain satisfied with the occupation of the mountain passes till after some decided victory in Bulgaria shall have permitted the advance of the Grand Duke Nicholas with the bulk of his disposable forces.

In the meantime, however, it is certain that the Russian right wing, moving southward from Nicopolis, has suffered a repulse at Plevna, thirty miles from the Danube. This action was fought yesterday week; General Schuldner, the Russian commander, owns to a positive defeat, with the loss of 2000 men killed and wounded. The Turks were commanded by Osman Pasha. At the same time, the very important position of Rasgrad, on the road between Rustchuk and Shumla, has been contested with severe fighting; and Eyoub Pasha appears to have been enabled, so far, to defend it against the Russian attacks. We hear little, just now, of the operations already commenced for the siege of Rustchuk. The fortress of Silistria, lower down the Danube, is menaced by a portion of the army corps of General Zimmermann, which has passed through the Dobrudscha and occupied Osman Bazarjik, towards Varna. The centre of all the Turkish military operations is at Shumla, which is tolerably secure from hostile approach.

There was an engagement on the Danube near Silistria last Monday, between the Russian gun-boats, supported by batteries on shore, and some Turkish monitors or gun-boats. The Russians claim to have sunk or burnt four of the latter. The Roumanians opposite Widdin have made an unsuccessful attack on that town. It is expected that they will be allowed to occupy Nicopolis, while the Russians move on to the south. In Herzegovina the Montenegrins have taken some outworks of Nikschin, and are pressing the siege of that fortress.

From the seat of war in Asia there is little news of importance, and the exact positions of the armies have not been reported for some days past. It is still uncertain whether the Russians will again come forward to renew the siege of Kars.

"THE INTERCEPTED LETTER."

The Civil Wars, or the plots and conspiracies, of English political partisans in the seventeenth century, are familiar to our historical students as having abounded in disagreeable personal adventures, like that which Mr. Seymour Lucas has represented, with considerable dramatic force, in his picture at the Royal Academy Exhibition. It is hardly needful that we should comment upon a scene of characters in action, which tells its own tale so distinctly and vividly as in this particular encounter. The captive bearer of an illicit message, tied fast in the chair by hand and foot, scowling at the gentlemen who have got possession of the letter he carried, which they have torn from the stuffed lining of his saddle, now lying on the floor beside his idle sword; the master of the house, be he lord, or knight, or squire, attentively perusing that important document, assisted by one who looks like a clergyman, and by the frightened person in the long cloak; these figures might easily be introduced in a tale of historic romance similar to the Waverley Novels, and Sir Walter Scott would have known what to make them do and say. But we shall leave our younger readers to exercise their own fancy, if they please, in filling up the details of the story, and in providing each of its several persons with "a local habitation and a name."

The iron-masters of Scotland, at a meeting held in Glasgow on Wednesday, unanimously resolved to reduce their output by one third, having found that to maintain their whole furnaces in blast is unremunerative. One third of the furnaces at present working will therefore be immediately blown out.

Two large bronze figures, representing Peace and History, have been shipped by the steam-ship Batavia for Boston, United States. They were modelled by Mr. Martin Milmore at his studio in Rome, and cast by Messrs. Cox and Son at their Bronze Foundry, Thames Ditton. These complete the Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial at Boston of the war between the North and South. The monument, which consists of a large column ornamented with nine figures, trophies, wreaths, and several bas-reliefs, all in bronze, is to be unveiled in September next.

A verdict for £6100 damages was given on Wednesday in an action brought at the Nottingham Assizes against the Great Northern Railway Company by Mrs. Burbage for the loss of her husband and injuries sustained by herself in the Arlesley accident in December last. The carriage in which the plaintiff and her husband were travelling was smashed, Mrs. Burbage received injuries which will render her a cripple for life, and her husband died from the results of the amputation of his leg, which was rendered necessary by the injuries he sustained. At the time of the accident Mr. Burbage was in receipt of £500 a year. Joseph King, a greengrocer, has obtained £350 from the same company as compensation for the injury he sustained whilst unloading potatoes.

The King of Greece has bestowed the Greek order of "the Saviour" upon Mr. John Hilary Skinner, the well-known Special Correspondent of the Daily News on foreign and military affairs. Mr. Skinner is now at Athens, writing instructive reports of the present state of Greece, and of its readiness to take an active part in the general Eastern conflict. He was with the Greeks and the Cretan insurgents ten years ago, thrice running the blockade on the coasts of that island, and then sojourning a time in its mountain districts, where he saw much of the desperate struggle to throw off the Turkish yoke. Upon his return to England he exerted himself to raise funds and procure needful stores for the relief of the Cretan sick and wounded, and of the fugitive and destitute Cretan families. He lectured at St. James's Hall, and in Liverpool, and also visited the United States of America, for that benevolent purpose; after which he again went to Greece, for the distribution of the bounty thus obtained. Mr. Skinner has served con amore, with genuine enthusiasm for these modern crusades of national independence, as the faithful and zealous reporter of their historic deeds, upon several important occasions during the last fifteen years. The Danes in their sturdy defence of Schleswig-Holstein, the Prussians in their momentous contest with Austria, and Germany in its mighty duel with the French Empire, have been indebted to his presence in their camps, and to his accurate and animated narratives, for making their conduct appear to the English public in a most favourable light. He made also a thorough personal examination of the state of the American Union, and of Mexico, "after the storm" of those events which convulsed the Western Continent from 1861 to 1866; and he witnessed and commented upon the final act in the accomplishment of Italian unity. As Mr. Skinner is the author of several books on these subjects of recent contemporary history, and has received particular tokens of esteem from more than one foreign Court, in acknowledgment of services going far beyond the work of a mere travelling journalist, his career has seemed to be worth this brief notice upon the present occasion.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

It is stated by the Moniteur that, although Oct. 14 is the day on which the French elections will probably take place, that date has not yet been fixed.

The Post Office authorities, acting under instructions from the Minister of the Interior, refuse to deliver letters or newspapers addressed to clubs or corporate bodies, and the various postmasters have been ordered to state that the law requires that all articles passing through the post must be addressed to some one person. Thus, letters addressed to the Mayor of a town or commune will be returned unless his name is given.

At Rouen and Bordeaux the booksellers who were prosecuted for selling newspapers have been acquitted. At Marseilles the Municipal Council has been dissolved and a Commission has been appointed in its stead.

HOLLAND.

The Government has presented to the Chamber a bill for granting to authors the copyright for literary works, to extend over a period of fifty years from the first publication. This copyright, which is to hold good for the Netherlands and Dutch Indies, is also applicable to dramatic and musical works. Penalties for infringement are to consist of fines ranging from twenty-five to 2000 florins.

PORTUGAL.

The King has gone from Lisbon on a visit to King Alfonso during his stay in Galicia.

Tuesday being the anniversary of the entry of the Liberal troops into Lisbon, a statue which has been erected to the memory of the Duke of Terceira was unveiled. A review of the garrison was held in the presence of the Royal family, and in the evening the city was illuminated and bands of music paraded the streets.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The monument erected by order of the Emperor Francis Joseph at Pola in honour of the late Admiral Tegethoff was unveiled on the 20th inst. This monument is a bronze statue of Austria's naval hero.

AMERICA.

The riotous proceedings of the railway men on strike in the United States have almost assumed the dimensions of a civil war. They have led to a reign of terror in two cities, and the militia are under arms in five States. The traffic has been paralysed on two main trunk lines—on the Baltimore and Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railways—and is seriously embarrassed on a third, the Erie. The gravity of the situation is so great that President Hayes has issued a general proclamation commanding the railway rioters to disperse, and has ordered all available army and navy forces to Washington and Baltimore, with General Hancock in command. The Cabinet has been discussing the policy of declaring Maryland, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia in a state of insurrection, and calling out 75,000 volunteers for the suppression of the outbreak.

The disturbances originated in this way. The directors of the Baltimore and Ohio line recently announced a reduction of 10 per cent upon the wages of all their servants. In this they have only followed the initiative of the boards of other important lines and of many trading and industrial employers in America. The proposed reduction was accepted by all the servants concerned, except the stokers and brakemen in the goods department, who when the change came into force, on Monday week, encountered it with a strike. At Baltimore the places of the men who went on strike were filled without difficulty by new hands eager for employment, and a first attempt to interfere with the recruits and to stop the dispatch of the trains was defeated by the police. But in West Virginia the opposition assumed a much more formidable character. The "strikers" attacked the new men, beat back the police when the latter were called to the rescue, overpowered the railway officials, and took possession of the rolling stock. They boldly declared their intention of wholly stopping the goods traffic, though they provisionally allowed the dispatch of passenger-trains. The president of the company appealed to the Governor of the State, who ordered out two companies of State militia to restore order. But the men on strike offered a daring and obstinate resistance. Shots were exchanged and blood was shed, and the local troops showed so much sympathy with the rioters that no good result was attained. The forces of the disaffected, amounting to nearly 1000 men, seized the line, keeping guard over some eighty locomotives, and completely paralysing the goods traffic of the entire railway. Reinforced by a number of canal boatmen, they seized arms, constructed earthworks, and liberated their captured fellows from the gaols. The Governor promptly ordered out more troops, but he was not able to use them effectively against the rioters, who were excited as well as numerous. For the militia evidently sympathised with the rioters, and nothing could be done to restore order. The disturbance then spread throughout the district, and also to the Pennsylvania Railway, and during the past week has covered a large area.

The most serious outbreak was at Pittsburg. The men on all the lines passing through the city stopped work, and prevented the running of city trains. The result was that a body of militia, a thousand strong, was dispatched from Philadelphia to quell the disturbance. The city remained quiet until the militia arrived on Saturday afternoon. In marching through the city they were struck with stones, and fired two volleys into the crowd of women and children on the pavement, killing twenty persons and wounding twenty-nine. This inflamed the passions of the working men. Crowds gathered in the streets at night, armed themselves with revolvers and guns, and besieged the round-house of the Pennsylvania Railroad, where the Philadelphia soldiers were stationed.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Times says:—"About daylight on Sunday the mob got a cannon into position, for the purpose of bombarding the round-house, but the troops soon drove the gunners away, and the mob, by pushing the burning cars against the house, fired it. The troops made several unsuccessful sorties on their besiegers, sometimes scattering them; but they were ultimately driven back into the burning buildings, surrounded with blazing petroleum cars. About nine o'clock the troops found they could no longer remain without being roasted alive, and they therefore abandoned the position, retreating through an adjoining timber-yard along the streets eastward from Pittsburg. They had not marched far, however, when the rioters gave chase, and the retreat continued till the United States arsenal was reached. The commander refused the troops admittance, fearing that the building would be sacked, and having only ten men. Finally, he received the wounded, and the troops continued their retreat, the mob chasing them, and a running fusillade was maintained till Alleghany cemetery was reached. Here the contest was renewed, and several were wounded and some killed. After a brief pause the retreat was again resumed, the troops crossing the Alleghany river by Sharpshooter bridge, above Pittsburg. Then, scattering into small bodies, they managed to avoid the mob, but were completely disorganised. Later on Sunday they reassembled at Claremont, ten miles from Pittsburg, forming a fortified camp. They lost twenty-five killed and wounded during the retreat."

At Pittsburg 125 locomotives and 2000 laden cars have been destroyed, the value being estimated at about four millions of dollars. The citizens have formed a Vigilance Committee, by which the city is guarded.

Fifty leaders of the Pittsburg riot have been arrested, and a quantity of plunder has been recovered. A proclamation has been issued by Governor Hartrout advising the citizens to form armed associations for the protection of property. Work in the Pennsylvania mines has been suspended, in consequence of the blockade of the coal-trains.

Large crowds gathered on Sunday round the Pennsylvania railway station, where the strikers prevented any movement of trains. The Mayor has issued a proclamation urging the citizens to keep the peace and avoid assembling in the streets. No disturbance has occurred. The Governor of Pennsylvania has called upon President Hayes for assistance. At Reading, in Pennsylvania, a regiment which was attacked by the mob fired, killed seven persons, and wounded twenty-five others.

Telegraph wires have been cut, trains blocked or wrecked, and the troops in charge of the trains besieged by the rioters. The agitation has extended to San Francisco.

The insurgents, who are strong in their own organisation, are supported morally and physically by large numbers of operatives who have never worked on the railways. In the States multitudes of people who are in want of employment are roaming over the country. From this class the rioters have been largely recruited. The fighting at Pittsburg and elsewhere has been conducted with a skill and a determination which seem to indicate that the leaders, at least, are trained soldiers.

Strong forces have been ordered by the Government to St. Louis and Chicago, where the mobs are particularly threatening. In view of possible trouble, the militia of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City remain under arms night and day. The Government at Washington are, however, reported to feel confident of their ability to repress disorder with the force at their command.

Such was the state of affairs at the time we went to press with our early edition.

A collision between two passenger-trains has occurred near Pittsburg, causing the death of eight persons.

It is pleasant to turn from the consideration of these untoward events to treat of one quite different. The widow of Mr. A. T. Stewart has made a munificent offering, in part as a memorial of her late husband—no less a matter than the building and endowing of a cathedral. One million and a half of dollars is mentioned as the sum set apart for this object. The cathedral is to rise on Long Island, at the distance of some eight or ten miles from Brooklyn, a city on the East River, directly opposite to New York. The corner-stone was laid on the 5th inst., in the presence of Mrs. Stewart and a great multitude of persons. One hundred and twenty of the clergy, in full robes, were in the procession. Addresses were made by the Bishop of Long Island and others of the clergy, and by a leading layman of the diocese, and all were excellent in form and spirit.

INDIA.

The latest news from the famine districts is most gloomy, owing to the almost entire cessation of the rains. The situation is said to be critical in the extreme, and is causing much anxiety. From Madras the news comes of crops suffering and pasture failing, and an extensive failure of unirrigated crops is inevitable.

The Times' correspondent says:—"If rain does not fall within the next few days, in all probability the next week or two will decide whether Madras and Mysore are doomed to undergo the terrible calamity of a second year of scarcity. The mortality in the relief camps is already very great, and should the rains be much longer withheld it will increase enormously. These gloomy anticipations, however, do not apply to the Malabar coast districts, where the monsoon has continued without interruption, and everything is going on satisfactorily. The last Bombay official report also complains of a break in the rains, and says it has not yet done any harm to districts which, previous to the break, had received a sufficient supply of rain, but that elsewhere it was doing much evil, causing prices to rise fast and creating much anxiety. Nor are these tales of anticipated drought confined to the famine districts only. Complaints come from Northern India, and the aspect of affairs in Behar has been growing serious during the last fortnight. The July rainfall has also been very short in the north-west, central provinces, and Assam, while from beyond the frontier we hear that scarcity is inevitable in Nepal. The rainfall has been much below the average in Lower Bengal, but prospects are fair, as there was no actual cessation of rain."

Telegraphic communication between England, Jersey, and Guernsey, which had been interrupted during the last five weeks, was restored on Sunday. The rupture of cable was found to be about thirty miles from the English coast.

The ship Newcastle, 1137 tons, Captain Whereat, sailed from Gravesend on the 20th inst., bound for Brisbane, New Zealand, with the following number of emigrants on board:—72 married people, 164 single men, 90 single women, 61 children between the ages of twelve and one, and 10 infants.

A memorial has been forwarded to Lord Carnarvon by the Aborigines Protection Society in favour of the direct representation of the native races of South Africa in the Legislative Assembly of the Union. The memorialists state:—"We have no desire to see masses of uncivilised men invested with political rights which they would be wholly unable to exercise in either a responsible or an intelligent manner; but we venture to submit, on the ground alike of justice and of policy, that native Africans who have acquired both education and property should not be excluded from the possession of the elective franchise." Amongst the names appended are those of Lord Ebury, Mr. Charles Darwin, Canon Liddon, Mr. Justice Fry, Dr. Moffat, and nearly forty members of Parliament.

The Aosta section of the Italian Alpine Club has issued a prospectus inviting all similar bodies to take part in a reunion and excursion to the Little St. Bernard, which is to precede the International meeting at Grassonay, organised by a number of the Italian sections. The fête is to last three days, beginning next Monday, in the course of which time, in addition to enjoying the luxury of banquets, déjeuners, "social suppers," and soires, the excursionists will ascend the Lancebrantette—from which a magnificent panorama of the Alps can be had from Mont Blanc to Monte Rosa—visit the Meteorological Observatory, directed by M. C. Chevalier Chanoux, inspect the Ruitor glacier, explore everything of interest in the neighbourhood, and finally assemble at Courmayeur. Those of the Alpinists who mean to attend the International meeting at Grassonay will be accompanied as far as Aosta by the members of that section, who will be happy to entertain them, and point out the Roman and Middle-Age relics of the town. The ascent of the Lancebrantette being easy, ladies are invited to essay the task, while foreign school parties are also asked to join the pleasure-seekers. The monks of St. Bernard will extend their hospitality to the travellers.

The special evening services in Westminster Abbey will be discontinued after Sunday, July 29, until further notice.

A crowded meeting was held yesterday week, in Exeter Hall, in opposition to the practice of auricular confession in the Church of England.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on the Rev. John Causton, Chaplain to the Fleet and of Greenwich Hospital, for his services to the Church in the Royal Navy.

The little chapel of St. Mary's, South Zeal, a hamlet in the parish of South Tawton, Dartmoor, has been restored by the kindness of Mr. Lethbridge, a member of the firm of Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son, under the direction of the Vicar, the Rev. J. Bliss. The building, which is of the Tudor period, is only 35 feet long by 13 feet wide.

Mr. Dale officiated at St. Vedast's, Foster-lane, on Sunday, for the first time since his inhibition. There was no celebration of communion, and consequently there were no Ritual observances. In the course of his sermon Mr. Dale said, with regard to the charges against him, that he was not ashamed of what he had done. He gloried in it, and had been glad to suffer for Christ's sake.

A new church at Laindon Hills, Essex, has been consecrated by the Bishop of St. Albans on a new site beautifully and picturesquely placed in a wood at the top of the hill. It is understood that the cost has been borne almost entirely by the new Rector. The church, from designs of Mr. W. White, F.S.A., is of Early Pointed character, and, although small in size, is lofty in its proportions. The tower is not completed.

A new church has for some months been in the course of erection at Biarritz, upon a design by Mr. C. Mileham. The building will be completed by the time that the winter pressure of English begins; and as soon as the remaining debt of £300 or £400 is raised it will be consecrated. The cost of the church will be £3000 without the tower and interior adornments, which are to be subsequently added.

On the 17th inst. St. Andrew's, Hoxton, which had been closed for some weeks, was reopened for Divine service. Extensive repairs have been carried out on the roof, towards which the Bishop of London's Fund has made a grant of £100. Alterations have also been made at the east end for the accommodation of a newly-formed choir, and a lectern, the gift of the Rev. R. W. Delacour, has been placed there.

The west window of Chiswick church has lately been filled with painted glass. The window consists of three lights and tracery. The following inscription is placed at the base:—"To the glory of God and in loving memory of Thomas Wilson, late of Bradmore House, Chiswick, who died May 17, 1876. This window was erected by Annie Maria, his widow, 1877." The execution was intrusted to A. L. Moore and Co.

The chancel of St. Gwladys's Church, in the parish of Gelligaer, was on Thursday week opened for Divine worship. The foundation-stone was laid on Easter Tuesday, 1876, by Miss Richards, of Plasnewydd, who, in conjunction with Mr. Wingfield, of Barrington Park, gave the site; and on the same day an iron church, which had been erected, was opened. The two have now been united, and the iron church will serve as the nave until the church is completed.

The Archbishop of York attended last week the reopening services of the West Orchard parish church, in Dorset, which, by the munificence of Lady Westminster and Lord Wolverton, has been rebuilt at a cost of £1500. The edifice is in the Early English style of architecture, built of green stone with Bath stone dressings. The chancel has been formed from the east end of the old church, and has a handsome reredos of mosaic work. The design of the building is by Mr. T. H. Wyatt, of London; Mr. T. B. Miles, of Shaftesbury, being the builder.

Mr. Robert Alderson Turner, hon. secretary of the London Gregorian Association, has undertaken the arrangements of the proposed service for the working classes to be held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Aug. 9. The festival will be given at the request of a very large number of working men. All the seats will be free, and there will not be any collection. The choir will number 1000 voices, assisted by the band of the association as well as the organ, under the direction of Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

The ceremony of confirming the election made by the Dean and Chapter of Rochester of the Rev. A. W. Thorold, D.D., to be Bishop of that see in the room of Dr. Cloughton, translated to the bishopric of St. Albans, took place on Monday morning in Bow church; and his consecration on Wednesday in Westminster Abbey. The Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the Bishops of London, St. Albans, Ely, Guildford, Durham, St. David's, and Winchester were present on the occasion. Dr. Thorold was enthroned at Rochester on Friday. The Sheffield Telegraph is authorised to state that the consecration of the Rev. Canon Hill, Bishop-Designate of Sodor and Man, will take place on Aug. 24, in York Minster.

The governors of the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy held their last meeting for the present season on Saturday, at their house, 2, Bloomsbury-place—the Archbishop of Canterbury presiding. The governors gave away £1240 amongst ninety-six clergymen and clergy widows, aged single daughters and children, the grants for children being for apprenticing, educating, and providing outfits. The pensions of twenty-three widows and daughters, whose comparative merits and necessities presented the strongest claims, were raised from £20 to £30 per annum; and four other ladies were elected to pensions of £20 and £10. Last month the governors distributed £2174, chiefly amongst poor clergymen with large families; and since the last long vacation they have distributed in all about £26,500 in donations to poor clergymen, their widows and children, and in pensions to clergy widows and aged single daughters, the recipients being about 1450 in number, and applying from various parts of England and Wales.

The Church Congress, which will be held at Croydon on Oct. 9, 10, 11, and 12, promises to be a more important gathering than any of its sixteen predecessors. The table of meetings, though settled by the committee as long ago as April 16, is only now ready for publication. Among the more important and interesting subjects are—"Mohammedanism in relation to Christianity," "Christian faith and sceptical culture in their relative bearings on practical life," "The best means of promoting united action and mutual toleration between different schools of thought within the Church," "Representative assemblies of the Church of England," "The readjustments, if any, desirable in the relations of Church and State," "The mutual relations between the Church and Nonconformity," "The Church in relation to Trades Unions," "The observance of the Lord's Day." The opening sermon will be preached by Professor Lightfoot; and the closing one, on Oct. 13, in the parish church, Croydon, by Canon Farrar.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Lord Penrhyn has sent to the hon. secretary a cheque for £100 in aid of the funds of the University College of Wales. Mr. Williams, writing to the Times on the subject of this college, says:—"It is not the chief aim of the promoters to establish a large educational institution as a stepping-stone to other Universities, although without doubt this would be one result of their success. Our desire is to establish in Wales a University College at which there can be obtained an education equal to that obtained at Oxford, Cambridge, and the Scotch Universities; and we seek to establish this not for the sake of the poor only, but for the benefit of all classes in the Principality. We desire to establish in Wales an institution that shall be to it what the University of Glasgow is to the West of Scotland."

Tuesday was prize-day at Marlborough College. The distribution of prizes was made by the new Master, the Rev. G. C. Bell, late Master of Christ's Hospital, who prefaced the ceremony with a review of his first year's work here. Then the Senior Prefect presented Dr. Farrar with £200 worth of plate in the name of past and present Marlburians—a memorial of their gratitude for his energy and devotion as Head Master of Marlborough College. The sum of £125 has also been invested from the testimonial fund to found the Farrar Prize in perpetuity of £4 per annum. Canon Farrar, in response, made a most eloquent speech, testifying to his unabated love for Marlborough.

The Duke of Cambridge on Tuesday presented commissions and prizes to the cadets who recently passed at the examination at the Royal Military Academy. The reports which were read were satisfactory, except that of the conduct of the cadets, and consequently General Sir John Adye could not recommend the presentation of the sword which is usually awarded for exemplary conduct. Mr. Alfred P. Codd was the most successful cadet, standing at the head of the list, and carrying off seven of the principal prizes. There was a large assembly of spectators, among them being the Prince Imperial.

In the absence of Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Lord Morley distributed the prizes at Oxford Military College last Saturday, and also laid the foundation-stone of a new wing intended to accommodate upwards of sixty students. Satisfactory reports were read by Major-General J. Desborough, the Governor, and the Rev. A. H. Dyke Acland, the Head Master.

The following award of Scholarships and Exhibitions has been made at Wellington College:—Leaving Exhibitions.—1, Wellesley Scholarship (classics and mathematics), H. A. Haines; 2, Modern Exhibition (mathematics and modern languages), S. G. Burrard; prox. accessit, H. G. Burrows. Senior Scholarships for boys under sixteen in the school.—1, Kirkpatrick; 2, Pearce; 3, Capper; 4, MacLaren.

At the Privy Council Office on Friday afternoon a memorial praying for the grant of a charter to Owens College, Manchester, conferring upon it the rank of a University, to be called the University of Manchester, was presented to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon by a deputation composed of over fifty gentlemen. The main grounds for the proposal were said to exist in the dense population in and around Manchester, the increasing demand for University education, the tendency of residence at either Oxford or Cambridge to weaken the interest attaching to the pursuits which constitute the main work of the northern districts, and the rigid system of training rendered obligatory by the examinations of the University of London. The Duke of Richmond, in reply to the speeches that had been delivered, said the scheme should receive the great attention it deserved from himself and his colleagues.

The annual speech-day of the College for Blind Sons of Gentlemen, Worcester, took place on the 20th inst., and prizes were distributed by Lady Emily Foley.

The summer examination and distribution of prizes at the Royal Naval Female School took place on Tuesday at St. Margaret's House, Twickenham, previous to the breaking up of the school for the summer holidays, under the presidency of Captain the Hon. F. Maude, R.N.

The Rev. Dr. Abbott, of the City of London School, distributed the prizes to the successful students in the City of London College for Ladies on Wednesday at the City Terminus Hotel. The first prizes were taken by Miss Mary Armstrong, for English history, English, and arithmetic; by Miss Bardsley, for good conduct and German; for literature and composition, by Miss E. A. Brown; algebra, Miss Catherine Midwinter; French, Miss Sherry; Latin, Miss B. Stiernard; drawing, Miss Hemmerde; a special prize for an essay on the duty of kindness to animals, by Miss Cuthbertson; music, Miss Parkinson; singing, Miss Parker; drilling, Miss Midwinter; and the Kindergarten prizes by the Misses H. C. Webster, K. Walter, and F. Sarsen.

Professor Palmer, distributed the prizes at Leamington College on Wednesday, when the senior scholarship was awarded to Owen and the junior to Carter.

On Tuesday the prizes were given to the pupils of the Bradford Grammar School, in St. George's Hall.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

It became the province of the Marquis of Salisbury to deliver the principal Ministerial answers in the Upper Chamber yesterday week. The motion of the Earl of Longford for a copy of the protest made by Major-General Colin Mackenzie, C.B., on the part of claimants to the undistributed portion of the Kirwell Booty, was granted; but the Secretary of State for India explained that five or six successive Governments, and both Houses of Parliament, had decided against the claim in question, and he therefore thought that his noble friend might bow to those decisions. Equally judicious was the noble Marquis in his answer to Lord Hampton. His Lordship, in making a successful application for papers respecting coolie emigration from India to the West Indies, expressed his opinion that it was wise to foster this emigration, as being good alike for India and the West Indies. Whereupon the Marquis of Salisbury showed that the Government were fully alive to the fact, especially as emigration would ameliorate the condition of the natives of the famine districts, but that it was necessary to proceed with caution in the matter; and these views were endorsed by Lord Northbrook and the Earl of Carnarvon. Yet another Indian motion was brought forward. On the motion of Lord Lawrence, an address to the Crown for copies of correspondence and reports on the subject of the proposed separation of the territory beyond the Indus from the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab and the Chief Commissionership of Scinde was agreed to.

Lord Derby, replying briefly on Monday to a question from Earl Granville as to what foundation there was for the rumours of movements of troops to the Mediterranean, stated—

The Mediterranean garrisons are at present below their full complement, and in the present disturbed state of Europe it has been thought desirable that they should be strengthened to the extent of 3000 men. That is the sole foundation for the statements which have appeared in the newspapers.

At the same sitting a few questions of minor import were raised; and the Consolidated Fund Bill for £20,000,000, with a large number of private bills, received the Royal assent.

On Tuesday the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Bill and the Telegraphs Money Bill were read the second time; various other bills were passed; and Earl Cadogan, in placing on the table the new Royal warrant on Promotion and Retirement, said it would be in the hands of peers on Thursday, and he would call their Lordships' attention to it next Monday.

During a brief sitting of their Lordships on Thursday Earl Nelson presented a huge petition, with over 47,000 signatures, from the Church of England Working Men's Association, praying for the repeal of the Public Worship Regulation Act. In the course of conversation on the subject, the Earl of Harrowby traced the petition in some measure to the Society of the Holy Cross and the St. Alban's Mission. The Marquis of Bath attributed the excitement on ecclesiastical matters to the strong party view taken by the Archbishop of Canterbury. After some observations from the two Archbishops and Lord Dynevor, the petition was ordered to lie on the table.

COMMONS.

"The course of business never does run smooth!" the Chancellor of the Exchequer may well have been led to exclaim, with a sigh. Even the mention by Sir Stafford Northcote of Aug. 12 as the approximate date for the close of the Session has not had a mollifying effect on the obdurate Irish brigade. On the contrary, Mr. Parnell has renewed his obstructive tactics with increased vigour; and has made use of language which it has been necessary to "take down," though that operation has not, as yet, been performed on the hon. member himself; albeit, there is in pickle for him a rod, which bids fair to be smartly applied ere the close of the week.

Sir Stafford Northcote, yesterday week, related Lord Beaconsfield's explanation of the reasons which guided him in appointing Mr. Pigott from a War Office clerkship to the post of head of the Stationery Office. Sir W. Barttelot gave notice of a motion for rescinding the motion of censure in the matter; and the Marquis of Hartington deprecating public time being wasted by a prolonged discussion of the subject on that occasion, only a few further remarks fell from Mr. Holms and Mr. Callan. The debate in Committee on the Irish Supreme Court of Judicature Bill had reference to the clauses regulating the appointment of officers to the Court; and a melancholy interest attaches to it from the fact that it was the last debate in the House which the late Sir C. O'Loughlen took part in, an amendment enforcing the appointment of junior clerks by open competition having been inserted in clause 74 on his motion. Mr. O'Connor Power next moved that the time had come for the Fenian convicts to be pardoned; and Major O'Gorman seconded the motion in an amusing historical speech, in which he strove to prove that many Kings of England, from Henry IV. to Cromwell, and many successful statesmen and soldiers, from George Washington to Count Andrássy, were at one time rebels, and therefore inferentially no better than the Fenian convicts. Major O'Gorman concluded with the recitation of Shakespeare's lines, "The quality of mercy is not strained." His appeal for mercy found a supporter in Mr. Pease. Mr. Hardy, as is his wont, infused some warmth into his reply, the effect of which was that until the time arrived when it would be expedient to pardon the men there ought to be no interference between the Government and the prerogative of the Crown. Mr. Butt entered an eloquent defence for the imprisoned men and maintained that it would be best for England as well as for Ireland that the imprisonment should terminate. His arguments were answered by the Attorney-General. Mr. Gladstone thought that either the time had arrived, or it speedily would arrive, when the prerogative of mercy might be extended to the Irishmen in question. Not so, insisted Mr. Cross. The Home Secretary, moreover, justified the resistance of the Government by referring to the similar position taken up by Mr. Gladstone's Ministry. The Government having been supported by the Marquis of Hartington and Mr. Forster, the House divided, and negatived the motion by 235 to 77.

Saturday's sitting was mainly occupied in a wrangling conversation in Committee on the Irish Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, which was eventually ordered to be reported with the amendments, but not before Mr. Parnell and a few other obstructive members had brought upon themselves a just reproof from their nominal leader, Mr. Butt.

On Monday the Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying to the Marquis of Hartington, gave a similar explanation to that which Lord Derby gave to the House of Lords respecting the dispatch of troops to the Mediterranean. It was simply "to raise the garrison of Malta to its full complement" that a number of troops were to be sent there. Questioned previously by Mr. Callan as to whether there was any truth in the rumour that Gallipoli was the destination of the forces, Mr. Bourke contented himself with referring to Sir Stafford Northcote's answer to the Marquis of Hartington. Then ensued another of those personal discussions which have been of frequent occurrence this Session. To enable the Ministry to pass the few measures which they intend shall become law, the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that Government orders should have priority on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Any threatened infringement of the rights of private members is jealously regarded in the House. Mild objection to the proposal was therefore raised by Mr. Monk, Mr. Meldon, and Mr. Cowen, who were apparently reconciled to the arrangement, however, by the conciliatory explanations of Sir Stafford Northcote. And so the matter might have dropped had not the tap of Milesian loquacity been turned on, and the stream of garrulity flowed on from Messrs. O'Donnell and Parnell, in spite of the efforts of the Speaker, Mr. Chaplin, and The O'Donoghue to check the unrestrained babbling of these obstructives. Still another personal matter cropped up to enchain the attention of the House. The rehabilitation of Mr. Pigott was begun by Sir Stafford Northcote, who moved the suspension of the orders of the day, and so gave Sir W. Barttelot the opportunity to move—

That this House, while most anxious to maintain the usefulness and influence of its Select Committees, and to encourage the interest and zeal of officials employed in the public departments of the State, after hearing the further explanations concerning the recent appointment of the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, withdraws the censure conveyed in the said resolution.

Mr. Reginald Yorke seconded the resolution. Mr. Holms, whilst not unwilling that the vote of censure should be withdrawn, after the Premier's explanation, could not help pointing out an inexact statement in that explanation. Lord Beaconsfield had said that Mr. Pigott's father had recorded his vote against him; but Mr. Holms produced the poll-book to show that Mr. Pigott had registered no vote at all at the one contested election at which he could have voted. Though not adverse to the motion under the circumstances, Mr. Holms maintained that the appointment was not in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee, or in the best interests of the public. Mr. W. H. Smith justified the action of the Premier from his personal experience in business affairs. The Chancellor of the Exchequer expatiated on the theme afresh. The Marquis of Hartington advised the Opposition to accede to the motion. A few words were added by Sir R. Knightley and Sir G. Bowyer, and the motion was then unanimously agreed to. Mr. Meldon fruitlessly moved that the salaries of Irish teachers should be increased—his motion was rejected by 110 to 73 votes—and Mr. Henry Samuelson appealed to Lord John Manners to establish an equitable scale of pay for postmen.

Mr. Lowther, in moving on Tuesday that the House should go into Committee on the South Africa Bill, said that the measure resembled in its essential features those of the British North American Act. Sir George Campbell vainly moved, as an amendment, that "no measure establishing a self-governing federation for South Africa will be satisfactory, unless direct provision is made for a settlement of the relations of the white and black races." Mr. W. E. Forster and Mr. E. Jenkins, though severely criticising the Government measure, were not prepared to vote against it. Sir Henry Holland accorded the bill his warm support. Mr. Parnell, Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. Biggar, and Major O'Gorman then strove, either by discussing the clauses out of order, or by moving that the House be counted, to delay the bill from going into Committee. Mr. Cowen, in an able and manly speech, pointed out that the bill was a necessary one. A few other members having spoken, the House divided on Sir George Campbell's amendment, which was negatived by 221 to 22 votes. By 229 against 5 votes the House decided to go into Committee on the bill, and progress was reported; the remainder of the sitting being taken up with the passing of certain clauses in the Irish County Courts Bill.

On Wednesday the obstructive policy pursued throughout the Session by a small section of Irish Home-Rulers reached a climax. No sooner had the House gone into Committee on the South Africa Bill than Mr. O'Donnell moved that progress should be reported, the reason given by him being that legislation on the matter ought to be postponed until the "South African Republic" had had an opportunity of declaring its views on the question. Vainly did the Chancellor of the Exchequer plead that the passing of the bill was urgently necessary to avert the danger of threatened native wars. The obstructives were obdurate. Disorder reigned. Confusion became worse confounded. Mr. Jenkins objected to some words which Mr. Monk used, and moved that they should be "taken down." Mr. Parnell jumped to his feet, and said "the limits of endurance have been passed." The hon. member was right, though possibly not in a sense agreeable to himself. Sir Stafford Northcote moved that his words should be "taken down." Repeatedly was Mr. Parnell called to order by the Chairman. Heedless of authority, he went on to say that he "should feel satisfaction in preventing and thwarting the intentions of the Government in this respect." This time the Chancellor of the Exchequer insisted that these words should be "taken down" and reported to the Speaker. Mr. Raikes having vacated the chair, the Speaker resumed his seat, and gave ear to Sir Stafford Northcote's gravely-uttered complaint. The Speaker then called upon Mr. Parnell, who used further language of a provoking and unseemly nature, to which objection was taken. In the end, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, amid loud cheers, moved:—

That Mr. Parnell, having wilfully and persistently obstructed public business, is guilty of contempt of this House; and that Mr. Parnell, for his said offence, be suspended from the service of the House until Friday next.

Mr. Whitbread, with that good judgment and moderation of tone which render him generally acceptable to both sides of the House, remarked that no objection could be raised against the first part of the motion, but he hoped that the resolution to be introduced on Friday would not be in the direction of limiting the rights of minorities. Mr. Sullivan, with much fluency, repeated these views, and Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen followed in the same vein. Mr. Hardy thereupon thought it discreet to move the adjournment of the debate. Captain Nolan seconded this motion; and, after several other members had spoken, Mr. Parnell, who had been directed to retire from the House, re-entered. The hon. member for Meath had, however, again and again to be called to order by the chairman, on the House resolving itself once more into Committee on the South Africa Bill; and, in the end, only clauses 1 and 2 had been passed when the House adjourned, at six o'clock.

Much disappointment must have been experienced by the occupants of the Strangers' Gallery and the House generally who attended on Thursday in unusually large numbers with the expectation of a recurrence of some of those extraordinary scenes which during the last few days have "thwarted" the efforts of the Government to advance public business, and occasioned manifestations wholly inconsistent with the gravity, decorum, or dignity of the representative branch of the Legislature. The Chancellor of the Exchequer having, in the course of the unprecedented proceedings of yesterday, committed himself to a resolution to subject the hon. member for Meath (Mr. Parnell) to the offence of contempt of the House, and to the penalty attached to the same, much curiosity and interest were excited to ascertain the precise terms of his penal propositions. In reply, then, to an inquiry of the Marquis of Hartington as to the course he intended to take to bring the little section of "Obstructives" to a sense of their duty, and to facilitate the progress of business, the Chancellor of the Exchequer replied that he was not able at that moment to give the exact terms of the two resolutions which he intended to submit to the House on the following evening (Friday), but he would state the general effect of them. The first would declare that when any member, after having been more than once declared to be out of order by the Speaker or the Chairman of Committees, as the case might be, in having wilfully disobeyed the authority of the Chair, the debate shall be at once suspended, and, on motion being made in the House that the peccant member shall not be heard during the remainder of the debate or the sitting of the Committee, such motion to be put after the member had been heard, without further discussion. The second resolution would be a restriction upon the right of members in Committee to make motions more than once—"That the Chairman report progress," or "leave the chair." The right hon. gentleman said he concurred with the noble Lord that it would be for the convenience of the House that the Government should not mix up with the discussion of these resolutions the motion relating to the conduct of Mr. Parnell. He therefore moved that the order for the adjourned debate on the language of Mr. Parnell be read and discharged. The order in question was thereupon read and discharged, amid the general cheers of the House. Apropos of the new scheme for retirement and promotion in the Army, Mr. Trevelyan gave notice that on going into Committee of Supply on the Supplementary Estimates he would move a resolution to the effect that it was not desirable to proceed with a question at that late period of the Session which would involve a considerable expense of at least £350,000 annually, and materially affect our future military system. A new writ was ordered for Great Grimsby, in the room of Mr. Chapman, deceased. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying to an interrogatory from Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, said that, after consultation with Lord Carnarvon, they felt it was desirable that there should be a full discussion on the Gibraltar Ordinances; and, if no opportunity could be given for such discussion, the Ordinances would not be put in operation until next Session. Mr. Butt having moved the second reading of the Dublin University Bill, the great object of which was to establish a Roman Catholic College within the University of Dublin, that measure was under discussion up to a late hour of the night.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Conference proper, at Bristol, began on Wednesday morning, the last of the preliminary committees having been held on the previous day. Nearly the whole morning was occupied with filling up vacancies in the Legal Hundred, and it was close upon one o'clock before the President was elected. The principal votes for the presidential chair were—the Rev. Samuel Coley, 39; Dr. Rigg, 162; Dr. Pope, 205. The election of the secretary of the Conference was next taken up, with the following results:—the Rev. Marmaduke Osborne, 31; Dr. Rigg, 51; Dr. Williams, 260. Dr. Pope then came forward to take the chair, and the ex-President handed him the only insignia of office—a bible about 200 years old—and hoped they would never have any other insignia than the Word of God. He assured Dr. Pope that he would be sustained by the sympathy and prayers of the Church. The Conference seal, he observed, bore the inscription, "What hath God wrought?" Dr. Pope then took the chair, and said it would be more in harmony with his feelings and most fitting for the occasion that they should proceed at once to the Conference prayer meeting, and he would reserve any further remarks he had to make.

The open session of the conference was held in the evening. The Conference Chapel was crowded to excess. Dr. Pope presided. The Rev. James Tobias, from Ireland, observed that Methodism in his country had a sphere of usefulness among the scattered Protestants in rural districts, whose case could not be met by the Church. The Rev. W. Curnock, president of the French Conference, gave a brief sketch of some parts of the work of Methodism in France. The Rev. Dr. Lowry, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) of the United States, said that in England there were found the highest form of civilisation and the purest form of evangelical religion, only excepting the United States. In England they might need an extension of the franchise, but in America they had some to spare. He believed that Methodism would die on both sides of the Atlantic if it ever ceased to be a holy and spiritual power. The Rev. William Kelyneck, from Australia, gave some account of Methodism in that country, and gave it as his opinion that education would one day be compulsory, secular, and free throughout the southern world, and that Churches would have to make the most of their Sunday schools. He also spoke of the progress of Christianity in Tonga and the Fiji Islands.

NEW BOOKS.

Two good, solid, substantial volumes, whether they be regarded from the point of view of avoirdupois weight or of literary weight, present themselves for public recognition, which they will, no doubt, receive without stint, under the title of Renaissance in Italy, by John Addington Symonds (Smith, Elder, and Co.), one of them having for its theme "the revival of learning," the other, "the fine arts." The two are themselves supplementary, or rather complementary, of the volume, published in 1875, which had for its subject "the Age of the Despots." The whole work, a tetralogy as it may be called, is to be completed by the publication of a fourth volume dedicated to "Italian literature." The volume devoted to the "revival of learning" commences with a chapter in which the characteristics belonging to "the men of the Renaissance" are discussed. Then follow six chapters in which "humanism," divided into four periods, is the subject of discourse. After this comes a chapter in which the "special causes for the practice of Latin versification in Italy" are expounded, and in which there is a learned dissertation upon "Latin poetry," with specimens, usually, if not always, translated into English. The ninth and concluding chapter is occupied with a "general survey," down to the "decay of learning in Italy," when "all that was virile in humanism fled beyond the Alps," and the "transference of intellectual supremacy from Italy to Germany was speedily accomplished." And here it may be well to let the author state for himself the sense he attaches to the somewhat vague term "humanism." According to him, "The essence of humanism consisted in a new and vital perception of the dignity of man as a rational being apart from theological determinations, and in the further perception that classic literature alone displayed human nature in the plenitude of intellectual and moral freedom. It was partly a reaction against ecclesiastical despotism, partly an attempt to find the point of unity for all that had been thought and done by man, within the mind restored to consciousness of its own sovereign faculty. Hence the single-hearted devotion to the literature of Greece and Rome that marks the whole Renaissance era. Hence the watchword of that age, the Littera Humaniora." And Petrarch he regards "as the first, and, in some respects, the greatest of the humanists." He shows how the impulse, communicated in the first instance, as he holds, by Petrarch, was "continued by Boccaccio and his immediate successors." He bids us watch "the enthusiasm for antiquity strike root in Florence, spread to Rome, and penetrate the Courts of Italy," whilst "one city after another receives the light and hands it on, until the whole cycle of study has been traversed, and the vigour of the nation is exhausted." He points out how "Florence discovers manuscripts, founds libraries, learns Greek, and leads the movements of the fifteenth century;" and how "Naples criticises, Rome translates, Mantua and Ferrara form a system of education, Venice commits the literature of the classics to the press," so that, "by the combined and successive activity of the chief Italian centres, not only is the culture of antiquity regained, it is also appropriated in all its branches, discussed and illustrated, placed beyond the reach of accident, and delivered over in its integrity to Europe." No more need be said to give an idea of the treat in store for any classical scholar who takes the volume in hand; but it is probable that the general reader will find more delight in the other volume, in which the author treats of "the fine arts;" for though in each case a special knowledge would undoubtedly be an aid towards thorough appreciation, it is not so absolutely necessary for adequate comprehension in the latter as in the former. The author, he it is observed, does not "pretend to retrace the history of the Italian arts, but rather to define their relation to the main movements of Renaissance culture;" and, with that object before his eyes, he has "tried to explain the dependence of the arts on mediæval Christianity at their commencement, their gradual emancipation from ecclesiastical control, and their final attainment of freedom at the moment when the classical revival culminated." And in this part of his work he was in a great measure emancipated from the necessity, which was in other parts inevitable, of depending far more upon reading than upon that personal observation which brings a sense of satisfaction, and which he has exercised so conscientiously that he can say: "I am not aware of having mentioned any important building, statue, or picture which I have not had the opportunity of studying." What he has written "about the monuments of Italian art has always been first noted face to face with the originals, and afterwards corrected, modified, or confirmed in the course of subsequent journeys to Italy." It is not improbable that the spirit of controversy will be aroused by the author's first chapter, although it cannot be denied that there is much reason in the arguments he advances, and that he urges his arguments with force and eloquence. He insists that painting, "the art in which the Italians among all the nations of the world stand unapproachably alone," was, far beyond sculpture or even architecture, "the art demanded by the modern intellect upon its emergence from the stillness of the Middle Ages." And then he proceeds to utter what some enthusiasts will very likely consider flat blasphemy against painting, asserting that painting, so far as it might in the direction of piety, "had to omit the very pith and kernel of Christianity as conceived by devout, uncompromising purists," inasmuch as the art "cannot free itself from sensuous associations." And, by way of illustration, he relates an anecdote showing "how difficult even the holiest-minded and most earnest painter found it to effect the proper junction between plastic beauty and pious feeling;" he tells how "Fra Bartolommeo, the disciple of Savonarola, painted a Sebastian in the cloister of St. Marco, where it remained until the Dominican confessors became aware, through the avowals of female penitents, that this picture was a stumbling-block and snare to souls." It is obvious, of course, to suggest that those "female penitents" were just as likely to have come with evil thoughts readily formed to the contemplation of the picture as to have had such thoughts awakened by the picture itself. However, this is no place for disputation; and readers will do well to peruse and ponder all that the author has to say upon the subject. The author devotes a chapter to architecture and a chapter to sculpture, and then four chapters are given to painting, the subject upon which he bestows his chief attention. Then comes a chapter containing a biographical notice of Michael Angelo, afterwards a chapter occupied with a biographical sketch of Benvenuto Cellini; and, lastly, a chapter headed "the Epigoni," in which some account is "taken of the legacy bequeathed to the next generation by the great masters," and in which the author explains, for the information of "those who have visited the picture-galleries of Italy, and have noticed how very large a number of the painters flourished after 1550," why he has "persistently spoken of the last half of the sixteenth century as a period of decadence." Among those painters one would fain include Andrea del Sarto, but, as he died in 1531, that is impossible. Whosoever has suffered from the repetition of his numerous Madonnas may be pardoned for wishing that he had never been born, and will, at any rate, assent heartily to the proposition that he "cannot take rank among the greatest Renaissance painters," and that "what he lacked was precisely the most precious gift—inspiration, depth of emotion, energy of thought." The Italians did well to dub him "the faultless painter;" for such an appellation generally implies insipidity. He aggravates the spectator, as Aristides aggravated the Athenian voter. The volume concludes with three appendices, one relating to "the pulpits of Pisa and Ravenna" and the origin of Niccolò Pisano; another to Michael Angelo's sonnets, of which several specimens have been selected and translated; and a third containing very useful "chronological tables of the principal artists mentioned" in the volume. From this volume no reader, whether acquainted with the classics or not, can fail to derive the greatest gratification, and most readers will derive instruction as well; whereas the other volume, from the nature of the case, will enlist the sympathies of those principally who are termed scholars. But in both volumes there is an abundance of intellectual pleasures collected by the cunning hand of a practised and eloquent writer, a learned and elegant scholar, a laborious and sympathetic observer, a keen and cultivated critic.

Unmistakable as was the favour bestowed upon "Roba di Roma," and great as the inclination will consequently be to fasten with avidity upon Castle St. Angelo and the Evil Eye, by William W. Story (Chapman and Hall)—a volume described as containing "additional chapters to 'Roba di Roma,'"—it would be well for expectant readers to learn exactly what is in store for them, lest they should do the author the injustice, and inflict upon themselves the disappointment, of having looked for more than he professes to offer them. The volume, in point of fact, consists of two distinct parts. The former, relating to the Castle of St. Angelo, is reprinted from Blackwood; and the latter, dealing with superstitions concerning the "evil eye," and having no more to do with the Castle of St. Angelo and not much more with Rome and the rest of Italy than with other haunts of credulity, save that modern Italy supplies the most handy instances of belief in "jetta tura," appears to have "formed originally a chapter in the first editions of 'Roba di Roma,'" and to have now been reproduced after a temporary suppression. As to this latter part, opinions will, no doubt, differ; many will consider, as the author himself suggests, that the subject is "unprofitable;" and as many more, if not a great many more, will find, as he found, that it arouses their "interest and curiosity." At any rate, nobody can deny that the author must have expended upon it a vast amount of time and labour, and that, if he has not exhausted it, he has investigated it with a patience, a research, and an erudition worthy, somebody may think, of a better cause. It is interesting to learn that the aged and benignant Pope Pius IX. is himself popularly believed to be endowed with the fatal gift of the "evil eye;" so that, according to the account of a certain Roman, "everything he blesses makes fiasco," and it was no "wonder the workmen at the column in the Piazza di Spagna refused to work the other day in raising it, unless the Pope stayed away." This will be good news for the hon. member for Peterborough, who must have been scandalised lately at the number of peoples, nations, and languages represented by the pilgrims in search of the Pope's blessing. As regards the other part of the volume, it runs a risk of being considered a trifle dry; but there is certainly no little information, of no little interest—historical, antiquarian, and general—to be acquired from it. Indeed, it is a most erudite and thorough account of the Castle of St. Angelo from the time when it was known as the Mausoleum of Hadrian to the date of 1825, when "important excavations were made in the interior of the Castle, which led to very interesting discoveries," after which "little more remains to be said of the Castle, but that it is still a prison, and still a fortress, and well worthy to be seen from within as well as from without." The memorable incidents which took place, and the horrors which were perpetrated within, no mortal tongue or mortal pen can fully tell; but the glories which can still be seen from without are eloquently enumerated by Mr. Story. All that is to be seen is historic and interesting, if not glorious, from the purple mountains in the distance to the "piazza over the bridge at your feet," where "the beautiful Beatrice Cenci was executed." Be it added that there are nine illustrations—Castle St. Angelo, the Mole of Hadrian, Rome from the Villa Corsini, the Portico of Octavia, the house of Rienzi, basalt lions at the foot of the Capitol, the statues of St. Peter and St. Paul, a portrait of Beatrice Cenci, and the Forum.

Under the title of A Year's Housekeeping in South Africa, by Lady Barker (Macmillan and Co.), the reader will find a very agreeable collection of letters, written with so much sprightliness, grace, and vivacity as to confirm the belief generally held that, in the epistolary style, women easily carry off the palm. Perhaps the matter is less admirable than the manner—that is to say, the writer's experiences appear to have been of such a kind, and acquired under such circumstances, that her account, though it will amply satisfy the requirements of the searcher after entertainment, will be of little or no use to anybody who has an eye to business, and who looks wistfully towards South Africa as a place where it might be advisable to settle with a view of wringing a livelihood and something more than a bare livelihood from the recesses of the earth or from any other source. The writer certainly kept house, for a year or so, in Maritzburg or the neighbourhood, and she has certainly recorded the tale of her fortunes with much detail and in the most charming fashion; but it is evident that her means, though she may consider them small, and her position, though it may not be very exalted, enabled her to live in a very different style from that which would have to be adopted by the ordinary settler or visitor, and that, though she may consider herself to have roughed it, her roughing differed from the real thing almost as much as to keep a stall at a fancy fair differs from standing behind a counter, or the encampment of volunteers at Wimbledon from an encampment of the troops on the Danube. She had, it is plain to see, leisure, opportunities, status; she could afford to treat Langalibalele and other chieftains as curiosities, and she could visit them, under worshipful escort and with good introductions, as one would visit the animals at the Zoological Society's Gardens. That she regarded the whole sojourn about which she has written as a mere piece of fun, as a sort of playing at house-keeping and residence in South Africa, is apparent from the nine illustrations, in which the spirit of caricature is conspicuous. And that spirit, to a considerable extent, pervades the text. The writer, in fact, belongs to the laughing school of philosophy, and clearly tries to show the ludicrous side of everything, or to put everything in a ludicrous light. Such writers amuse us, but seldom instruct us. In this case, however, the writer manages to convey more information than was perhaps to be expected; and, on the whole, she does not draw such a picture as would be likely to send anybody in a hurry, save for curiosity's sake and the delights of roaming, to the regions of "fair Natal." How wildly she can talk upon some subjects is proved by the very last sentence of her book:—"Spring is always lovely everywhere, but nowhere is it lovelier than in fair Natal." An Englishwoman ought surely to know of one country in which Spring, when there is any, is about the most diabolical of all seasons nowadays, though it was not always so. She tells, moreover, of a dead lion so heavy "that it took two strong Kafirs to lift one of its ponderous fore-feet a few inches from the ground;" a statement at which, as it is only made on hearsay and not on her own authority, it may be permissible to express wonder, if not incredulity. For ladies the book is eminently adapted, inasmuch as the effects of climate upon dress come in for a considerable share of attention, and inasmuch as it is hardly too strong to say that the foremost place in the pages is occupied by a baby; but readers of both sexes will only have their own unhappy dispositions to blame if they fail to derive gratification from the volume.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, BROAD SANCTUARY.

(To the Editor.)

Your kind notice, some months since, of a public appeal by the Duke of Westminster, on behalf of an undertaking then begun, for the thorough reparation and structural improvement, for sanitary purposes, of this hospital, elicited some portion of the prompt liberality towards that object which I now entreat the privilege of acknowledging through the same influential medium—namely, subscriptions amounting to £3400; more than a fourth of the total amount required. Will you permit me to state that the whole cost of the work (£12,000) must be paid on its completion, in October next; and that, other sources failing, the house committee must necessarily have recourse, for that purpose, to the small funded property of the hospital, which forms a portion of its annual income? This contingency will, I trust, be averted by the kind consideration of the public. A medical charity founded in 1719, which initiated the voluntary principle of hospital support in this country, and which is still almost entirely dependent upon it—which has an excellent medical school and every remedial and beneficent adjunct for the most efficient hospital administration in all its phases—will not, I trust, ask in vain for the means of providing and maintaining a most beneficial extension of its powers of usefulness. I should wish to add that her Majesty the Queen, who since 1838 has been a most liberal annual subscriber to the institution, has graciously aided this undertaking likewise for the public advantage, and that some of the principal City companies have generously responded to the president's appeal. Thanking you, on behalf of the authorities, for your own spontaneous assistance, I am, Sir, yours faithfully, P. P. BOUVIER, Treasurer.

The annual meeting of the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation was held at the offices of the corporation, Southampton-street, Strand, on Tuesday. The chair was occupied by the Ven. Archdeacon Hessey. Dr. Pigott read the report, which stated that the income of the corporation during the past year had been £6072; and 279 cases had been relieved with grants ranging from 45 to £25. The adoption of the report was moved by the chairman, the Archdeacon of Middlesex, and seconded by Bishop Claughton, the Archdeacon of London.

The annual show of the Highland and Agricultural Society was opened on Tuesday, in the West Meadows, Edinburgh. The exhibition is one of the most successful ever held. The entries for the different classes of stock numbered 339 cattle, 342 horses, and 305 sheep. The principal prize for aged shorthorn bulls went to Mr. K. H. Brown, Northumberland, whose bull was preferred to that of Mr. W. Linton, of York, which was placed first at the Royal Agricultural Show at Liverpool, but here only obtained a commended ticket. There were 1250 entries of implements. The premiums offered amount to £2714, this being the highest sum ever offered by the society.

THE STATUE OF KING ALFRED.

The interesting ceremony performed at Wantage by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Princess, was described in our last. The marble statue of King Alfred, presented to his native town by Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, who entertained their Royal Highnesses at Lockinge House, is now shown in our illustration. It is the work of a sculptor of illustrious rank and considerable acknowledged talent, Count Gleichen, otherwise styled Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, nephew to her Majesty Queen Victoria. The statue is generally admired for its chaste simplicity and its majestic, yet calm, aspect. The figure is nine feet high, based on a massive plinth eight feet in height. The King wears a close cap-shaped helmet, a short coat of mail, and half-hose bandaged with strips of leather. He carries a battle-axe in one hand, and in the other a roll of parchment, which, presumably, is the code of laws which he gave to his subjects. The work, as a whole, is one on which the sculptor, the donor, and the town of Wantage may fairly be congratulated.

A correspondent supplies the following pedigree to show how both the Prince and Princess of Wales are lineally descended from the ancient Wessex Kings (the names of their ancestors who have actually reigned are printed in italics):—

Albert Edward, son of Queen Victoria, daughter of Edward, Duke of Kent, son of George III., son of Frederic Louis, Prince of Wales, son of George II.

Alexandra, daughter of Christian IX., King of Denmark, son of Louisa, Duchesse of Glucksburg, daughter of Louisa, Landgravine of Hesse-Cassel, daughter of Louisa, Queen of Denmark, daughter of George II.

George II., the common ancestor of both their Royal Highnesses, was son of George I., son of Sophia, Electress of Hanover, daughter of Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia; who was daughter of James I., son of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, daughter of James V., King of Scotland, son of James IV., King of Scotland; whose Queen, Margaret, was daughter of Henry VII., son of Margaret Tudor, Countess of Richmond; she was daughter of John, Duke of Somerset, son of Margaret, Countess of Kent, daughter of John, Earl of Somerset, son of John of Gaunt, son of Edward III., son of Edward II., son of Edward I., son of Henry III., son of John, son of Henry II.; that King was son of Matilda, "the Atheling," Countess of Anjou, daughter of Henry I.; whose Queen, Matilda, "the Atheling," was daughter of Malcolm III.,

STATUE OF KING ALFRED THE GREAT, AT WANTAGE, BY COUNT GLEICHEN.

King of Scotland; and his Queen, Margaret (sister of Edgar Atheling, the last Saxon Prince and heir to the throne of England), was daughter of Edward, son of Edmund Ironside, son of Ethelred the Unready, son of Edgar, son of Edmund, son of Edward the Elder, son of Alfred the Great, son of Ethelwolf, son of Egbert (descendant of Cerdic), the Egbert who, dissolving the Heptarchy, became first King of England, in the year 827. Cerdic was King of Wessex from the Saxon conquest of Great Britain, at the end of the fifth century.

HOME HOSPITALS FOR THE WELL-TO-DO.

A meeting of the committee recently appointed to consider the scheme for the promotion of home hospitals for the well-to-do was held at the Mansion House yesterday week, under the presidency of the Duke of Northumberland. There were present Sir Francis Hicks, Mr. George Stanley, Dr. Quain; Mr. Albert G. Sandeman, and Mr. Clifford Wigram, directors of the Bank of England, and Mr. H. C. Burdett. It was resolved to establish an association to provide homes which should be self-supporting for the treatment and cure of diseases, as in hospitals, by skilled nursing, rest, and regulated diet, &c., with the comforts of home, for the benefit of persons who could afford to pay in various degree for such advantages. It was stated that upwards of 200 of the best known members of the medical profession and others had testified to the necessity of such a step in a population like that of London, including millions of people above the class for whom charitable accommodation could be properly found available in hospitals, but whose homes or lodgings were incapable of affording to them the comforts and special appliances, the skilled nursing, and regular attention which are necessary in cases of sickness. To supply that want it had been decided to establish homes for invalids, at which all charges should be fixed at such a rate as should cover the expenses incurred. In order to establish the first homes successfully it was necessary to provide sufficient funds to meet the primary outlay for buildings, fittings, furniture, &c. For that purpose the committee decided to make an appeal to the public for funds—say £20,000. They proposed that every contributor of fifty guineas and upwards should be regarded as a governor of the association with the following privileges—eligibility to serve on the committee of management, priority of admission to the homes, and power to nominate patients. Other donors would have privileges equal to the amount of their donation.

With some provisos, the terms of the arrangement were agreed to. At a meeting of the 1854 bondholders, the scheme of the Porte's commissioners met, in the main, with the assent of those present.

Lord Hartington was on Wednesday evening presented with the honorary freedom of the Fishmongers' Company, and, with Earl Granville, Earl Spencer, Mr. Lowe, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Stansfeld, and most of the prominent members of the Liberal party, was afterwards entertained at a banquet in the hall of that corporation. The noble Lord, in responding to the toast of his health, pointed out that the Opposition, by the course which they had pursued in Parliament, had forced upon the Government not only a strict but a calm neutrality in respect of the war between Russia and Turkey.

The annual conference of representatives of working men's clubs and institutes was held last Saturday at the house of the Society of Arts, Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., presiding. Some valuable papers were read, offering suggestions for increasing the usefulness of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, and discussing plans for improving the character of workmen's clubs and raising funds for their establishment; and after each discussion Mr. Stansfeld gave a practical address on the points at issue. At the close of a long sitting the delegates adjourned to the St. James's and Soho Club, where the Union prizes were presented.

A fair number of spectators assembled on the 19th inst. on the beautifully kept ground of the All-England Club, Wimbledon, to witness the final contest between Messrs. Spencer Gore and W. Marshall for the lawn-tennis championship. All three sets were won by Mr. Gore, who therefore becomes lawn-tennis champion for 1877, and wins the £12 12s. gold prize, and holds the silver challenge cup, value £26 5s. The second and third prizes were then played for by Messrs. W. Marshall and C. G. Heathcote (best of three sets by agreement). Mr. Marshall won two sets to love, and therefore takes the silver prize, value £12 12s. Mr. Heathcote takes the third prize, value £3 3s.

A monthly general meeting of the Zoological Society was held on Thursday week at the society's house in Hanover-square—Professor Flower, F.R.S., V.P., in the chair. Amongst the additions to the society's menagerie during the month of June were specially noticed a white-cheeked gibbon, presented by Mr. W. H. Newman, H.B.M. Consul, Siam, Bangkok, and brought to this country under the care of Mr. A. B. Houghton in the steam-ship Agamemnon; a Tibetan partridge, presented by M. J. M. Cornely, of Tours, C.M.Z.S.; a young male hippopotamus, acquired by purchase; a fine example of the black variety of the common leopard from Lahore, Malay Peninsula, presented by Sir Harry St. George Ord, Bart., C.B., F.Z.S.; and twenty common boa constrictors, produced alive by one of the boas in the society's gardens. This was the first occasion on which this serpent has bred in the gardens.

There were 2415 births and 1438 deaths registered in London last week. The deaths referred to diarrhoea, which in the seven previous weeks had steadily increased from 13 to 169, further rose to 173 last week, which were, however, 116 below the corrected average weekly number. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 144 and 159 in the two preceding weeks, further rose to 181 last week, and exceeded the corrected average by 35. The fatal cases of smallpox, which had been 23 and 32 in the two preceding weeks, further rose last week to 35. There were 42 deaths from measles, 19 from scarlet fever, 6 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, and 21 from different forms of fever. The mean temperature was 59.1 deg. and 3.4 deg. below the average. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 37.8 hours out of the 112 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

An influential deputation, including the Mayors of the chief provincial towns of England, waited yesterday week upon the Prince of Wales, as chairman of the Royal Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1881, and urged that a portion of the surplus sum from that exhibition should be applied to the promotion of science and art in the provinces. They were adverse to the scheme of scholarships for provincial towns, proposed by the Commissioners, and asked that such assistance as could be afforded to them should be given for the erection and furnishing of museums. His Royal Highness, in reply, promised that the views of the deputation should be carefully considered by the Royal Commissioners. Lord Granville pointed out the grounds that existed in favour of establishing a central school of science and art in the metropolis, with its vast population, which had given one half the guarantee fund for the exhibition; but at the same time, he said, the special committee, of which he was the chairman, would carefully consider the request of the deputation. The deputation was introduced by Mr. Chamberlain, M.P.

The annual meeting of costermongers, promoted by the Golden-lane Mission, took place on Tuesday evening in Foresters' Hall. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided. It appeared from the report that the burial club numbers 150 members, and has a balance in bank of £271. The Friends of Labour Club number one hundred members, each holding a £1 share. The Share Barrow Club has made advances to the amount of £57; and in the savings bank the number of deposits during 1876 has been 2326, and their amount £157. The remaining clubs affiliated with the institution were in an equally satisfactory condition. Previous to the meeting a show of donkeys was held in the open space adjoining the hall, and here Lord Shaftesbury, assisted by Lady Ethel Ashley, Mr. L. Ashley, and Mr. Athol Chichester, distributed the prizes. Hymns were then sung and several addresses were delivered, amongst others a very humorous one by a costermonger named Wilkins, who was loudly cheered. Colonel Henderson, Chief Commissioner of Police, testified to the general good conduct of the costermongers, and expressed his satisfaction that the vexed question of Sunday trading was being gradually and amicably settled. Mrs. Griffin, on the part of the women of Golden-lane and its neighbourhood, thanked Lady Edith Ashley for the interests he took in their welfare, and presented her Ladyship with a timepiece.

A meeting was held on Wednesday evening at the Society of Arts, under the presidency of Colonel Lloyd-Lindsay, for the purpose of organising arrangements for an evening class to be formed under the direction of a Sergeant-Instructor of the Army Hospital Corps, to be trained in field surgery as practised at Aldershot; the class to consist of volunteer medical officers, who would each qualify himself to instruct a certain number of men in his regiment in the duty of attending to the sick and wounded in the field. Several medical officers of volunteer corps have already given in their adhesion to the movement. The secretary, Mr. Maclure, read a letter from Sir W. Muir, D.G., Army Medical Department, giving various suggestions as to the proper mode of carrying out the project; and also one from Captain St. John Mildmay, Aide-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief, intimating the approval of his Royal Highness of its principle, provided the question of expense could be met. Miss Nightingale, he added, offered to subscribe £5 in support of the necessary funds. Major Duncan, on the part of the Order of St. John, tendered all the ambulances and other appliances of that society for the purposes of the new organisation, but suggested that the volunteer bearers should be trained to give their assistance in every form of accident as well as those of war. The chairman gave his entire approval to the plan and objects of the proposed society. After some discussion, the secretary announced a list of subscriptions, including five guineas from the chairman; and Major Duncan proposed a resolution proposing to request the Secretary for War to order an army medical officer and hospital sergeant to remain in London to instruct, in case the Volunteer Bearers Association should be able to mature its arrangements. Dr. Day seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

AID TO THE SICK AND WOUNDED IN THE WAR.

The Stafford House committee for the relief of sick and wounded Turkish soldiers is distributing with all possible rapidity the funds at its disposal. At the meeting yesterday week of the full committee it was determined to send out four more surgeons, in addition to the five who have arrived, fully equipped. Besides these Mr. Kennett is superintending the distribution of appliances and the establishment of hospitals, of which three are in working order under other doctors at Schumla, Varna, and Rustchuk. Mr. Pratt, of Royston Hall, Norfolk, has volunteered to proceed to the East as assistant commissioner, and will take out the next supply of stores. Lord Blantyre has generously sent out a number of medical men at his own expense, and altogether no fewer than twenty-three English surgeons of proved capacity will represent in a practical form the assistance which the good feeling of Englishmen tenders in mitigation of the horrors of war. Subscriptions continue to flow in and are urgently needed. At the meeting of the committee on Wednesday further subscriptions were announced to the extent of £1400, including one anonymous donation of £1000. The Duke of Sutherland has addressed a letter to the secretaries of the trades societies asking them to afford their powerful aid to the Stafford House Committee in its endeavours to alleviate the sufferings of the sick and wounded Turkish soldiers. He states "it is a question entirely of sympathy with men who are suffering from no fault of their own, but who have been taken from their homes to repel an invasion of their country, begun at the very moment when their rulers have adopted and are striving to carry out a liberal Constitution."

A committee of ladies has been formed at Constantinople for preparing bandages, sheets, and other necessities urgently required for the Turkish sick and wounded. They are independent of any society, and are ready to give the benefit of their work to any persons who may be at the seat of war, and can make proper use of the articles they are prepared to send. In this way a great deal of good can be done with comparatively small means, as the ladies forming the committee give their own work and that of their friends to make what is necessary. They have already sent sheets and pillow-cases for 300 beds to Batoum; lint, bandages, &c., to Erzeroum; and are about to send off mattresses and other necessities to Varna. All these articles have been made up by themselves, and have been forwarded to English surgeons employed in the Turkish hospitals. The president of the committee is Mrs. Layard, and among its members are the Princess Reuss (the German Ambassador) and Madame d'Ehrenhoff, the wife of the Swedish Minister. Contributions may be sent to Messrs. Henry Allix Hanson, Great Winchester-street, E.C., for the Ladies' Committee in Aid of the Sick and Wounded.

The following is an extract from a letter of an English officer employed at the seat of war in Asia Minor, dated Erzeroum, June 28, 1877:—"I have telegraphed to Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay for help for the sick and wounded here (Erzeroum). There are 1300 wounded here already; and in a few days' time we shall have 2500 wounded at least, and there are also 1000 sick (all Turkish soldiers), and only fourteen so-called doctors and surgeons in the whole place, of whom not more than three or four are competent to perform surgical operations. Many men were here yesterday whose wounds, received on June 16, were not dressed until arrival here (ten or twelve days' interval), and that by some American missionaries, who are now hard at work in the hospitals, and who gave me yesterday a shocking account of the state of the wounds they had examined. If you or your friends have a few pounds to spare, they could not be better employed than in aid of the sick and wounded in Asia Minor. The Turkish soldiers have been behaving splendidly, and they deserve all the help and sympathy they can get."

The Commissioners of Education in Ireland report that, in reference to the scholarships founded by them in Trinity College in connection with the Royal Schools, they have made certain alterations as to their pecuniary value, and also in the course for the competitive examination preliminary to obtaining them. The Commissioners add that the primary schools established for the benefit of the children of their tenantry continue to be very largely attended.

SKETCHES OF THE WAR, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS.

FLIGHT FROM BUSTCHUK: AN OLD TURK AND HIS HAREM WAITING FOR THE TRAIN.

HIRSOVA, ON THE DANUBE.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Gustave Doré has come and gone—has received our welcome and bidden us farewell in his usual "lightning express" way. He was at Lady Holland's garden party on Saturday; and on Monday he visited Stoke Pogis to see the churchyard which, it is said, suggested to the poet Gray the composition of the Elegy, and, as was remarked by the anonymous but gifted author of the advertisement setting forth that Pope's villa was for sale, speaking of the grotto in which the poet is reputed to have written the "Universal Prayer," "it is probable that he may have done so." Gustave Doré intends, I am told, to illustrate the "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" on the same grandiose scale as that in which he has embellished Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner." Meanwhile, the Briarean painter is hard at work on his pictures for the Paris Exhibition of 1878; and his "leisure" is occupied by the completion of the wood drawings for a sumptuous edition of Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso," to be published next season by Messrs. Hachette. I have seen some of the drawings on the wood, and others which have been engraved, and they are really marvels of force and fancy.

Touching Gray's immortal poem, has it been noticed once, or twice, or five hundred times, or has it been pretty well forgotten, that the first stanza of the Elegy is as close a paraphrase, or rather as close an imitation, of the opening of the second canto of the "Inferno" as the exordium to the Fairy Queen is an imitation, or rather a translation, of the first four lines (and usually suppressed as apocryphal) of the Æneid? Ille ego qui quondam, &c. Here is Gray:—

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea,
The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Here is Dante:—

Lo giorno se n'andava, e l'aer bruno
Toglieva gli animali che sono in terra
Dalle fatiche loro; ed io sol uno
M'apparecchiava a sostenere la guerra.

In the late Prebendary Ford's translation (a very admirable one), London, 1875—

The day was parting, and the dusky eve
Released the animals from toil and care;
When I forlorn, with no such sweet reprieve,
Was arming me, the double fight to bear.

It is curious that the commentators on the Elegy, overlooking (so far as I can gather from the commentators) the coincidence I have pointed out, have accused Gray of borrowing the first line from a passage in the "Purgatorio" beginning "Squilla di lontano."

The English language is in danger. On Tuesday, in the House of Lords, the Earl of Harrowby moved for copies of a warrant signed by the Master of the Rolls, March 8, 1856, for sending to the Stationery Office certain Admiralty records to be "pulped." In vain do I dig and delve in my dictionaries for the verb active "to pulp;" but I am helped in the endeavour to comprehend the mysterious announcement by reading in an American paper that the Treasury Department at Washington had invited tenders for the purchase of some hundreds of tons of pulp, the product of macerated greenbacks and other public securities which had been called in. Fancy wearing a penny paper collar which had once been a thousand-dollar bill or a ten-thousand dollar "Five-Twenty!" "To what base uses!" &c. Was Mr. Pigott, I wonder, expected to have a technical knowledge of "pulping" when he was appointed Comptroller of the Stationery Office?

To my mind, morally certain as I am that were I to offer myself for examination for the post of a tide-waiter I should be plucked, a great deal too much is required from candidates for public employment in the way of scholastic and technical knowledge. Postulants for commissions in the Line are asked to fit all the Scriptural characters mentioned in "Absalom and Achitophel" with their proper political personalities; while aspirants for the Civil Service are expected to give the precise etymology of every word in the prologue to the "Canterbury Tales." Ah! it was different in the good old times, the rare old times when a candidate for a berth in Somerset House, being asked by the Chief of the Department what were his qualifications, replied that he combined "the wildest humour with the most passionate invective." And he got the berth.

I copy the following, simply because it is curious, from that budget of curiosities, the "Private Correspondence of Thomas Raikes, Esq., with the Duke of Wellington and other distinguished Contemporaries." The letter is addressed by the Duke to Mr. Raikes, in Paris:—

My dear Sir,
I am afraid that Count Mastuscevic is mistaken, and that the Emperor will find his fleet relieved off Sebastopol. Where is Old England, with all her interests in the Levant and in Asia, in all this? Ever yours most faithfully,
WELLINGTON.

The question so pithily put forty-four years since by the victor of Waterloo is being reiterated, with somewhat embarrassing pertinacity, just now. The precise mistake made by Count Mastuscevic I cannot well make out; but he seems to have been a gentleman of very strong opinions, and a prophet to boot. I find him writing from Belvoir Castle to Raikes in 1832:—"Things look more and more gloomy in France. They are sure to have a blow up in a short time; and then they must cut their own throats: which will be a great blessing to Europe." A true philanthropist, Count Mastuscevic!

A handsome window in stained glass has just been put up in the church of East Bergholt as a memorial to John Constable, R.A., who was born in that parish, and did much of his admirable work on the banks of the "gently-flowing Stour." The artist loved "brimming" rivers and marshy pastures and plashing "back waters." "Gif me my omprerler, I am going to see Mr. Gonstable's bictures," old Henry Fuseli used to say when any new work appeared from the pencil of John Constable, the "rainiest" painter of his day. He was the Jupiter Pluvius of landscape art; and not Ruydael, not David Cox even, could put so much moisture in his clouds as Constable managed to infuse into his. Do you know his magnificent picture of Salisbury with the cathedral in the distance? Properly to appreciate its aqueous qualities you should be provided, not only with an umbrella, but likewise with a waterproof and goloshes.

Mem: I notice that the comic feuilletonistes of the Paris press have adopted a (to me) new term for an umbrella. They call it a "Robinson." The expression puzzled me at first; but ultimately I cried "Eureka," remembering Robinson Crusoe and his goatskin parasol.

The "Custom of Dunmow" has been duly celebrated this year, under the patronage of the veteran novelist to whom the modern revival of this ancient "whimsy" is really due. Twenty-two years have passed away since Mr. William Harrison Ainsworth sat as judge in a "fitch-of-bacon" case in the Town-hall of Dunmow; Mr. Robert Bell being counsel for the claimants, and Mr. Dudley Costello acting as Avvocato del

Diavolo, and conducting the examination in opposition. The claimants were the lively Chevalier de Chatelain, the translator into French of the "Merchant of Venice," and his wife—the lady being a countrywoman of our own. Another pair of candidates appeared in the person of a Mr. and Mrs. Barlow, of Chipping Ongar. The mixed jury of maidens and bachelors (what should they know of connubial felicity or the reverse?) having arrived at a verdict "in accordance with the evidence," the fitch was awarded; the happy quartet were duly carried in triumph, and there were very "high jinks" indeed in the Windmill Field, in the presence of some seven thousand spectators.

At the celebration of last week Mr. Saville, of Dunmow, was judge, and Mr. Harrison Ainsworth was only the tutelary genius of the solemnity. Robert Bell and Dudley Costello (was there ever such a prolific magazine-writer as D. C.?) are dead. There were but one couple of claimants to make oath and affirm, kneeling on the "sharp stones," that for three years their married lives had been marked by unbroken fidelity and affection. Then I read that the bacon was presented to them "amid the firing of cannon," and after that there was abundance of cheers and laughter, and brass bands—I have no doubt, of beer likewise, and all the rest of it. I am not much in love with the "Custom of Dunmow." Are you? In the French institution of the "Rosière" there is some sense; and the honours and rewards bestowed on "the best girl" of the village are a salutary incitement to good conduct, and help the fortunate maiden to that dowry which, be it ever so small, every French Beatrix must have ere she can hope to secure a Benedict. I fail to perceive similar usefulness in the gammon of bacon prize; and altogether the "custom," of which neither the local gentry nor the clergy approve, would be more honoured in the breach than in the observance thereof. The monks of Dunmow Priory, who, it is said, devised these silly saturnalia some time in the eleventh century, were doubtless the drollest of wags; but there are many mediæval jokes which have come to possess a very "ancient and fish-like smell," and will not bear resuscitation. CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.

The following is a list of pensions, making a total of £1200, granted during the year ended June 20, 1877, and charged upon the Civil List:—

Mrs. Mary Clifton Smith, in recognition of the services rendered to the cause of science and archaeology by her husband, the late Mr. George Smith, and in consideration of his discoveries in Mesopotamia, £150.

Mrs. Anastasia Lane, in recognition of the literary services of her husband, the late Mr. Edward William Lane, the eminent Oriental scholar, £100.

Mr. Thomas Edward, a Scottish naturalist, £50.

Mrs. Frances Mary Noble, in recognition of the services rendered to art by her husband, the late Mr. Matthew Noble, sculptor, £150.

Mr. Thomas Wilmshurst, in consideration of his services to art in connection with enamel painting and staining upon glass, £100.

Miss Mary Ann De Foe, Miss Jane Amelia De Foe, and Miss Sarah Frances De Foe, the lineal descendants of the author of "Robinson Crusoe," £75 each.

Miss Selina Henrietta Burgoyne, in addition to the pension of £75 a year granted in consideration of the distinguished military services of her late father, Field Marshal Sir John Burgoyne, £75.

Miss Mary Ann Parris, in recognition of the services rendered to art by her father, the late Mr. Edmund Thomas Parris, £100.

Mrs. Jemima Charlotte Bleek, in recognition of the literary services and labours of her husband, Dr. Bleek, late Keeper of the Grey Library at Cape Town, a distinguished linguist and African scholar, £100.

Miss Martha Charters Somerville, the daughter and biographer of Mary Somerville, in addition to the pension of £50 granted to her by warrant, dated Feb. 4, 1873, £50.

Mrs. Frances Sophia Rumsey, in consideration of the long and able services rendered to sanitary science by her late husband, Dr. Henry Wyldbore Rumsey, F.R.S., £100.

Lord Ronald Leveson-Gower has accepted the office of president of the Art Department of the Social Science Congress for the ensuing year, to be held at Aberdeen.

Much approbation was expressed on Saturday by the managers of the Metropolitan Asylum District who visited the Asylum for Imbecile Persons at Caterham.

Judgment was delivered in the Wreck Commissioner's Court on Saturday, after an inquiry extending over several weeks, upon the loss of the Great Queensland. The vessel, which was of 1793 tons burden, having on board thirty-three passengers, a crew of thirty-six men, a general cargo, and between thirty-three and thirty-four tons of gunpowder and other explosives, left Gravesend for Melbourne on Aug. 5 last. She was spoken on the 12th of the same month, and was never afterwards heard of, but portions of her wreck came ashore on the south coast of England. Mr. Rothery, the Commissioner, in delivering judgment, reviewed at great length the nature and stowage of the ship's cargo, and came to the conclusion that the loss of the ship with all on board was in all probability due to the spontaneous combustion of two tons of patent gunpowder. He also held that there had been negligence on the part of the owners in the stowage of the explosives, in shipping which in the manner they had done they had infringed the Thames Conservancy by-laws. The Commissioner pronounced no opinion as to the liability incurred by the various parties concerned, and no costs were given.

The annual congress of the Royal Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland has already been fixed to be held at Hereford, and the arrangements of proposed excursions have been made. The Hereford meeting will be held under the presidency of the Bishop of Hereford, and among the local patrons are Lord Bateman, Lord Lieutenant of the county and High Sheriff, the Marquis of Hartington, Earl Powis, Earl Beauchamp, the Earl of Bradford, Earl Ducie, and all the local M.P.s. Sir W. Guise is the president of the section of Antiquities; Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., of History; and Mr. Gambier Parry, of Architecture. On the afternoon of the opening day Sir Gilbert Scott will conduct the visitors round the cathedral, and give a historical description of the fabric. There will be excursions on every day of the Congress, with the exception of the opening day, to objects of archaeological and antiquarian interest in the surrounding district. These will include a considerable number of churches of antiquarian interest, including the minster at Leominster, and Ludlow church, Ludlow Castle, Kilpeck Castle, Ewyas Harold Castle, Goodrich Castle, Kentchester (Magna Castra), with a Roman road crossing Offins Dyke near, and Credenhill Camp will be visited, and it is proposed to wind up the meeting by devoting a day to an excursion to Tewkesbury to examine Tewkesbury Abbey, now in course of restoration.

ANTIQUARIAN DISCOVERY IN DENMARK.

The Copenhagen correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, writing on the 20th inst., says:—A most interesting discovery of antiquarian remains has just been made close to the town of Storeheddinge, in Zealand. About nine feet below the surface of the earth a tumulus was discovered, surrounded, as usual, with fifteen large stones raised on end and covered with other large stones, which when removed disclosed the interior of the tomb, which was about sixteen feet long and three feet wide. On the bottom was laid a broad piece of oaken plank, on which were found the remains of a woman, evidently buried in her clothes, the face turned towards the east, the left arm crossed over the chest, and the right arm stretched out by the side of the body. A large number of vessels of various kinds were placed round the head, the most remarkable being a cup of blue glass, surrounded by a richly-chased silver rim, representing the leaves of the vine, having an inscription in Greek characters which, translated, means "Farewell." Next may be mentioned another cup of red-coloured glass and a large vase of green glass, besides many pieces of other cups which had been crushed by one of the stones having fallen in. In the blue cup the ribs, and in the red cup other bones of different kinds of fishes were discovered. To the right of the head lay a gold coin which had evidently been used as an earring, dating from the reign of the Roman Emperor Probus, whose short reign lasted from about the year 276 to 282. The tomb consequently cannot date further back than from A.D. 276. A large and beautifully-embossed ring of gold inclosed the neck, and close to the right shoulder lay a thick golden pin, probably used to hold the upper garment together. On two fingers of the right hand were two massive rings of gold, the one spiral-formed, the other plain; while close to the waist one large and several smaller buckles of silver were discovered. A collection of bones of various animals lay close to the feet of the body, as well as a wooden basin ornamented with bronze handles, containing forty-two dice turned from bone, and apparently used for play. In a large Roman basin of bronze, which stood at the extreme end of the tomb, the bones of a small pig were found, other bones of the same animal being discovered in the surrounding earth, as well as the remains of human beings, possibly bones of slaves who had been sacrificed at the funeral. The discovery is here looked upon as being of the very highest antiquarian importance, it being, for instance, the first time that any object bearing a Greek inscription has been found in Scandinavia; while it adds another proof of the relations which so early existed between the North and the South, which were mostly carried on through the present Russian provinces, and which finally, in the eighth or ninth century, culminated in the creation of a special body-guard of the Emperor in Constantinople, consisting of the so-called "Varangians"—an institution which lasted nearly until the final overthrow of the Byzantine Empire by the Turks. The Government is going to institute further researches round the tomb, as many signs seem to indicate that this place in olden times has been a kind of regul burial-place.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN AUGUST.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

There is a Partial Eclipse of the Sun on the 9th, but it is invisible from Europe. It begins at 4h. 12m. a.m., Greenwich mean time, in north latitude 72 deg. 50 min. and west longitude 37 deg. 50 min. At the greatest phase of the eclipse nearly two thirds of the Sun's diameter will be obscured—viz., at 5h. 30m. a.m., Greenwich time—in north latitude 62 deg. 31 min., and west longitude 138 deg. 20 min. The eclipse ends at 6h. 48m. a.m., Greenwich time, in north latitude 35 deg. 48 min., and west longitude 179 deg.

SKETCH PLAN OF THE ROUTES OF THE RUSSIAN FORCES IN TURKEY.

THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE IN BULGARIA.

With reference to our Map of the routes which have been taken by the different Russian army corps for their advance through Bulgaria from the Danube to the Balkans, and over the Balkans into the plains of Roumelia, we would direct attention to the figures introduced at intervals along the lines of march. These denote in some instances which of the several army corps or divisions of the army, to be respectively distinguished by their proper numbers, have proceeded by each particular route through Wallachia and Moldavia; but their actual positions on the 26th inst., when the central division, to which belong the head-quarters of the Grand Duke Nicholas, crossed the Danube at Simnitsa, will be found more conspicuously marked. It will be observed that while the fourteenth army corps, forming the right wing of the entire military array, having crossed the Danube at Braila or Galatz, has moved southward in the Dobrukscha to Medjidieh and Kustendje, the twelfth and thirteenth army corps, with other forces, under the immediate direction of the Commander-in-Chief, has advanced from Sistova up the course of the Jantra to Tirnova, which was reached on the 6th inst.; and from which the vanguard of the eighth army corps has been thrown forward over the Balkan mountain range, by the Hainkoi and Shipka passes, descending on the Roumelian side into the Valley of the Tunja. It is now at Kazanlik and Eski Zagra, almost close upon the branch railway from Yamboly to Adrianople. The ninth army corps, in the mean time, has captured the fortress of Nikopol or Nicopolis, where a third bridge over the Danube will now be available, but it seems to have met with some resistance in advancing southward to Plevna. It is understood that two Russian army corps are to be occupied with the siege of Rustchuk, while those which have entered through the Dobrukscha will be employed in the siege of Silistria; and these Danubian fortresses will, altogether, engage the services of nearly 100,000 men, or more than half the Russian army in the field. The remaining portion of the Russian forces, which must now undertake the task as well of securing their positions and communications in Middle Bulgaria, as of gaining all the passes of the Balkans, and achieving the conquest of Roumelia to Adrianople, is not at all too strong for the purpose. Its left flank is constantly exposed to an attack from the Turkish army now sheltering itself behind the impregnable fortress of Shumla, which has ready communications with Varna, and thereby with the whole Turkish Empire by sea. At the same time there is a separate Turkish force, under Osman Pasha, hovering on the Russian right flank at Plevna, and capable of inflicting serious blows. The strategic position, therefore, of the Russian army in Bulgaria does not seem to be the most favourable. We will here reprint an extract from the late Sir John Burgoyne's commentary upon this subject, quoted by Colonel Evelyn Wood, Assistant-Quartermaster-General, in his lecture to the officers at Aldershot, just before the outbreak of the present war.

Sir John Burgoyne, writing in the spring of 1854, when, as he thought, the Turks would endeavour to hold in force the line of the Danube, which becomes more easy to pass as the summer draws on, remarked as follows:—

"To whatever extent they (the Russians) may threaten the two flanks or make partial attacks there, or whatever line they may determine to take for their subsequent advance, the real point where they will make their great effort to cross the Danube with their main forces may be expected to be in or about the centre. By this means the whole of the defensive line of the river will be cut in two, and, the Russians once firmly established on the right bank, the Turks must necessarily retire to Shumla and the Balkan; and it is to be hoped this will be effected before the detached corps on the flanks shall be too much compromised. A river of the extent of this portion of the Danube—that is, some hundreds of miles—forms no feature of defence to a country; it presents merely an obstacle which some portable bridges in a few hours obliterate. If there were any strong fortresses on the line of the enemy's route, they should be well garrisoned, and would be more particularly harassing to an invader if there were attached to them an equally strong tête-de-pont, so as to secure access to both banks. The best chance of defence on this part of the frontier would be by retaining a very slight hold on the river (except where there might be good fortresses), and by concentrating the army in the rear, ready to fall upon the first advance across it should circumstances afford a favourable opportunity, which is hardly to be expected.

"The first real defence, then, that it would appear could be prudently made would be on the Balkan passes; each of these, it is said, prevents very strong features that might, no doubt, be much improved by intrenchments and engineering work of different kinds. It is probable that the line of real attack on the Balkan would be more clearly indicated, or more easily ascertained, than that on the Danube, and against it the means and forces would naturally then be augmented. Still, a leading arrangement for defence would be good reserves in the rear, to support whatever part would be found to require it."

The Turks should, therefore, concentrate their army south of the Balkans, and, having retarded the advance of the Russians on the plain north of the mountains as much as possible, without incurring serious loss, should hold the passes at least long enough to enable the main body to concentrate on the real Russian advance. The Russians will naturally attempt to combine their forces for a simultaneous attack on the Turks, who should endeavour, from a central position, to retard one column as it emerges from the mountains, while they throw the bulk of their army on to the others. To a capable commander, with a mobile army, such a position, behind a difficult mountain chain, offers great advantages; but it remains to be seen whether the Turks will succeed in making use of it.

THE LITTLE BOAT THAT CROSSED THE ATLANTIC.

On Saturday evening, the little boat which had left America for England with only a man and a woman on board arrived at Penzance. We give an illustration of this wonderful little craft. She is called the New Bedford, after the town of New Bedford, Massachusetts, from which she hails. The New Bedford is a boat only twenty feet long, and her burden capacity is a little over a ton and a half. She carries two masts, one anchor, and a drogue. She is built of cedar, and is rigged as what is known as "a leg-of-mutton rigged schooner." The name of the owner is Captain Thomas Craps, aged thirty-five, who, with his wife, has bravely crossed the Atlantic in such a tiny craft. The voyage was commenced on May 28, when the vessel left New Bedford, but from stress of weather she had to put into Chatham, Massachusetts, where she stayed until June 2. Then the sails were again hoisted, and the little vessel left on her perilous voyage, with a fair wind. All went well for three days, the wind being S.W., and the sea calm. The wind then changed to south-east, and it came on foggy for four days, and continued often foggy up to the time when they reached the Grand Banks, seventeen days out. The drogue which they had brought with them was found to be of little use, as it was too light. Whilst off the Banks they saw a keg floating, which luckily they were able to secure. Captain Craps knocked off the iron hoops, and with some canvas made a new drogue, which answered admirably. It was the more needed, since at one part of the voyage they were obliged to lie to nearly three days in a gale of wind. After leaving the Banks, where they lay to in a gale fifteen hours, the weather improved, and they sailed on till June 21, when another gale was encountered. While lying to, the New Bedford spoke the steamer Batavia, from which assistance was offered. An offer was made to take them on board, which was bravely declined. After this incident they encountered a succession of gales. During the voyage, which took forty-nine days, the rudder broke, but happily there was a spare oar on board, which was used until the first could be repaired. The sea was running very high; and during all this time, even when lying down to rest, they had to lie on wet clothes—everything being wet on board. On one occasion the captain was seventy hours steering without relief, the weather being frightful; another time he was eighteen hours continuously attending to the drogue. Captain Craps says he could not have stood another fifteen days; indeed, he had not slept for seventy hours when he landed. His average of sleep whilst coming across was under four hours a day. Among the extraordinary things connected with this voyage is that it had to be run by dead reckoning, as the New Bedford carried no chronometer. Only on two occasions could they get their longitude. When speaking the two vessels, Captain Craps had intended to make for Falmouth; but the wind was against it. Captain and Mrs. Craps seem wonderfully well after the hardships they have undergone.

The Select Committee which has been inquiring into the constitution, duties, and working of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade recommends that it should be transferred from the Board of Works to the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis, with authority to act within the city of London when occasion requires.

The annual meeting of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers opened on Tuesday at Bristol. There was a large attendance. Mr. T. Hawkesley, C.E., in his opening address, said it was the duty of the Government to adopt such timely measures as would secure to us the paths of the ocean for our food inwards and our manufactures outwards. He deprecated the building of enormous and unwieldy floating castles, and advocated the construction of a fleet of swift, light, well-engined ships, equally capable of sailing or steaming. He thought the extreme action of some of the working classes the cause of England's trades going abroad. There was a conversation in the evening.

THE FIRE AT ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK.

The destruction by fire on the 20th ult. of the best part of the town of St. John, the capital of New Brunswick, has been, during several weeks past, a theme of regretful comment. A view of the city and harbour appeared in our Journal three weeks ago. We have received from a colonial correspondent, Mr. Forshaw Day, of Halifax, sketches of the ruins in Market-square and King-street, and those of the Victoria Hotel and several public buildings. The detailed accounts of this conflagration have borne out the first estimate of the magnitude of the disaster. The public buildings destroyed are more than five and twenty, including the Post Office, the City Building, the Custom House, and four banks. Hardly any of the business premises have been saved. The offices, plant, and stock of six newspapers have been swept away. Private houses have not suffered to so large an extent as public buildings; but it is calculated that nearly half the ordinary dwellings have been burnt down, and half the population of the town has been rendered homeless. The fire broke out at half-past two in the afternoon of that Wednesday, and raged uninterruptedly throughout that afternoon and night, and was not finally mastered till the evening of Thursday. We read exciting accounts of the rapidity with which the flames spread; how, sweeping from street to street, they fastened on one of the wharves, which they enveloped in a few moments; then caught the masts of ship after ship lying alongside, till they formed a bridge of fire over an arm of the water; how they sped along rows of wooden houses and overthrew them "as if felled by a hurricane;" how the sparks lodged in the steeples of the churches, which burnt downwards from the top without possibility of aid; how the fire occasionally caught the two sides of a street simultaneously, and then a fearful race was run between the competing flames, until both sides of the street were destroyed. And we can imagine how, as the flames spread, the frightened people poured in ever increasing numbers out into the streets; bedding, chairs, tables, and furniture of all kinds were dragged from the burning houses and piled in the squares and open spaces; merchants were past saving; bankers were endeavouring to rescue from the vaults and strong rooms of their doomed banks their boxes of specie and bundles of notes and bonds; while the saddest sight of all was found in the numbers of sick, aged, and infirm, who were hurried hither and thither by their anxious friends in the doubtful hope of finding a place of safety for them. It is difficult to imagine anything more terrible than the spectacle must have been during the night, with nearly half the population homeless and panic-stricken in the streets, and the fire still advancing and threatening to destroy the whole of the town. Happily, but few lives were lost; twenty seems to be the outside. But the loss of property was immense: it is estimated at 15,000,000 dols., of which hardly more than 5,000,000 dols. is covered by the various insurances. Many other cities of the Canadian Dominion, and of the United States, have raised large subscriptions for the relief of the destitute families. The London Mansion House Fund, for this benevolent object, amounts to £6250.

Our small Engraving is a plan of the southern parts of the city; and the portion destroyed by the fire is shown by a dark shading. The fire began at the north-west corner (upper left-hand corner of the Engraving) at York Point Slip, close to Mill-street. It spread over the wharves in that quarter, to the Market Slip, where it consumed much shipping, and the masts of the vessels carried the fire across the water to buildings on the south side. Water-street, Market-square, King-street, and Prince William-street were thus attacked, and were presently filled with devouring flames. A violent west wind drove the conflagration quite across that part of the city. In traversing Duke-street, past the Victoria Hotel, and in sweeping over Germain-street and Charlotte-street, it destroyed a vast amount of property. The conflagration finally stopped on the shore of Courtenay Bay. The following are amongst the public buildings burnt:—Post Office, Bank of New Brunswick, City Building, Custom House, Maritime Bank Building, in which are this bank and that of Montreal and Nova Scotia, School Trustees' office; Bank of Nova Scotia, new building; Academy of Music, in which was the Knights of Pythias' Hall; Victoria Hotel, Oddfellows' Hall, No. 1 Engine House; Orange Hall, King-street; Temperance Hall, King-street East; Dramatic Lyceum, Victoria School House, Temple of Honour Hall, Barnes's Hotel, Royal Hotel, St. John Hotel, Acadia Hotel, New Brunswick House, Bay-View Hotel, International Hotel, Wiggins's Orphan Asylum, and the Deaf and Dumb Institution. The churches burnt are Trinity, St. Andrew's, Methodist, on Germain-street; Baptist church, Germain-street; Christian church, Duke-street; St. James's Church, Leinster-street; Baptist church, the Centenary church, St. Philip's, Carmarthen-street Mission Methodist church, Pitt-street Mission church, St. David's Church, Reformed Presbyterian church, and Sheffield-street Mission House.

ST. MARY ALDERMARY CHURCH.

This church, which during more than sixteen months has been closed for repairs and renovation, was reopened on Tuesday, the 17th inst. The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs were present, and a large body of the clergy. The sermon was preached by Bishop Claughton to a crowded congregation. The original building was erected by Sir Henry Keeble, grocer, and Lord Mayor, between 1510 and 1516. A large portion of the church was destroyed in the Great Fire of London. It was afterwards rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren, being completed in 1682, at the expense of Henry Rogers. The general character of the building, as then restored, followed that of the former structure. At the recent union of the benefices of St. Antholin and St. John the Baptist, Walbrook, with those of St. Mary Aldermary and St. Thomas the Apostle, it was determined thoroughly to renovate the church, and to render it a more fitting place of Divine worship. Funds were obtained for this purpose, partly from the sale of St. Antholin's church and tower, and partly from the united parishes of St. Mary Aldermary and St. Thomas the Apostle. Extensive and various works have been executed in this church. They include a general repair of the external stonework, the reopening of the windows in the north aisle, which had been blocked up after the Fire of London, the removal of the gallery and old internal fittings, the erection of a new oak glazed screen across the church at the west end, and of a stone reredos, the gift of the senior churchwarden of St. Antholin; the repaving of the church with tiles, with marble steps to the chancel; and the reglazing of the windows, principally with painted glass, which was presented by City Companies, by Mr. Joseph, acting churchwarden of St. Antholin, and by other donors. The refixing of the monuments from the church of St. Antholin in the ground story of the tower, is also to be noticed. The whole of the works have been carried out from the designs and under the superintendence of the architect, Mr. Charles Innes, of Queen-street, City. Mr. Charles Fish, of Pimlico, was the contractor for the general work.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARY ALDERMARY, QUEEN VICTORIA-STREET, LATELY RESTORED.

THE LATE MR. J. C. MARSHMAN.

This gentleman, whose great learning and his zealous labours for the benefit of the native population of India during half a century have often been acknowledged, died some days ago at his residence in London, nearly eighty-three years of age.

Mr. John Clark Marshman was the son of Dr. Marshman, a well-known Baptist Missionary at Serampore, in Bengal. He was educated there, and was very early introduced to the business management of religious missionary agencies in India; but soon turned his attention to secular works of social improvement in that country, and became an active journalist. He established the first newspaper in the Bengalee language, and the Friend of India, which was the first English weekly paper in India. He compiled a history of Bengal, and at a later period wrote the history of British India. He was also the author of a series of useful law-books for the Indian public. He held, during ten years, the laborious post of official translator, but spent the whole of its salary, with £30,000 of his private fortune, or the profits of his literary and business undertakings, in building and maintaining a College for the higher education of the natives. In 1852 he came home to live in England, but continued his researches, and produced several historical and biographical works of standard value. He was a candidate for a seat in Parliament at several elections, but did not succeed in that object. The affairs of the East India Railway Company still afforded him useful occupation. The order of the Star of India was conferred upon Mr. Marshman by Lord Lawrence as a recognition of his service to our Eastern Empire.

Norfolk. It may be as well here to recapitulate other successes. The Elcho Challenge Shield, competed for by the representative teams of England, Scotland, and Ireland, was carried off by the eight Irishmen. The Englishmen won a National Challenge Trophy, for shooting at shorter ranges. In the match between members of the two Houses

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.

We give the portrait of the winner of the Queen's Prize, as stated in our last week's account of the National Rifle Association at Wimbledon. The prize is £250, with the gold medal of the Association. The winner this year is Private G. Jamieson, of the 15th Lancashire Rifle Volunteers, who registered the score of 70 points, four less than secured the prize of 1876. Mr. Jamieson had not before distinguished himself by extraordinary work in either of the other matches in which he competed; and this victory was only achieved after a severe struggle with another Scotch marksman who had been making notable shooting at Wimbledon. The little fishing village of Portgordon, on the coast of Banffshire, and on the estate of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, is the birthplace of Mr. Jamieson, and though he is a member of an English corps, his success may be considered as a triumph for Scotland; indeed, it was looked upon in that light by both the Scotch and English riflemen, who equally cheered him on his success. Mr. Jamieson, we read in a Scotch paper, joined a rifle corps as far back as 1861, the company whose uniform he first donned being the Fochabers, or 5th Elgin corps. Some time in the year 1862 he left his native village, and proceeded to Liverpool, where he has since been carrying on the work of a wright and cabinet-maker. He is to appearance a man of between forty and fifty, is thick set, and of a medium size, and speaks the Banffshire dialect. The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Byrne and Co., of Richmond. The champion marksman of this year went home to Liverpool on Monday, and was greeted by his comrades of the 15th Lancashire, and by a crowd of the townsfolk, with a great demonstration of popular favour.

The silver medal, with £60, for best shooting in the first stage of the competition for the Queen's Prize, was won by Corporal Betts, of the 1st of Parliament, for the Vizianagram Cup, the Lords were the victors. The Ashburton Shield, for the youth of the different public schools, was won by the eight of Cheltenham School. The Spencer Cup was awarded to Lamb, of the same school. The St. George's Vase and Dragon Cup were won by Mr. C. H. Hop, of the 8th Ayrshire. Sir Henry Hallford won the Whitworth prize. The Warwickshire Yeomanry obtained the Loyd-Lindsay prize for Mounted Riflemen; the Belgian Challenge Cup was taken by the first Notts' Rifles (Robin Hood's). The Duke of Cambridge's prize was won by Mr. Humphry, of the Cambridge University Corps. A sailor of H.M.S. Excellent, named Hampton, won the Army and Navy Challenge Cup, besides a prize for himself. Sergeant W. Paton, of the 1st Lanarkshire Corps, won the new challenge shield presented by the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association. This is a magnificent silver-gilt shield, wrought in high relief with the battles of Cæsar, the subject being the "Triumph of Rome." In the centre is a female figure emblematic of Canada; round the shield, let into the border, are medallions enamelled with gold, bearing the arms of the seven provinces of Canada. It has been presented by the Canadian volunteers to be annually shot for by the British volunteers, and was designed and manufactured by Messrs. Elkington and Co. We mentioned last week that Sergeant Paton had made the highest aggregate score in shooting for the first stage of the Queen's Prize and other competitions.

The proceedings on Wimbledon-common were closed on Saturday by the presentation of the prizes, without any review of volunteer troops. A guard of honour of the London Scottish was drawn up at the dais, where the prizes were handed to the successful competitors by the Duke of Cambridge. As Commander-in-Chief of the British Army, and as president of the National Rifle Association, the presence of his Royal Highness on this occasion was peculiarly appropriate, and the welcome he received from those present was unusually cordial. At the appointed hour, five o'clock, the presentation at once commenced without any preliminary ceremonies; and each winner as his name was called by Captain Mildmay, the secretary, stepped up to the dais to receive his prize. Those who had displayed any exceptional skill, or whose prizes were of particular importance, received a few words of compliment from his Royal Highness, and the usual hearty recognition from the crowd. An important feature in the proceedings was the presence of the Lord Chancellor, who in person, accompanied by Lord Wharmcliffe and Lord Waldegrave, appeared to receive the handsome silver flagons, which are now the reward of victory in the Lords and Commons' match, and which till next year will be held by the Lord Chancellor on behalf of the Upper House. At the conclusion of the ceremony his Royal Highness inspected the guard of honour, and then left the ground.

The 40th Middlesex, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Howard Vincent, were officially inspected last Saturday evening by Colonel Riche, in Gray's Inn-square.

The Secretary of State for War having sanctioned the attendance of several thousands of Volunteers from different parts of the kingdom at the Camp of Exercise now formed at Aldershot, it has been decided that the troops shall begin to arrive to-day (Saturday), the stay in camp being restricted to not less than eight or more than sixteen days. As has been customary now for some years, the provisional battalion instructed by the War Office to the command of Colonel Du Plat Taylor, Post Office Rifles, will be the first to put in an appearance, and it will be composed principally of his own corps, the 26th Middlesex (Customs and Docks) Rifles, the 21st Middlesex (Civil Service) Rifles, and a company of Lord Ranelagh's regiment, the South Middlesex, under the command of Captain Morse. This battalion will remain at Aldershot till Saturday, Aug. 4, on which day Colonel Vickers's (2nd London Rifles) provisional battalion, composed of detachments of his own and several other regiments, will arrive, and remain for eight days. Among the other metropolitan regiments sending detachments this year are the London Rifle Brigade, 39th Middlesex (Finsbury) Rifles, 40th Middlesex (Central London Rifle Rangers), 46th Middlesex (London and Westminster) Rifles, the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade, 10th Surrey (Bermondsey), &c. The Government defrays all the expenses of the volunteers while in camp, and, besides also paying the travelling expenses to and from it, makes an allowance to the regiment of ten shillings per man, independent of the grant for efficiency.

In April next year an examination of candidates for the Civil Service of India will be held in London. The examination will take place only in the following branches of knowledge:—English composition, 500 marks; history of England, including that of the laws and constitution, 500; English language and literature, 500; language, literature, and history of Greece, 750; Rome, 750; France, 375; Germany, 375; Italy, 375; mathematics (pure and mixed), 1250; natural science, that is (1) chemistry, including heat, (2) electricity and magnetism, (3) geology and mineralogy, (4) zoology, (5) botany, 1000—the total (1000) marks may be obtained by adequate proficiency in any two or more of the five branches of science included under this head—moral science, that is, logic, mental and moral philosophy, 500; Sanskrit language and literature, 500; Arabic language and literature, 500. Candidates are at liberty to name, before Feb. 1, 1878, any or all of these branches of knowledge. No subjects are obligatory.

A meeting was held at the Mansion House on Monday in furtherance of a building fund for the Metropolitan Free Hospital, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. His Lordship opened the proceedings by moving the adoption of the report, from which it appeared that a special committee, acting in obedience to the views of the public meeting held in November last, had considered the question of a new site for the Metropolitan Free Hospital, the present building having been taken by a railway company, and has obtained a valuable property in Half Moon-street, Bishopsgate, upon which it is proposed to build a hospital containing not less than one hundred beds, together with large accommodation for out-patients. A sum of £10,000 was already in hand, and the committee now appealed for a further £20,000 to enable them to complete this important work. His Lordship, having forcibly advocated the claims of the Metropolitan Free Hospital on the sympathy and support of the City of London, concluded by moving the adoption of the report. The motion was seconded by Cardinal Manning, who expressed his conviction that the present hospital accommodation of London is inadequate in the face of an annual mortality of 70,000. The hospitals are few and far between, being, however, supplemented by dispensaries, of which he is wholly in favour. He bore his testimony to the good which is effected by the Free Hospital, and hoped that the inhabitants of the greatest commercial city in the world would promote the building of the new hospital with their usual liberality. The resolution was carried unanimously, as were other resolutions, requesting the building committee to continue its labours, and pledging the meeting to subscribe to the fund.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

With the close of this establishment to-night (Saturday) the Italian Opera season of 1877 will come to an end.

The performances of the past (the final) week began on Monday with the benefit of Signor Tamberlik, who repeated his performance as Manrico, in "Il Trovatore," with the same effect as on a previous recent occasion. The cast included Madame Marie Roze as Leonora, Madame Trebelli as Azucena, and Signor Del Puente as the Count di Luna. On Tuesday Mdlle. Etelka Gerster appeared as Gilda, in "Rigoletto," for the first time here, and achieved another success by her brilliant vocalisation, particularly in the aria, "Caro nome" (encored), and in the duet with Rigoletto in the Duke's palace. The cast included Madame Trebelli as Maddalena, Signor Del Puente as Rigoletto, Signor Talbo as the Duke, &c.

For Wednesday "Les Huguenots" was announced, for the benefit of Madame Christine Nilsson, the cast including that artist as Valentina, and other features, as before. On Thursday "I Puritani" was to be repeated; and on Friday (yesterday) "Faust," the closing night being appropriated to the benefit of Mdlle. Gerster, who is to appear as Astriflamante, in "Il Flauto Magico."

It was on April 28 that Mr. Mapleson opened the Haymarket opera-house, the building which replaced the theatre that was destroyed by fire in December, 1867. For several years previous and up to that date Mr. Mapleson had carried on operatic performances in the old theatre—occupying, in the mean time (as need scarcely be said), Drury-Lane Theatre, with the exception of his two-years' coalition with Mr. Gye, at the Royal Italian opera-house.

In a retrospect of Mr. Mapleson's season, first mention is due to the serious hindrance to the plans of the lessee caused by the lamentable illness of Mdlle. Titiens. This great artist sang on the opening night as Norma, and afterwards as Leonora in "Il Trovatore," and as Lucrezia, all the time, as she had been for years, suffering from that internal malady which would long before have incapacitated anyone endowed with less resolute energy, enduring power, and goodwill than were possessed by her. Recent accounts report very favourably of Mdlle. Titiens's progress towards recovery, and it may now be hoped that she will, in time, be able to resume her professional career.

As we remarked in our notice of the opening night, it was a matter of great interest to find Mr. Mapleson located on the very ground he had formerly occupied for some years.

Absolute novelty has not been forthcoming, nor could this be expected—the promised production of "Armida" having been rendered impossible by the illness of Mdlle. Titiens, who alone could have realised the musical and dramatic requirements of such a character as that of the heroine of Gluck's opera. The revival of Cherubini's "Medea," too, was prevented by the same cause.

Madame Christine Nilsson, who made her debut during Mr. Mapleson's leasehold of the former theatre, in 1867, and has been a powerful attraction in the Drury-Lane performances, repeated several of her well-known representations—those of Margherita in "Faust," Violetta in "La Traviata," Lucia in "Lucia di Lammermoor," Desdemona in "Otello," Leonora in "Il Trovatore," Elsa in "Lohengrin," Donna Elvira in "Don Giovanni," and Valentina in "Les Huguenots."

Several new appearances have been made, that of Mdlle. Etelka Gerster having been especially successful. This excellent artist made her debut, on June 23, as Amina in "La Sonnambula," and in repetitions of that character, of Lucia, of Elvira in "I Puritani," and as Gilda in "Rigoletto;" she has established herself here as a prima donna of the first class. Mdlle. Chionni also appeared with much success, as did Mdlle. Carolina Salla, whom indisposition hindered from following up her career here. Signor Talbo was favourably received, as was Signor Carrion in secondary parts.

The first appearance at her Majesty's Theatre of Signor Tamberlik was a feature of the season, during which many other more or less well-known artists appeared, including Mesdames Trebelli, Marie Roze, and Lablache, Mdlles. Alwina Valleria, Mila Rodani, Elena Vuresi, Filomena, and Robiati; Signori Fancelli, Rinaldini, Grazi, Gillandi, Herr Wachtel, M. Faure, Signori Galassi, Rota, Del Puente, Brocolini, Foli, and Herr Rokitsansky, who have contributed to the general efficiency of the performances.

The excellence of the band, with M. Sainton as leading and solo violinist, has again been a special feature; the chorus having also been generally efficient—Sir Michael Costa's presence as conductor (as during Mr. Mapleson's Drury Lane seasons) having offered another link of association with the old Haymarket opera-house, where the eminent musical director was engaged for some years previous to the establishment of the Royal Italian opera-house, at which he officiated for a period. Mr. Willing's co-operation as organist has been serviceable on various occasions; Mr. Stirling's stage management having been worthy of his reputation; and the ballet department has been well sustained, with Madame Katie Lanner as principal dancer.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The distribution of prizes to the students took place on Saturday afternoon, in the concert-room of the institution, the presentations having been made by Madame Sainton-Dolby, who, in addressing the recipients, dwelt strongly on her pleasurable recollection of her own studies as a pupil of the Academy. Professor G. A. Macfarren also made an address, in which, among other things, he stated that the Academy had received a second gift of 100 guineas from the Goldsmiths' Company and 50 guineas from the Merchant Taylors' Company. Further, that Messrs. Broadwood had given 200 guineas; and among the list of donations was a gift of a bookcase, with an interesting collection of literary works of the best authors, for the use of the students, which had been given by Mr. Charles Mudie as a memorial to his brother, the late Mr. T. M. Mudie, who was one of the earliest students of the Royal Academy. The following is a list of the principal prizes:—

Lucas Silver Medal—For the composition of the first movement of a string quartet: Richard Harry Löhr. Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal—For the singing of pieces selected by the committee: James Sauvage. Sterndale Bennett Prize (purse of ten guineas)—For the playing of a composition by Professor Sir William Sterndale Bennett, selected by the committee: Nancy Evans. The Llewellyn Thomas Gold Medal—For declamatory English singing: Ellen Orridge. The Christine Nilsson Prizes (purses of twenty and of ten guineas)—For the first and second best singing respectively of pieces selected by the committee: Mary Davies, Marian Williams. Silver Medals—To those who have already received bronze medals: Singing—Amy Aylward, Kate Brand, Annie Butterworth, Ellen Orridge, Hannah Turner; piano-forte—Fanny Boswell, Jane Burrough, Fanny Ellis, Minnie Elwell, Alice Heathcote, Kate Lyons, Jessie Percival, and Isabel Thurgood; violin—Julia de Nolte.

In addition to these, certificates of merit and commendations were awarded to many of the students.

A short selection of music was performed during the day, conducted by Mr. Walter Macfarren.

We drew special attention last week to the benefit of Mr. Mapleson, which took place at the Crystal Palace on Saturday. The afternoon concert included familiar performances by Mesdames Nilsson, Trebelli, and Marie Roze; Mdlles. Valleria and Macvitz; Mr. Sims Reeves, Signori Tamberlik and Rota, M. Faure, Herr Rokitsansky, and Signor Foli. Herr Remenyi contributed a brilliant violin solo. Mr. Manns conducted. In the evening a compressed version of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was given in the opera theatre (conducted by Signor Li Calsi), Madame Trebelli having been the Rosina and Signor Del Puente the Figaro; the cast in other respects having also been similar to that of recent performances at Her Majesty's Theatre. A ballet and the fourth act of "Rigoletto" concluded the musical performances. There was a very large attendance, and the result, it is to be hoped, will be beneficial to the lessee of the Haymarket Opera.

The ten performances of operas in English by the Rose Hérès Opera Company begin next Saturday (Aug. 4) at the Crystal Palace, and are to be continued until Aug. 25 inclusive. The following is the repertoire from which selection will be made, those operas distinguished by an asterisk not having before been given at Sydenham:—

* Marriage of Figaro ...	Mozart.	* Bride of Venice ...	Benedict.
Don Giovanni ...	Mozart.	Lily of Killarney ...	Benedict.
* Don Pasquale ...	Donizetti.	Rose of Castile ...	Balfé.
Dinorah ...	Meyerbeer.	Bohemian Girl ...	Balfé.
La Sonnambula ...	Bellini.	Maritana ...	Wallace.
Robin Hood ...	Macfarren.	Il Trovatore ...	Verdi.
Lurline ...	Wallace.	* The Mountain Symp ...	Barnett.

The names of the artists engaged are as follow:—Mesdames Rose Hérès, Arabella Smyth, and Cave-Ashton; Misses Lucy Franklin, Bessie Palmer, and Florence St. John; MM. George Perren, Nordblom, Pearson, Frederick Wood, E. Cotte, M. de Solla, Parkinson, F. H. Celli, R. Temple, Lithgow James, Pyatt, Arthur Howell, and Signor Campobello. Mr. Sidney Naylor is to be the conductor.

Sir J. Benedict's opera, "The Lily of Killarney," was announced for performance at the Alexandra Palace on Thursday afternoon; with Madame Cave Ashton as Eily. The evening promenade concert was to include recitals from Weber's "Der Freischütz" and "Euryanthe."

It will be remembered that the works at the New National Opera House were suspended a few months ago, and have since that period been at a stand, after an expenditure of about £60,000 on the building so far as it has at present proceeded. The Times, however, understands that the works will be actively resumed in the course of next week, and that, in accordance with an undertaking entered into by Mr. Mapleson and the proprietors with the Metropolitan Board of Works, the building will be covered in and internally finished by Lady Day next.

THEATRES.

The want of novelty at the few houses which yet remain open is supplied with certain attempts at private speculation, which it is hoped by the parties interested may succeed in attracting some casual attention, in the absence of regular theatrical business. Mr. Ryder has introduced at the Globe a pupil to notice in the part of Portia. The lady's name is Miss Louise Denman, and she manifests so much ability that she merits public encouragement. At present she is crude and hasty in her delivery, but she has undoubtedly a degree of enthusiasm which is of the best promise. We had the satisfaction of seeing Mr. Ryder in Shylock on the occasion, and are happy to characterise it as a powerful effort.

We are glad to find that Miss Glyn's experiment of giving readings at her residence, 13, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, has been fairly responded to. That first-class Shakespearean artist, male and female, should fail to find a fitting stage for the exhibition of their talents, is one of the faults of the time that need correction. Much as Miss Glyn's readings may be admired, her acting of the characters would be still more satisfactory. We all remember her performance of Cleopatra, a part of transcendent difficulty, in which she has excelled all other actresses. Her conception of Antony was first rate; and, in fact, every part in the play received its due share of care, down to even that of the poor clown who brings to her the asp intended to take her life. This little sketch is a study of itself. Scarcely inferior proved "Macbeth" on the succeeding Friday—the weird element making itself prominently felt. The superstitious Thane and his ambitious wife were superbly delineated, and nothing could exceed the pathos of the great Macduff scene. Miss Glyn's reading of "Hamlet" is a remarkable effort, and reveals in her a mine of metaphysical thought, and a mind kindred to that of the Danish Prince and that of his great creator, Shakespeare. The reading of "The Merchant of Venice" presented fewer salient points; but the character of the persecuted and malignant Jew was thoroughly grasped by the great actress. Her representation, too, of "Romeo and Juliet" was replete with beauty. We may be sure that her interpretations of "Measure for Measure" and "King John" will be full of interest. We trust that Miss Glyn will be solicited to repeat these instructive studies.

Among the lecturers of the week the most eminent is Mr. Barnum, who has appeared at the Aquarium on more than one evening, and not only amused but instructed his hearers. Mr. Barnum is a great humourist, and secures his laugh when he chooses, relates an anecdote and suggests ludicrous associations which are not likely to be forgotten, and gives practical advice certain to bring benefit to those who wisely follow the precepts that he so luminously recommends. His theme is large and extensively utilitarian, as may be gathered from the title of his clever discourse—namely, "The World; and How to Live in It." Mr. Barnum deals in satire and sarcasm, as well as in fun and broad jesting; and in all makes an impression which the judicious hearer will cherish for future use and improvement. Among the matters that he commends is proper, judicious, and adequate advertising by those who have anything to dispose of; but he is cautious lest the advice should be abused. Only the good article will repay the expense of a costly process; all attempts at imposition necessarily involve a material loss.

In connection, likewise, with the Aquarium, it may be profitably mentioned that Miss Virginia Blackwood has appeared as Nell and the Marchioness in an adaptation of Charles Dickens's "Old Curiosity Shop," entitled "Little Nelly." At this season of the year it may be difficult to get a fair hearing for such a performance, but it may at least be truly stated that it deserves support. The piece is fairly enacted, and is illustrated with some new scenery and effects.

The Mohawk Minstrels announce the annual benefit at the Agricultural Hall of Mr. R. G. Thomas, the manager, to take place next Tuesday, when they state that the programme will be selected from the finest old negro-melodies.

The Lord Mayor entertained the Corporation of the Trinity House at a dinner in the Mansion House last Tuesday.

Miss Glennie's Home for Motherless Girls has been removed from Margate to Shabourne, in Berkshire, where a public-house has been converted into a suitable building for the orphanage, which was formally opened on Saturday.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

Herr Harwitz arrived in London a few days since, and has visited most of the metropolitan chess clubs. The distinguished Prussian master retired from the practice of the game some years ago, and will not, therefore, engage in play during his sojourn in London.

An extension of the West Cork Railway from Dunmanaway to Skibbereen was opened for traffic on Monday morning. This will shorten the route to Bantry and Glengarriff, and be a convenience to those tourists who take this district on their way to or from Killarney.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Nov. 30, 1876) of Emmanuele Lanza e Branciforti, Count di Mazzarino, late of the Palace Trubia, Palermo, Italy, who died on Nov. 30 last, was proved in London on the 14th inst. by Oliva Mantegna ed Alliata in Lanza, Countess di Mazzarino, the widow, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator leaves to his wife 51,000 lire per annum for life, in addition to her marriage contract, with the use of residence, carriages, and horses; and there are several legacies for religious and charitable purposes, such as the purchase of wax in honour of a saint, the dowering of four poor maidens orphaned of father and mother, and the saying of two masses daily for fifty years for the suffrage of his soul. Provision is made for his servants; and to a nephew and to his brother-in-law he leaves legacies for the purchase by them of some object of antiquity as a memorial of him. The testator appoints his only son, Giuseppe Lanza e Mantegna, who is a minor, residuary legatee, and he earnestly exhorts him not to mix up in politics, social questions, or with sects of any kind, and not to seek for a wife within the fifth degree of consanguinity either on the paternal or maternal side, nor to act under the impulse of a momentary passion, but always to give the preference to a modest woman of sound religious Catholic principles.

The will and codicil (dated Nov. 22, 1869, and Oct. 20, 1871) of Mr. John Barlow, late of Atherton-grange, Wimbledon Park, who died on the 7th ult., were proved on the 5th inst. by William Barlow and George Barlow, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator gives to his brother George an annuity of £400 for life; to each of his sisters, Elizabeth and Ann, £200 per annum for life; and there are some other bequests. The remainder of his property, both real and personal, he leaves to his said brother William.

The will and codicil (dated April 12, 1855, and July 31, 1861) of the Right Hon. Robert Adam Christopher Nisbet Hamilton, late of Bloxholm, Lincolnshire, and of No. 33, Chesham-place, who died on June 29 last, were proved on the 13th inst. by the Right Hon. Lady Mary Christopher Nisbet Hamilton, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. With the exception of a legacy of £2000 to his brother, Colonel Philip Dundas, the testator leaves all his estate, real and personal, to his wife.

The will (dated May 6, 1877) of Thomas Americus, Lord Erskine, late of Hillaide, Alderley Edge, Cheshire, who died on May 10 last, was proved on the 10th inst. by the Right Hon. John Cadwalader Baron Erskine, the brother, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £3000.

The will (dated Aug. 2, 1876) of Mr. John William Furse, formerly of No. 31, Old Jewry, and late of No. 19, Montpelier-villas, Brighton, who died on May 10 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by Robert Amadeus Heath, Henry Burnley Heath, and Charles Thomas Dovey, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Henrietta Angel Furse, his furniture, plate, household effects, horses and carriages, and £10,000, in addition to anything she may be entitled to under her marriage settlement; and, among other legacies, he gives £100 each, duty-free, to the British Charitable Fund, Paris, and the British Protestant Schools, Paris, and an annuity of £250 to his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Forbes, during the lifetime of her mother. The residue is left to Mrs. Furse for life, and on her death to his said daughter and her children.

The will (dated April, 1875) of Mrs. Susan Kitching has been proved. The whole of her estate, real and personal, the testatrix leaves to her only son, Walton Kitching, of Runnymede, Old Windsor, and Tan-yr-Allt, Carmarthenshire. The value of the freehold property is estimated at £150,000, and which the testatrix came into as a joint residuary legatee under the will of John Reginald Pindar, third Earl of Beauchamp, in whose family Mrs. Susan Kitching acted for many years as a confidential humble friend, up to the time of the Earl's second marriage in 1850.

The summer drills of 1877 came to a conclusion yesterday week with field operations, in which almost the entire army corps manoeuvred against a skeleton enemy. Last Saturday the Life Guards and the two battalions of Foot Guards left Aldershot. On Tuesday and Wednesday "The Grand Army Athletic Meeting," was held at South Camp, Aldershot. The events comprised flat races, high and long jump, putting shot, tug of war, tent-pegging, mounted combats, gymnastics, &c. About £400 was subscribed, which was distributed in money prizes and cups.

The Lord Mayor has accepted an invitation of the Mayor of Swansea to be present at his opening banquet in that town next Thursday evening, Aug. 2. His Lordship will be the guest of Mr. Hussey Vivian, M.P., at Park Wern. Next day the Lord Mayor will visit Mr. Mansel Talbot, M.P., the Lord Lieutenant of Glamorganshire, at Margam Park; and on the 4th he will distribute the Mansion House fund among the rescued men and their rescuers, of whom there are a large number. Testimonials to Mr. Wales, her Majesty's inspector, Dr. Davies, and others, who have accepted such recognitions of services rendered, will be presented on the same occasion.

The arbitration with regard to the proposal to reduce the wages of the Northumberland pitmen was held in the Wood Memorial Building, Newcastle-on-Tyne, upon four days of last week. Mr. J. B. Foster and Mr. W. A. Potter represented the coalowners as arbitrators; Mr. Burt, M.P., and Mr. Lloyd Jones were for the men. A good deal of evidence was taken, especially with regard to the pitmen's wages and hours of labour in other and competing districts. It is anticipated that the decision will be announced by the umpire, Mr. Hirschell, Q.C., this week.—The Warwickshire Miners' Association held a great gathering last Saturday at Bedworth. Mr. Macdonald, M.P., in addressing the meeting, said that throughout his experience, extending over a period of more than thirty years, he had never known a time when organisation and combination among the working classes of this country were more necessary than they are at present.

Lord Hartington, in presiding at the annual dinner of the Cobden Club, which took place at Greenwich last Saturday evening, paid a warm tribute to the memory of the deceased statesman. He glanced at the work necessary to be done in order to accomplish the main object of the club, which was to defend at home and extend abroad the principles which lie at the root of those measures of which Mr. Cobden was the eloquent advocate—those measures and principles in the truth of which he firmly believed, and which he devoted the greatest and best part of his life in advocating and carrying into effect, and expressed a thorough conviction in the triumph of the principles which they advocated. The other speakers included Mr. Forster, M.P., Mr. Leon Say, Sir Louis Mallet, Professor Atkinson, from the United States, Mr. Hay, of Sydney, New South Wales, and Mr. T. B. Potter, M.P. The speeches declared unflinching attachment to the principles of free trade and economic reform.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1877.

One of the most remarkable Parliamentary contests ever recorded has signalled the present week. It has not been one of intellectual or political power, but simply one of physical endurance. A minority consisting of about half a dozen Irish members seem to have combined to stop the machinery of Legislation, for what purpose the public of the United Kingdom is left to judge. The measure over which the fight took place was the South African Bill of Lord Carnarvon, providing authority and facilities, with duly considered restrictions, for federating the now separate States in that part of the world. There was nothing in it which specially touched the interests of Ireland. The measure was exclusively Imperial in its scope and character. But it was selected by Mr. Parnell, Mr. Biggar, and Mr. O'Donnell, with occasional assistance from some two or three other members, as the bone of contention over which was to be fought the battle which should decide how far the forms of the House, intended to protect minorities against hasty legislation on the part of a dominant majority, can be legally, we will not say constitutionally, turned to account. The country has watched the conflict with a deep sense of humiliation. It has witnessed with a feeling of shame an attempt to destroy a system in which it took just pride by a handful of men who could hardly boast of being animated by patriotic motives. That they should have been foiled in their attempt is only what might have been fairly anticipated. That the attempt should have been made and so obstinately sustained, even though only by a miserable minority, is a matter which can only be regarded with painful surprise and regret.

We need not enter into particulars. They are before this time thoroughly well known by every intelligent man in the country. There are some lessons, however, to be learned from them which we hope will not be overlooked. Of course, the tactics adopted by the minority can only be regarded as tactics of obstruction. They derived no special importance from the particular bill to which they were applied. They borrowed their excuse from something deeper than any projected legislation for the benefit of her Majesty's South African subjects. They were suggested probably by Parliamentary arrangements which, time out of mind, and under many successive Administrations, have characterised the business in the House of Commons. Members of a minority have had too much reason to complain of a system which has borne heavily upon them when called upon, as they too frequently are, to discuss and to oppose what may be described as minor departmental measures. Such measures are usually set down, for one or other of their stages, low on the list of the Orders of the Day. They are never brought on until after 12.30 a.m. They can only be stopped by a notice which forbids the consideration of them after that hour. If no such notice of opposition has been given, any member desired by his constituents to watch its course for the purpose of defeat or modification must attend in his place, time after time, far into the small hours of the morning. Again and again he is destined to witness nothing further than a postponement of the Bill in which he is interested to the next day. Should he, however, be accidentally, or, it may be, compulsorily, absent, there are about twenty chances to one that the measure will be proceeded with. Now, such an arrangement as this does not deal fairly with members who, in the particular instance, represent but a minority of the House. They are kept dancing attendance till the latest hour in the performance of bonâ-fide duty to their constituents, from night to night, without sufficient reason, by those who who represent the different departments of Government in the House—which departments it must be owned push to an unfair and occasionally an extreme limit what may be called the rights of a majority. We have long wondered that such a tactical abuse has been endured—patiently endured it certainly has not been. And hence we are the less surprised that measures of obstruction should be resorted to by members to whose minds any obstruction, reasonable or unreasonable, seems to commend itself as a present duty.

The instance, however, now before us, although it may have in part grown out of the discontent thus excited, is far from being covered by any such explanation. Majorities have their rights as well as minorities. When a fish-bone has stuck in the throat and thereby obstructs, if it does not altogether prevent, any act of deglutition, it must be got rid of if possible. If it cannot be coaxed out of its position it must be extracted by some operation sufficiently severe to be efficacious. It is a very little thing in itself, but in the wrong place it may become extremely dangerous. So with the obstructing Minority in the House of Commons. The forms of the House, no doubt, protected them; and it was not by a change of the forms of the House that their ill-judged operations could be brought to a close. When the spirit of fair debate is at an end, other means based upon lower considerations must needs be resorted to. One cannot argue with a man who puts a pistol to your head and calls upon you to stand and deliver. That such men there should be in this advanced period of the nineteenth century and in this United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland may be a legitimate cause of wonder and vexation. But such outrages upon the public peace cannot be permitted. They are not, it is true, to be treated as if they were affairs of heroism. A little ingenuity, supported by patience, may do all that needs to be done without exacting the perpetrators to martyrdom. Whether or no, however, the thing has to be done. The machinery of Legislation, now some centuries old, cannot be left at the mercy of some half-dozen Members who fancy that they can forward some ulterior measures by blocking its normal action.

There can be little doubt that improvements of no slight value can be made, if made with due care and deliberation, in the forms of the House of Commons. Our social habits have greatly altered since our forefathers laid down general rules, wise as they were comprehensive, for the conduct of debate in the Houses of Parliament. As there is no likelihood of our being able to conform modern habits to bygone regulations, we are bound to adapt the rules to existing habits. No great change need be attempted, for no great change is to be desired. But as grit in a machine must needs be removed because it threatens permanent injury to the mechanism itself, so the means of unreasonable obstruction in Legislation which are now found to exist should be carefully and reverently removed, with a view to maintain unimpaired the Institution which has been considered by most Englishmen as the pride of their country, and by enlightened foreigners as a glory to the race.

A declaration has been exchanged at Berne between England and Switzerland, subject to ratification by the Federal Council, for the mutual protection of trade marks.

A report has been received from the British Consul at Jeddah, and laid before Parliament, respecting a fugitive slave who escaped to her Majesty's ship Fawn, and who was given up to the Governor of the place. It is stated that the slave in question belonged to an Ottoman subject, and that the acting Consul, to whom he was handed over by the commander of the Fawn, surrendered him in accordance with the rules laid down by the Consul in such cases. The only irregularity in the proceedings was that the acting Consul did not make an official report upon the case, although one of her Majesty's ships was concerned, but treated it as an ordinary occurrence, to be dealt with by the usual reference to the Governor.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein visited the Prince and Princess of Wales yesterday week at Marlborough House, and remained to luncheon. Their Royal Highnesses dined with his Excellency Count Beust at the Austrian Embassy in Belgrave-square. On Saturday last Princess Christian laid the corner-stone of new workshops and stores at the Home for Little Boys, at Farningham. Her Royal Highness afterwards received presents from ladies on behalf of the institution, after which prizes were presented to the meritorious boys in the various departments. METROPOLITAN NEWS.

In consequence of the death of Mr. Ward Hunt, the Ministerial banquet at the Mansion House, which was fixed for Wednesday, was not held.

A return has been issued of the number, position, and area of the sites set apart under the Metropolitan Streets Improvements Act, 1872, for dwellings for the labouring class. These are ten in number.

The nomination in respect of the aldermanic vacancy for Ward of Cheap will be held on the 10th inst. Sir John Bennett, whose election has been declared void by the Court of Aldermen, seeks "re-election," and in his address refers to the decision of his "colleagues." Ex-Sheriff Breffit is also a candidate. Mr. Waddell, who ran Sir John Bennett so close in the last contest, declines to compete again.

The City Corporation has increased the allowances of the inmates of the City Almshouses at Brixton. The pay of the married couples is increased from £33 to £40 16s. per annum, and the widowers and widows will receive £30 a year instead of £20, with residence, coals, &c. This institution is for the reception of aged citizens in adverse circumstances, and over one hundred persons are domiciled in it.

In the presence of a large company, on Saturday last, Mr. James Watson, member of the London School Board, laid the foundation-stone of a new "Presbyterian Church of England," at Crouch-hill, close to the station of the Midland Railway. The structure, which stands on the Holly Park Estate, will in style be Geometric Gothic, and will cost £5500, of which sum £2170 has been subscribed. Mr. William M. Murray, one of the treasurers of the building fund, is the most munificent patron of the movement.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the number of paupers relieved at the end of the fourth week of July was 76,846, of whom 35,958 were in work-houses and 40,888 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874 respectively, these figures show a decrease of 13, 6341, and 14,952 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 626, of whom 408 were men, 168 women, and 50 children under sixteen.

Lord Salisbury gave evidence on Tuesday before the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the subject of the arrears of pay due from the Indian Government to artillery and engineer officers. His Lordship stated that both the Council and himself agreed that these officers had no substantial claim. The Imperial Government of India had no right to dispose of the revenue without the consent of the Council. The demands for the arrears were perfectly justifiable from the officers' point of view, he had no doubt; but, as guardians of the public purse, they ought not to grant them. He thought that the money should be paid, but not by them. It should be paid out of the Imperial revenues of India.

Captain Cockburn, of Ockham Park, near Ripley, Surrey, who is a director of the Caledonian Asylum, and a grandson of one of its founders, is desirous of giving the lads and lasses of this school a day's holiday at his beautiful old park, and solicits help, chiefly from his countrymen and countrywomen, for the purpose. He says:—"I shall be most happy to see here, to help me to entertain the children, anyone who may kindly subscribe ten shillings or more towards giving them this treat; and tickets will be sent to them, with receipts for their subscriptions, which should be paid into Cockburn's United Service Agency Society, 41, Haymarket, London, S.W., to the credit of the Caledonian Asylum Treat Fund. The trip will be managed as economically as is consistent with success, and any surplus subscriptions will be carried to the credit of the asylum, which stands much in need of them."

A meeting of the council of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund was held on Thursday afternoon at the Mansion House, to receive the report of the Distribution Committee for the present year. Sir S. H. Waterlow, M.P., presided. The report of the committee stated that the total amount received up to that time was £25,500. The total amount now recommended to be paid to 119 institutions was £24,960, to be divided as follows:—£22,747 to seventy-six hospitals, including four institutions which might be classed as hospitals, and £2,223 to forty-three dispensaries. Nearly all these awards were slightly below those of 1876, in consequence of an increasing number of applications to participate, and a slight decrease in the amount to be administered by the council. Bishop Piers Claughton, Mr. A. Sandeman, Sir F. Lycett, Sir E. H. Currie, Mr. Thomson Hankey, and others spoke to the different resolutions.

A meeting of the council of the Royal Agricultural Society of England was held on Wednesday at its offices, in Hanover-square, under the presidency of Lord Skelmersdale. A report was received from Professor Brown, of the Veterinary Department, in reference to the recent outbreak of cattle plague at Bethnal-green. The Professor remarked that every precaution had been taken to prevent the spreading of the disease. Cattle plague had again appeared in Germany, near the Polish frontier, having been introduced, it is believed, by meat from Poland. Active measures have been taken by the German Government to prevent the extension of the disease. The secretary, Mr. H. M. Jenkins, was empowered to act as honorary treasurer to a fund proposed to be raised for the benefit of the widow and children of Mr. Isaac Wilson, who was killed in the society's show-yard at Liverpool by the bursting of an emery wheel. Some other business having been disposed of, the council adjourned until Wednesday, Nov. 7.

The third election of the Military Benevolent Fund was held on Thursday week—Lieutenant-General Sir Francis Wheeler, Bart., C.B., in the chair—when two additional annuitants were nominated to the benefits of the institution, which has for its object the granting of annuities not exceeding £40 each to necessitous ladies, being exclusively the widows or unmarried daughters of deceased officers of the Army and Royal Marines. The hon. secretary, Miss Davies (who is the founder of the institution), read a statement of its present position, showing that, although its organisation only dates from 1875, it has already granted annuities to six ladies (nearly all of whom were previously perfectly destitute), and that it possesses, through adherence to the rule which provides for the investment of all life donations, a small funded capital of nearly £2000. The annuities are awarded by the votes of the subscribers, but the institution is one of the few conducted strictly on the non-canvassing system. Details as to its rules can be obtained from Miss Davies, 40, Arundel-gardens, W.

Last week 2429 births and 1430 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 98, whereas the deaths were 314 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 27 from smallpox, 51 from measles, 25 from scarlet fever, 4 from diphtheria, 23 from whooping-cough, 24 from different forms of fever, and 184 from diarrhoea; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 333 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing from 210 to 332 in the five preceding weeks. These deaths were, however, 205 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. Different forms of violence caused 44 deaths; 39 were the result of negligence or accident, including 15 from fractures and contusions, 2 from burns and scalds, 13 from drowning, and 6 of infants under one year of age from suffocation. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the duration of registered sunshine in the week was 21.7 hours out of the 109.9 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

Yesterday week the whole of the Corporation officers—from the Recorder downwards—attended at the Mansion House and presented to the Lady Mayoress (Miss White) a valuable diamond bracelet upon her coming marriage. The presentation was made by the Chamberlain, who stated that the gift thus spontaneously offered was intended to convey, if any such proof were needed, to the Lord Mayor the high esteem in which the Corporation held him and the Lady Mayoress, his daughter, for the graceful, kindly, and admirable way in which she had discharged her varied duties in connection with the Mayoralty. The Lord Mayor appropriately thanked the Corporation officers for their kind and most welcome present, and said he was sure his daughter, the Lady Mayoress, would always regard that gift—coming, as it did, from gentlemen of whom the City and the Corporation had every cause to be proud—with feelings of pride and gratitude.—The final reception of the Lady Mayoress was held on Monday.—The marriage of Miss White and Mr. Cecil Herbert Thornton Price is to be solemnised on the 9th inst. in St. Paul's Cathedral, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishop of Ely and Canon Liddon. It is expected that the Bishop of London will also be present. The service will be choral. It is stated that it is nearly 120 years since a marriage was celebrated at St. Paul's.

The ceremony of felling trees and cutting the first turfs on the land conceded to the vestry of St. Pancras by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, for the purpose of widening Gloucester-gate Bridge on its reconstruction, was carried out on Monday by Mr. Hoppey and Mr. W. Thornton, senior churchwarden of the parish. Axes having been presented to the churchwarden, Messrs. Hoppey and Westacott (chairman and deputy-chairman of the committee), and other members of the vestry, trees were felled on each side the canal, after which the gentlemen named cut the turf at the spot where the first stone is to be laid in a fortnight by Mr. Gerald Noel, First Commissioner of Works. The tender for the reconstruction of the bridge, by Messrs. Kirk and Randall, has been accepted, in the sum of £13,500, and the work is to be completed in nine months from the present time. It was stated that the bridge will be one of the handsomest in London, and worthy the position it will hold as the entrance to one of the Royal parks. Reference was also made to the other projected metropolitan improvements for St. Pancras, including the projected widening of Kentish Town-road.

Paulo Golero, described as a merchant, and Constantino Theodorides, described as a commission agent, were charged at the Marlborough-street Police Court on Tuesday with conspiring to demand from Miss Augusta Ernestine Slade, a young lady, niece of Admiral Slade, a large sum of money by menaces and threats. The prosecutrix, while travelling with her mother in Turkey, had become acquainted with the prisoner Theodorides, who is a Greek, and had ultimately been engaged to marry him, but the engagement was broken off; and he assured her that he had burned certain letters received by him from her. About a month ago, however, he informed her that he had not destroyed the letters, but that they were held as security for a debt owed by him to Golero, and demanded £500 for their return and surrender. Subsequently, Golero wrote to her stating that Theodorides owed him £695—a sum which he must have from somebody, or he would take his measures, intimating that one of them would be to send copies of her letters to other people. The evidence having been completed on Wednesday, both prisoners were committed for trial, the magistrates peremptorily refusing to accept bail.

TROOPS FOR THE MEDITERRANEAN.

The Illustrations on our front page show the second battalion of the 2nd (Queen's Royal) Regiment leaving Alder hot, on Thursday week, and going on board the transport-ship Euphrates at the Watering Island Jetty in Port mouth Dockyard. This battalion numbered twenty-four officers, thirty-six sergeants, and 835 rank and file, with seven horses. The men were mostly very young, but had a soldierly appearance. They were in heavy marching order, and each man carried the new pattern valise, mess-can, water-bottle, top coat, and haversack, with the Martini-Henry rifle, and side-arms; but the shako was left behind, and a light Glengarry cap worn instead, to be replaced by a pith helmet at Malta. The troops marched from the Factory Gate through the dockyard in fours, but without any music of the band, which has been found to distract the dockyard labourers from their work. An hour or two later came a detachment of the 104th Regiment, from the Curragh, part of which embarked on the Euphrates; and the same vessel had already received, on the previous day, about 500 men of the 64th, the 108th, and the 27th Regiments. These troops did not, like the 2nd Regiment, carry their own kits and rifles on board the ship. At seven in the evening, when all the detachments had come on board, the Euphrates was towed from the jetty, amidst the cheers of assembled spectators, the band playing and troops cheering on her deck. These forces are to join the head-quarters of the 27th and 98th Regiments, forming the garrison of Malta. The transport-ship Crocodile also takes out from Portsmouth some draughts from the 104th Regiment, at the Curragh, the 79th Highland Regiment, from Fort George, and the 78th and 71st Regiments, from Edinburgh. These arrived at Portsmouth and embarked in the Crocodile the same evening. The Malabar, the Jumna, and the Serapis will convey other detachments of troops.

The strength of the garrison of Malta about ten years ago, before the reduction of our military establishments in the colonies, was eight batteries of Artillery, with an aggregate strength of 805 non-commissioned officers and men; two companies of Royal Engineers, numbering 178; six battalions of Infantry, 4232 strong; and the Malta Fencible Artillery, 591; the whole garrison numbering 5854 non-commissioned officers and men. The establishment of the present garrison, including officers, is 5098—viz., Artillery, seven batteries, 1022; Engineers, two companies, 198; Infantry, five battalions, 3440; and the Malta Fencible Artillery, 371. The additions now being made consist of the second battalions of the 2nd Queen's and the 13th Light Infantry, each 902 of all ranks, or 1804 altogether, with draughts as follows:—195 to the 27th Regiment, 288 to the 42nd, 245 to the 71st, 239 to the 98th, and 231 to the 101st, making the total reinforcements 3002, and bringing the strength of the garrison up to 8100 of all ranks.

THE WAR: RUSSIAN DEFEATS.

The Russian army invading Bulgaria and Roumelia has this week suffered a great defeat on both sides of the Balkan. The exact particulars of the close of these actions were not precisely known on Thursday evening, at the time when this notice was written; but it was positively ascertained that a battle fought on Monday last at Plevna had proved disastrous to the right wing of the Russian army; and that the Russian advanced guard was likewise defeated on Tuesday at Eski Sagra, south of the mountains. The Turks were acting on the defensive in both instances, under the command of Osman Pasha at Plevna, and at Eski Sagra under Raouf Pasha and Suleiman Pasha.

The Turkish forces at Plevna, it is estimated, were about 50,000, being the Widdin army and troops from Sofia and Nisch. They occupied a series of positions in horseshoe shape in front of Plevna, with both flanks resting on the river Vid, behind the town. The defensive strength of the ground they occupied, naturally great, was increased by earthworks, redoubts, and shelter trenches in every available spot. The assaulting force consisted of the 9th Russian Army Corps, under Baron Krudener, and the Thirtieth Division and the thirtieth brigade of the Second Division, under Prince Schackosky, with three brigades of cavalry and 160 guns. The arrangement was that General Krudener should attack the Turkish centre at Grivica, and the northern flank of the entrenched positions over Ranova, while General Schackosky attacked Radisovo. The Turkish line extended up the Vid river as far as Looca, General Krudener failed to expel the Turks from their earthworks on the north side, but General Schackosky, after an obstinate contest, gained possession of Radisovo; an attack was then made on the positions covering Plevna, but without avail. The Daily News correspondent, in a telegram of last Tuesday from the Russian camp fifteen miles east of Plevna, thus describes the latter part of the engagements:—"This attack began about four, and was continued till nearly sundown. The Turkish infantry was in great force in a continuous line of shelter trenches, and in spite of the most stubborn efforts, no impression could be made upon it. Two companies of Russian infantry did work round to the right of the Turkish trenches, and, descending into the valley, entered the town of Plevna, but, being between two fires, it was impossible to hold it. The Russian batteries pushed boldly forward into the position first taken to attempt to keep down the Turkish cannonade crashing into the infantry men in the open, but they were compelled soon to evacuate the hazardous spot. At sundown the Turks made a continuous forward movement, and they reoccupied the second position, which the Russians had never been able to take entire possession of. The Russian infantry made a succession of desperate stands and died like heroes, but to no avail. The Turks gradually retook everything they had lost. The fighting lasted long after nightfall. With the darkness the Bash-Bazouks took possession of the battlefield and slew all the wounded who were too severely injured to effect their retreat. The Russians held the heights above Radisovo, but the Bash-Bazouks worked round their rear and fell on the wounded collected in the village of Radisovo. The Russian losses were very heavy—how heavy is not yet ascertained. A retreat was compelled in this direction, and the contingencies resulting from this untoward battle are of ominous significance."

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent sends the following from Loftcha, dated Wednesday morning:—"Osman Pasha has won a great victory, after two days' dreadfully severe fighting. The Russians, supported by artillery, in three columns of attack, numbering about 14,000 men each, assaulted the earthworks held by the Ottomans. Notwithstanding that they were repeatedly repulsed with immense slaughter, the Russians made a final and desperate attack yesterday morning. For hours the conflict raged with intense fierceness, each assault being received with a destructive musketry fire, the receding masses suffering still further from the well-sustained cannonade of the Ottoman artillery. Under cover of the fire of the latter, the Turks at last made a dash down the valley, and routed the enemy at the point of the bayonet."

The following, from Widdin, was sent to the same paper:—"Yesterday morning the Russians, with a force of 60,000 infantry, three regiments of cavalry, and forty cannon, attacked at three points the entrenched positions of Osman Pasha. After a terrible combat, which lasted throughout the day, the Muscovites retreated, leaving behind them, it is stated, 8000 killed, and nearly double the number wounded, besides abandoning a large quantity of ammunition and muskets. The losses of the Turks are very small, owing to their well-protected position. Osman Pasha's victory has caused great rejoicing here. He is awaiting reinforcements before making a forward movement. The Russians have demanded leave to bury their dead."

The Turkish official despatch from Osman Pasha says:—"This morning the ten Russian divisions recommenced their attack on our lines and redoubts east of Plevna. They were everywhere repulsed, and lost 8000 men killed and treble that number wounded. They retreated to their encampments."

A Russian official dispatch from Timova, dated next day, says:—"Yesterday General Krudener made another attack on Plevna, but without success." A telegram from St. Petersburg says that no details of this engagement have been made known there.

The news from the south of the Balkans is not much more favourable to the Russians. It seems that on Tuesday they attacked the corps of Raouf Pasha at Eski-Sagra. After seven hours' fighting Raouf Pasha fell back upon Karabounar. Suleiman Pasha the same day, however, repulsed the enemy, and recaptured Eski-Sagra, taking several guns from the Russians, and inflicting upon them considerable loss. It is stated that General Gourko is in imminent peril between the armies of Suleiman Pasha and Raouf Pasha, and that his retreat is intercepted. From the Danube we hear that Rustchuk is not invested, and cannot be until the disaster at Plevna shall have been repaired; while from Silistria the news is that the garrison have succeeded in repelling several attacks by the army of the Dobrudzha. The Roumanians have been requested by the Emperor Alexander to cross the Danube, and more Russian troops are brought over as rapidly as possible, to maintain the positions occupied in Bulgaria.

The new Turkish Commander-in-Chief, Mehemet Ali Pasha, is a German, from Magdeburg, whose real name is Julius Detroit; he was formerly mate of a merchant-vessel. He seems to be a man of far greater ability and energy than old Abdul Kerim.

The evidence of shocking cruelties practised on the Turkish and other Mussulman classes of the population in Bulgaria, since the Russian army has invaded that country, seems to be substantiated. It will form a political set-off against the horrid deeds of the Circassians, Kurds, and Bash-Bazouks in the suppression of the Bulgarian insurrection south of the Balkan in May last year. The truth seems to be that Christians and Mohammedans, or rather, in each instance, the sordid barbarians of Eastern Europe nominally adhering to the faith of the Cross or that of the Crescent, are equally capable of these foul and atrocious orgies of wholesale vengeance, wantonnees, and inhumanity, scarcely outdone by the most debased savages of heathen Africa. Upon the present occasion there is reason to believe that the worst acts of ferocity, rapacity, and filthy licentiousness have been perpetrated by the native Bulgarians of the districts through which the Russian army has passed, when the remaining Mussulman families were left at their mercy by the withdrawal of the Ottoman troops. It appears, moreover, but too probable that, in some cases, though very rarely and exceptionally, a few of the wild Cossacks belonging to the Russian army have broken the bonds of discipline, and have joined in slaughtering or torturing even the women and children of the defenceless Moslem villages. The Cossacks are the only lancers, and it is a fact that some women and children have been conveyed to Shumla or Varna who had received several wounds inflicted by the lance, as well as rifle-shots. These poor victims of undeniable Russian cruelty, some of them mere babes, others still more unhappy females of every age, who had also suffered an unspeakable outrage, with every circumstance of pain and shame, were seen by the English, French, and German newspaper correspondents. There is no doubt of the massacre and hideous ill-treatment of large numbers of the Mussulman population in Bulgaria; the only question is, how far the Russian troops have had anything to do with it, and whether the officers commanding them should not have prevented it. The destruction and pillage of Turkish houses, as well for insult as for plunder, by their Bulgarian neighbours would seem to have been general throughout those districts which the Russian army has entered; and we do not find that the Emperor Alexander or the Grand Duke Nicholas have exerted their authority to put a stop to these excesses. In preference to quoting the letters and telegrams of correspondents hostile to Russia, we will only give the following extract of the Daily News correspondent's letter from Varna, dated the 19th ult., which appeared in that paper last Thursday:—"Atrocities, I deeply regret to say, are the order of the day. Only yesterday six Turkish women and children were brought down to Shumla from Rasgrad; one woman, aged seventy, was riddled with balls, four were in her body; the rest were wounded by lance-thrusts, the children badly so, and all the wounds were behind. An official told me to-day that the number of refugees who had passed through Varna since the beginning of the panic amounts to 60,000 heads of families; add to this number a fair proportion of women and children, and you will have, say, a minimum of 150,000 homeless wanderers. Who is responsible for this and for the route they are taking? I will go into that question presently. A whole country is emptying itself and fleeing from the Russians in the Dobrudzha to meet them at Adrianople; at the latter place they imagine themselves in safety, and no one warns them of the true state of things. I have asked the Tartars and the Georgians why they fly in the face of the Emperor Alexander's proclamation; and the answer has invariably been that, although the Russians at first are fair and generous, they in a very few days find means of inciting the Bulgarians against them, and death and desolation follow. They will move on and on until starvation meets them. We are on the verge of winter, and these people will be without home, shelter, food, fire, and money; they will die like flies. At this very instant a sight full of pain catches my eye. On the other side of the bay, distant from here about two miles, stretches a spur of the Balkan; at its foot, wearied with travel, is encamped a village, or rather the inhabitants of a village now deserted; the people are Tartars, and many of their women and children are very pretty and very fair; long lines of thin blue smoke rising up tell me they are preparing for the evening meal; the shoe has not begun to pinch yet; a little money is still left, and, besides, they are in the neighbourhood of a town; to-morrow they will cross the mountain at dawn and disappear, to be heard of months afterwards as dying from cold and starvation. Some who read my letters may think I harp too much on this subject. To them I appeal for patience. If they could picture to themselves as connected with or happening to any member of their family one lot of what I see, they would recoil with horror and indignation."

Further correspondence respecting the affairs of Turkey has been issued from the Foreign Office. It comprises thirty-one communications respecting cruelties perpetrated by the Russians and by Christians under Russian protection. The dates extend from June 24 to July 27. There are several despatches from Mr. Layard, inclosing Turkish reports of the alleged cruelties, upon which the British Minister at Constantinople observes:—

"The statements as to the cruelties and outrages committed by the Russians upon the Mohammedan population of the Turkish territories which they have invaded and overrun in Asia and Europe deserve very serious consideration. Many of them may be, and no doubt are, exaggerated; but I fear that there is too much reason to believe that some of them at least are well founded. Sir Arnold Kemball, in one of his despatches, mentions how the women in some of the Mussulman villages near Kars were stripped naked, flogged, and driven into the Turkish lines on the plea that they had given information to the besieged. The accounts of the shocking treatment by the Russian authorities and troops of the inhabitants of many villages in Circassia on the approach of the Turkish forces come from so many independent sources that their general truth can scarcely be called in question. There appear to be some grounds for believing that Russian agents are inciting the Bulgarian Christians to massacre the Mohammedans."

"Other proceedings of a similar nature on the part of the Russians have been brought by the Porte to the notice of the European Powers in circulars addressed to its representatives abroad. The Sultan and his Ministers have denounced to me the cruelties attributed to the Russians, and have expressed to me their conviction that it is part of the policy of Russia to exterminate, as far as possible, the Mohammedan population of the countries which they occupy. I have urged them, in the strongest language, not to make use of these accusations to incite the Mussulmans against the Christians, and to turn the war into one of fanaticism and into a life-and-death struggle for religion, as well as for hearth and home."

A despatch from Lord Derby to the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, on the 17th ult., calls the attention of the Russian Government to these reports of outrages inflicted by the Russian troops, or by the Christians acting under their protection, upon the Mohammedan population of the Turkish provinces in Asia and Europe. The reports are given in the order in which they were received, but the principal instances in Bulgaria are as follows:—

"Mr. Layard reports that the Porte received information on the 14th inst. that about 200 Mohammedan men, women, and children, who were escaping in carts towards Varna, were overtaken by the Russian cavalry, who murdered the men and children, and violated the women, who were afterwards killed in a most horrible manner. A number of Mussulman refugees flying from the Russians are reported by the Governor of Kazanlik to have been murdered in cold blood by Bulgarians in the gorge of Khaim Boghas, between Timova and Kazanlik. Therefugees thus murdered include women and children. Some Mohammedan villages are reported to have been burnt, and others between Timova, Drenova, and Valona abandoned on account of the conduct of the enemy. Some villages in the gorge of Khimakeni were burnt, and the inhabitants are said to have been massacred. A British consular agent reported on the 14th inst. that the Mussulman inhabitants in that part of the country were in a deplorable state, and that the Russians and Bulgarian Christians, at their instigation, were committing shocking outrages upon Mussulmans. Her Majesty's Consul at Rustchuk, who arrived at Constantinople on the 16th inst. from Varna, confirmed the accounts of massacres of Mussulman women and children. It appears from the information received by him that shocking outrages are committed, principally by the Bulgarian Christians, at the instigation and under the protection of the Russian Cossacks, who are present at them. Great fears are entertained that these acts might lead to terrible retaliations on the part of the Mussulmans in places not occupied by the Russian troops."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Marshal MacMahon, accompanied by the Minister of War and the Minister of the Interior, left Paris yesterday week on a visit to Bourges. Replying on Saturday to an address of congratulation from the Mayor of Bourges, the Marshal defined his policy thus:—"To maintain peace abroad, to keep our constitutional ground at home at the head of men of order of all parties, protecting them not only against subversive passions but their own impulses; to demand from them to impose a truce to their party differences in order to check Radicalism, which is the common peril—such has been my aim, and never any other." The Marshal went on to complain that he had been misrepresented. "People have spoken," he said, "of foreign relations being jeopardised, of the Constitution violated, of liberty of conscience threatened; they have even gone so far as to speak of the return of the abuses of the old régime, and I know not what occult influence, which they styled priestly government. These are calumnies, and the public good sense in France and abroad has already judged them at their true worth. They will not discourage me for one moment, and will not prevent me from finishing my task with the help of the men who have been the auxiliaries of my policy. I am confident that the nation will respond to my appeal; and that, by the choice of its representatives, it will terminate a conflict the prolongation of which could only be hurtful to its interests and check the pacific development of its greatness." In the course of his reply to the congratulatory address of the president of the Tribunal of Commerce, Marshal MacMahon said:—"France has done everything in her power to localise the war in the East. Peace is the first object of French policy."

On Sunday the Marshal continued his visits of inspection, and at midday attended mass in state at the cathedral, surrounded by an imposing concourse of military and civil authorities. The spectacle is described as magnificent. An enormous multitude awaited the Marshal at his exit. At four o'clock a grand review took place in splendid weather. At seven the Marshal dined at headquarters. At a later hour he was present at a public fête de nuit in the gardens of the Archbishop's Palace, and, leaving Bourges at ten o'clock, re-archived the Elysée early on Monday.

A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday morning at the Elysée under the presidency of Marshal MacMahon. The Duc Decazes was present. A great part of the sitting was occupied in discussing the candidates to whom the Government will give their support at the forthcoming elections. Reports from several prefects were read, which stated that an excellent impression had been produced by the visit of the President to Bourges, and several of the members expressed a desire that Marshal MacMahon should undertake another tour to Saint Etienne and other important centres.

M. de Fourtou, the Minister of the Interior, has issued another circular to the Prefects warning them against too exclusive attention to the political part of their functions, to the neglect of the administrative. The Prefects are admonished to encourage the efforts of municipalities in forwarding enterprises interesting to the people, to stimulate the zeal of their agents in any case where recent changes have slackened business, and to leave no doubt of their goodwill towards matters which they cannot immediately solve.

The Minister of Public Instruction has dismissed ten inspectors of elementary schools, and has transferred fifty more to other localities. Press prosecutions continue. The managers of the Lanterne and the Mot d'Ordre have each been sentenced to 5000fr. fine for publishing articles said to have been written by M. Rochefort. The manager of the Courrier de France has been sentenced to one month's imprisonment and a fine of 2000fr. for publishing articles insulting public functionaries.

The population of Mulhouse, in Alsace, have raised a subscription of a million francs in aid of the funds of the Republican electoral committee.

A cause célèbre was brought to a conclusion at Paris on Thursday week. The Assize Court sentenced the widow Gras to fifteen years' penal servitude on the charge of instigating her servant Gaudry to throw vitriol into the face of a rich young man called M. de la Roche. It was alleged that she was afraid of losing the influence which she had gained over him, and took this course with a view to making the young man entirely dependent on her care. Her accomplice, Gaudry, was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

Seven soldiers were killed by an explosion which occurred on Saturday in a casemate in Fort Mont Valerien, where the men were engaged in extracting the charge from some old shells. The explosion of a shell from some unknown cause occasioned the disaster.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso, who has been suffering from a severe cold, has returned from Santiago to Carril, and started on Wednesday for Pontevedra and Vigo. His Majesty is to return to the Escorial or to Madrid on the 10th inst. The statement made last week that the King of Portugal had an interview with King Alfonso on the frontier of Galicia is devoid of foundation.

An official statement of the military forces is published, showing that the army would number in war-time 243,000 infantry and 30,000 cavalry, with 206 guns. In time of peace the yearly contingents will be reduced to suit the exigencies of the Budget.

PORTUGAL.

The King has gone to Vidago. The Queen intends devoting a sum of 4000 livres, forming the balance of the subscriptions for the sufferers by the recent inundations in Portugal, to the relief of the severe distress caused by the drought in the province of Ceara, Brazil.

ITALY.

Last Saturday evening, as Prince Amadeus was driving in his carriage, the horses took fright and ran away, and the Prince leaped from the carriage, sustaining a severe contusion in the head.

GERMANY.

The Emperor of Germany, who is staying at Gastein for the purpose of drinking the waters, is said to be enjoying excellent health.

General von Blumenthal, Chief of the Staff to the Crown Prince in 1866 to 1870, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his entering the Prussian army on Tuesday. The Emperor and all the members of the Imperial house have congratulated the gallant officer, and the Crown Prince has presented him with a colossal marble bust of himself.

The German navy is steadily increasing, and the activity at Kiel is very great. Two new armour-plated corvettes have just been launched, and have received the names Sachsen and Bismarck. The Bismarck was christened by the Chief of the Admiralty, Von Stosch. The vessel is pierced for twenty-four guns, and has engines of 2400-horse power. A third corvette is very nearly finished.

The subterranean cable connecting Berlin with Leipzig, Frankfurt, and Mainz is completed, and the last section was sunk in the bed of the Rhine on Monday last, in the presence of the Postmaster-General, Dr. Stephan.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

Prince Rodolph, the heir to the throne of Austria, attained his majority on Thursday, July 26.

At a council of Austrian and Hungarian Ministers held on Tuesday at Vienna Count Andrássy, whose policy was entirely approved by his colleagues, was empowered to take measures for an eventual strengthening of the troops already echeloned along the southern frontier. The Cabinet also discussed the question of the cost, estimated at about 25,000,00 fl., of mobilising four divisions for the purpose of reinforcing the troops on the frontier should that measure be adopted.

GREECE.

The King has presented a memorandum on the military position of the country to the Minister of War. King George is understood to be of opinion that both the land and sea forces should be placed in a state of readiness, and that measures should be taken to defend the frontiers of Epirus and Thessaly, those provinces being infested by brigands.

DENMARK.

The King has accepted the resignation of General Hoffner, Minister of War and Marine, and has appointed General Dreyer as his successor.

AMERICA.

The great railway strike is nearly at an end. One line after another has been thrown open, and traffic has been resumed. At several places the armed mobs have been dispersed, or are maintaining an ineffectual struggle against the troops sent to deal with them. It is true that order has not been fully restored, but the blockade at almost every point has been broken, and it is not likely that the resistance will be anywhere prolonged. The chief work remaining to be done is that of meting out punishment to the captured rioters. The War Department closed on Monday night for the first time since the beginning of the strike, and the Secretary of War has issued orders that there shall be no further movements of Federal troops unless fresh troubles occur. During the riots at San Francisco on Wednesday week seven persons were killed; and at Chicago, on the same night, fifteen persons were killed. The last outburst of which we have a report was at Scranton, in Pennsylvania, on Wednesday last, when several persons were shot, and the Mayor was severely wounded. Mr. Vanderbilt has presented his railway employes with 100,000 dol., to be divided among them, in acknowledgment of their forbearance from the strike. Affairs are quiet in the Pennsylvania mining districts. The strike continues, but pumping operations have been resumed.

The Republican party in Ohio have nominated Mr. William H. West as their candidate for Governor.

Mr. Noyes, the new Minister to the French Republic, sailed from New York on Tuesday for Europe, on board the Illinois.

BRAZIL.

A bill has been brought before the Provincial Legislature authorising the Government to spend one million currency in wheat seed for distribution amongst the farmers. The great floods in the south have subsided, but the losses of sheep, which have been in some districts very heavy, are not yet known.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

The latest news from the Cape represents the condition of the Transvaal to be most satisfactory. The bill for the annexation of Griqualand West has passed through Committee in the Cape Assembly, with some amendments. The annexation of Zululand is being discussed in Natal.

INDIA.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times, telegraphing last Sunday, says, regarding the famine, that the prospect is far from reassuring, although not yet absolutely helpless. During the past week the rainfall has been scanty everywhere, except in Bengal, Burmah, Assam, and parts of the Central Provinces and Rajpootana. Elsewhere great anxiety is felt, and in some places the crops have already suffered much damage. Great and increasing apprehension is felt respecting the prospects of Madras and Mysore; and the situation in Bombay is also critical, but in a less degree. The correspondent says that if the gloomy anticipations regarding Southern India are fulfilled, as seems only too probable, the calamity will be such as to tax the resources of the country to their utmost. The Government, however, is fully alive to its responsibility, and apparently is doing everything in its power to be prepared for the worst.

A telegram from the Viceroy of India, dated July 31, gives some details respecting the famine. He states the results of inquiries respecting the grain supplies available for export to the suffering districts, and briefly reports the prospects of the season throughout India. In the North-West Provinces and Oude the drought continues, and causes anxiety and rise of prices, but there is still time for an average harvest. In Bombay the absence of rain in Goojerat causes anxiety, and the rainfall on the western coast is at present very small for the season. The Nizam's territory has been much distressed, owing to there having been no rain for one month, but two inches have just fallen. In Mysore and Coorg the rain generally is not abundant; and more is needed to save part of the young crop. In Madras there have been fair showers in all the districts, except Nellore and Kurnool. The reports concerning other districts are, on the whole, satisfactory. In Madras there were 913,000 persons on the works, and 731,000 charitably relieved. In Mysore, 48,000 on the works, and 138,000 charitably relieved. In Bombay, 256,000 on the works, and 149,000 charitably relieved.

Lord Salisbury, presiding yesterday week at the distribution of prizes at the Royal Indian Engineering College, at Cooper's-hill, spoke of the impending famine in Southern India as an event calculated to awaken the gravest anxiety.

A telegram from Bombay states that Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, son of the deceased Baronet, has been unanimously elected head of the Parsee community, in place of his father.

Mr. J. B. Phear, late member of the High Court of Judicature, Calcutta, has been appointed to the Chief Justiceship of Ceylon, vacant by the death of Sir W. Hackett.

The Overland Mail has brought news from Bombay to July 6, and from Calcutta to July 3. The Indian papers refer to the increasing anxiety respecting the famine in Southern India, but of this we have later news by telegraph.

The Times of India in its summary of news says:—

Intelligence has been received here, from what are regarded as trustworthy sources, which seems to show that Persia has no intention of assuming a hostile attitude towards Turkey at this present juncture. Persia apparently considers that her main interests as a Mussulman State, and one of the few that still maintains independence, are identical with those of the Porte. Differences, however, exist between the two Courts; but they appear not to be of such a nature as to threaten any serious breach.

A native paper reports that Lord Lytton is at present engaged in "making a scheme for the appointment of natives to the higher ranks of the Civil Service."

The Punjab Bank has suspended payment in consequence of a sudden run upon it, caused by disquieting articles in the newspapers.

It is intended to arm all the volunteer corps in India with the Henry-Martini rifle in the course of the current year.

One important political advantage resulting from the extension of the electric telegraph to Quetta is that Kandahar news can now reach India in six days, instead of three weeks or a month, as formerly.

The Bombay Gazette publishes the following items:—

On June 30 a public meeting was held in the Townhall—the Governor presiding—to form a European volunteer corps. Opposition was shown to the movement by a number of natives; but, nevertheless, the motion that such a corps should be formed at once was carried.

The finding of the court-martial on Quartermaster-Sergeant Miller, accused of writing a letter to the Standard, has been ordered by the Commander-in-Chief to take effect, although the verdict was set aside by the Judge-Advocate-General as illegal. Miller has been reduced to the ranks.

Information has been received in Bombay of disturbances in Muscat between the Sultan Syud Toorkee and an army of rebels. British residents had to fly from the city and take up their residence in ships in the harbour. Her Majesty's ship Teazer took the part of the Sultan, and shelled the rebels, who were eventually compelled to retreat.

AUSTRALIA.

Sir Arthur Blyth, the Agent-General for South Australia, has received the following telegram from Adelaide, dated July 26:—

The new lines of railway sanctioned last Session are advancing rapidly, three being in progress, and tenders invited for Oct. 1 for the construction of 200 miles of the line from Port Augusta northwards. The telegraph to Eucla is completed with iron poles throughout. This is the South Australian half of the telegraph line connecting South Australia with Western Australia. Send an extra emigrant-ship in October. A fortnightly mail service, via Suez, has been suggested by the South Australian Government to the adjoining colonies. The revenue for 1876-7 has exceeded the estimates. The following vessels have arrived, all well:—Heaton Hall, Pak Wau (London), and Papa (Hamburg). Harvest prospects are good, and a largely increased area is under crop. Price of wheat per bushel, 7s. 8d.

We have news from Melbourne to June 12 by the overland mail. Some heads of intelligence are subjoined:—

The new Parliament assembled on May 22, when the members were sworn. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy was elected Speaker, and the House then adjourned until June 26. The Ministry have been re-elected without opposition. The Cabinet is composed as follows:—Mr. Berry, Chief Secretary and Treasurer; Mr. Longmore, Lands; Mr. Paterson, Public Works; Mr. Smith, Mines; Mr. Lalor, Customs; Mr. Wood, Railways; Mr. Grant, Justice; and Mr. Trench, Attorney-General.

The Government are pledged to a policy of increased protection. They also propose the taxation of large estates, owners of property under £2500 being exempt, and also town lands.

The Ministerial majority in Parliament numbers thirty-six votes. The result of the elections is considered to be due to the absence of organisation on the part of the Freetraders. The Vice-President of the Executive Council of Queensland has addressed to the Agent-General in London for Queensland a letter, covering a circular notification to the chief secretaries of New South Wales, Victoria, Tasmania, South Australia, and New Zealand, as to the present position of the Chinese question as affecting that Government, and requests him to bring the matter under the notice of her Majesty's Government.

The people (he writes) had succeeded by their own efforts in founding a prosperous and well-ordered State. They were now threatened with a large and unrestricted Chinese immigration, and he did not hesitate to say that the consequences of this immigration were contemplated with serious misgivings by all classes. Industrious, frugal, and law-abiding as the Chinese people might be, they were not colonists in the best sense of the term. It was possible, indeed, that their presence there in large numbers might produce an industrial activity of a certain kind; but it would be of a kind different from that which had hitherto contributed to their prosperity. The probability was that, in a country so sparsely populated as Queensland now is, it would entirely supplant European labour; and the creation of a large, intelligent, docile, but servile class would, he did not doubt, seriously affect and change the conditions upon which the political system of Queensland was founded. But whether the unrestricted introduction of Chinese be in itself a good thing or a bad thing, he begged that the Agent-General would impress upon Lord Carnarvon that in this choice the Executive Council should not be constrained by any forced interpretation of international obligations. As British subjects, they valued the privileges they possessed; but if they were to be called upon to sacrifice their hopes of perfecting a community which had been founded on principles of social and political equality, they were not content to do so without a most earnest effort to avert such a calamity. He hoped, therefore, that the Agent-General would very frankly explain to Lord Carnarvon that the people were most anxious to be allowed to grow in their own way; that they should, in fact, be permitted to encourage or discourage Chinese immigration as they pleased, and that the existence of international obligations between Great Britain and the empire of China should not be allowed to be a pretext for forcing upon them a Chinese population against their wishes or their interests.

In the circular notification the Vice-President says:—

We fear that both our rights and our civilisation may be compromised and that our social and political systems may be imperilled if, on any plea whatever, a Chinese immigration is forced upon us against our wishes and against our interests. The people of this portion of Australia will be the first to feel the change and its consequences; but I deem it to be my duty, on the part of this Government, to point out to you that it will not be confined to them alone.

SCENERY OF THE TYROL.

A series of fine Engravings, from the landscape pictures by G. Seelos, of the romantic scenery of the Ampezzaner-Thal, in the Austrian Tyrol, is published at Vienna by Herr Waldheim, who permits us to reproduce the striking view of "Monte Cristallo and the Dürren-See." The mountains of dolomite formation here display their most remarkable and characteristic features. At Schludersbach, near Landro, the centre of this picturesque district, the tourist may start for the ascent of Monte Piano, a height of 7200 ft., commanding a wondrous panorama, which extends to the Gross-Glockner, in a north-easterly direction, and southwards to the Italian mountains of Cadore. Another excursion is that which leads to the more difficult ascent of Monte Cristallo, which is not to be accomplished without the aid of ropes and crampons, but will afford a sufficient recompense, no doubt, to a member of the Alpine Club, in the honour of such a rare achievement. This mountain is above 10,000 ft. high, with a summit broken into sundry peaks and pinnacles of various shapes, which are sometimes curiously reflected in the still waters of the lake below. The Dürren-See, however, does not claim much importance as a lake, being annually dried up for several months of the year. This is also the case with several other sheets of water in the same district connected with the Toblacher-See. The view presented by Herr Seelos gives a faithful representation of Monte Cristallo.

At the annual competition for the international trophy at Altcar on Tuesday there were four teams of ten each, representing England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, and the firing was at 200 yards, 500 yards, and 600 yards; seven shots at each range. The English team, which has won the trophy every year, were again victorious, making an aggregate of 714 points, the Scotch scoring 699, the Welsh 688, and the Irish 675. The highest individual score was made by Private Cox (Liverpool Rifle Brigade), who made 79. Private Jamieson (15th L.R.V.), the Queen's Prizeman, scored 77, the best in the Scotch team.

Mr. Watkin, Liberal, was returned for Great Grimsby on Wednesday by a majority of 384 over Major Seddon, the Conservative candidate. The vacancy was caused by the death of Mr. Chapman, who was a supporter of the Government.—Colonel Corbett, the senior member for the Southern Division of the county of Salop, who has represented the constituency nine years in the Conservative interest, has issued an address announcing his resignation. He states that the health of some members of his family compels him to seek a residence in a warmer climate.

The hearing of the charge of fraud against Dr. Baxter Langley, the late chairman, and Mr. Swindlehurst, the late secretary of the Artisans' Dwellings Company, and Mr. E. Saffery, estate agent, was resumed at Bow-street on Wednesday. Evidence was given tracing to the defendants a portion of the purchase money paid by the company for the Cann Hall estate, which was bought for £35,000, but for which the company was charged £48,000. A charge respecting the sale of the Shaftesbury Park estate, which chiefly affects Saffery, was also opened, and the case was again adjourned for a night, the defendants being admitted to bail as before. In the course of the proceedings Mr. Vaughan stated that he had made up his mind to commit all the defendants for trial.

A conference was held last Saturday at the rooms of the Medical Society, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, to consider the best means of bringing into general and practical use in the metropolis the provident dispensary system now adopted in many large towns. The conference was called by the Medical Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, and Mr. Timothy Holmes presided, there being present, among others, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Dr. Ford Anderson, Captain Fortescue, Mr. Jabez Hogg, Dr. Joseph Rogers, Dr. Naukivell, Dr. P. Steward, Mr. A. H. Hill, and Mr. Lock. The chairman said the meeting had assembled to confer upon three points especially, those being, "What steps should be taken to increase the number of efficient provident dispensaries in London? What should be the relations of the provident dispensaries to the hospitals? Is it possible to secure a correspondence between the different provident dispensaries in London, so that a member of a provident dispensary when he removes to another district can, without delay and without entrance fee, immediately obtain medical relief in the provident dispensary nearest his own residence?" A resolution was agreed to, as the result of the conference, that a committee should be appointed to report upon the best means of giving effect to the views expressed, and that this committee should be composed of representatives of free hospitals and dispensaries and other cognate institutions in the metropolis, of representatives of the metropolitan provident dispensaries, and of the members of the medical committee of the Charity Organisation Society, and that Mr. Timothy Holmes should be asked to be chairman of the committee so composed.

A PICNIC IN THE CORK WOODS, NEAR GIBRALTAR.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Prime Minister, recuperating in that quiet haven where no Biggar's ever troubling and his Lordship is at rest, may sometimes feel a strong desire for the excitement of the House of Commons. Lord Beaconsfield, at any rate, has been induced to make his first visit to the Lower House since his elevation to the Peerage, drawn thither by the unparalleled proceedings of the small band of Irish "obstructionists," which is the new name coined expressly for them. The noble Earl evidently took the liveliest interest in the concluding scenes of the longest sitting on record, as will be found duly recorded in our chronicle of the Commons.

Naught has occurred to ruffle the constitutional placidity of the Lords. Few who cherish a partiality for pilchards or herrings as a breakfast relish could have withheld their sympathy from the Duke of Somerset yesterday week, when his Grace, by an earnest protest, elicited from the Duke of Richmond the assurance that something should be done to effectually prevent the practice in vogue off the Cornish coast of blowing up shoals of these fish with dynamite. Nor could objection be justly taken to Lord Redesdale for following up his assault on "The Priest in Absolution" by a skirmishing attack on the Rev. Mr. Berkeley, of Allhallows, Southwark, seeing that the noble Earl based his complaints of that clergyman's High Church proclivities on a petition from the inhabitants of the district. But, a different complexion having been put upon the alleged Popish practices of the reverend gentleman by a simple explanation from the Bishop of Winchester, his Lordship expressed himself satisfied. An hour and ten minutes sufficed for their Lordships to transact their business yesterday week. Monday's sitting was prolonged to close upon three hours, the time being occupied by Earl Cadogan's explanation of the provisions of the new Army Warrant and a debate on the warrant. In the opinion of the Under-Secretary of State for War and the Duke of Cambridge, the retiring scheme of the War Office was a just one, and hit the happy medium between compulsory retirement and the present system. His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, indeed, in the course of the few remarks he made, couched in a frank and generous spirit to all ranks of officers, ventured to say that the proposals of the War Office were generous. The Marquis of Lansdowne, whilst approving the scheme generally, urged that the more important subject of the reorganisation of the Army should be considered before the question of promotion and retirement. Albeit the Duke of Cambridge could not see why the vital subject of reorganisation should of necessity have priority over the new Army Warrant. Lord Cardwell agreed with the Marquis of Lansdowne on this point. A few other Peers spoke in general support of the Government propositions, Lord Strathnairn concurring with Earl Fortescue that the Ministry would give the question of physical attainments the consideration which it deserved.

The appointment of the Russian Prince Tcherkaskoi Civil Commissioner in Bulgaria appears to have exercised the minds of a few of their Lordships. This topic monopolised the three-quarters of an hour that the House sat on Tuesday. Lord Kinnaird inquired of the Foreign Secretary whether this was the same Prince who governed Poland after the insurrection of 1863; and also asked what was the present state of Poland, his reasons for putting the question being that the Great Powers might be called upon to mediate between Russia and Turkey before long, and that he had no desire to see Bulgaria Russianised. Lord Houghton and Lord Stanley of Alderley, dwelling on the severities of Russian rule in Poland, agreed in thinking Lord Kinnaird's query opportune. Lord Derby's reply was characteristically cautious and judicious. The noble Earl said Prince Tcherkaskoi was the same personage who governed Poland fourteen years ago; but the Foreign Secretary urged that it would not be desirable just now to produce any papers which might exist having reference to Russian administration in Poland.

The Royal assent was given by Commission, on Thursday, to the Game Laws (Scotland) Amendment Bill and to several other measures. The East India Loans Bill and the Police Expenses (Continuance) Bill, from the Commons, were read the first time. Several other measures of minor importance were advanced a stage.

COMMONS.

The principal topic of the week has been the exceptionally protracted sitting which lasted from Tuesday afternoon till Wednesday evening, and which gave practical proof of the inutility of the Resolutions introduced with admirable feeling and temper by Sir Stafford Northcote yesterday week. On the latter evening the Chancellor of the Exchequer began by moving the postponement of the orders of the day until after the notice of motion relating to the business of the House had been considered. Preliminary objections to this course were taken by Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Mitchell-Henry, and various Irish members. The hon. member for Swansea moved that the question should be postponed till Monday, and argued that the rights of minorities would be limited by the adoption of the Government Resolutions. Mr. Whalley and Mr. Fawcett having followed in the same strain, and, having been answered by Mr. Newdegate, the Marquis of Hartington supported the proposals of the Ministry, and urged the House to lose no time in considering them, especially as they were only intended to have effect during the last few days of the expiring Session. The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied to the objections of Mr. Dillwyn and Mr. Fawcett, received the cordial approval of Mr. Chamberlain, and, despite the somewhat magniloquent opposition of Mr. Sullivan, Sir Stafford Northcote had the satisfaction of seeing his motion carried by 319 votes against 40. Forthwith the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced in a calm and dignified speech his first Resolution:—

That, when a member, after being twice declared out of order, shall be pronounced by Mr. Speaker, or by the Chairman of Committees, as the case may be, to be disregarding the authority of the chair, the debate shall be at once suspended; and, on a motion being made in the House that the member be not heard during the remainder of the debate, or during the sitting of the Committee, such motion, after the member complained of has been heard in explanation, shall be put without further debate.

The right hon. gentleman, whose unflinching patience and courtesy throughout the unruly conduct of the Irish "obstructionists" cannot be too warmly praised, disclaimed any intention or desire to restrict the rights of any minorities in the House; skillfully avoided any direct reference to the unusual and irrational course a few Irish Home-Rule members have thought fit to pursue; but, at the same time, quietly but resolutely conveyed in one pregnant sentence what powers the House possesses. Sir Stafford Northcote said:—

The House has the supreme power of expelling a member (hear, hear); of imprisoning him for contempt (hear, hear); of censuring him; of compelling his attendance; and of dispensing with it.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer added, in conclusion,

I have already said that it is our intention to give our best study and consideration to this subject during the recess, and to make a proposition which we would not attempt to propose to the House as a whole, but which should be submitted to a carefully selected Committee for full consideration when we next assemble. I believe the time has come for such consideration (hear, hear), and I trust the House may accede to that proposal. But, for the present, and with a view to the exigencies of the moment—to carry through the business of the Session and to prevent wrangles and disputes unseemly and most injurious to our reputation—I hope and trust the House will accept and support this resolution (hear, hear). . . . I cannot imagine that any member who regards the history and thinks of the past glories of this assembly will hesitate to assist in maintaining unimpaired the glories which have been handed down to us (loud cheers).

Picking the wheat from the chaff of the debate, we may briefly state that the Resolution was firmly supported by Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Raikes, the Marquis of Hartington, and Mr. Gladstone, who administered a dignified rebuke to Mr. Sullivan, of whom he asked whether there was not an almost ludicrous contrast between the weight and force of the expressions he had used and the proposition before the House? Mr. O'Connor Power had previously endeavoured to justify a policy of obstruction, and Mr. Parnell and Mr. Biggar had defended their action on the plea that, inasmuch as the House had used against Irish measures the rule for preventing opposed measures being taken after 12.30 p.m., they had put the same rule in force against English measures. Some mirth was raised by Major O'Gorman, who, having on a previous evening given hon. members a lesson in English History now considered himself entitled to correct the grammar of the Resolution. The hon. and gallant member, however, found it a matter of impossibility to draw up an amendment which he contemplated moving. After a fruitless effort to write down the terms of his amendment, the gallant Major had to resign the task in despair. Fuming, it may be, under this disability, Major O'Gorman sat for some time until he was driven to rise again to warn the "great English people" to be careful of their liberties lest another Cromwell should walk into that House and say, "Take away that bauble!" A few amendments were summarily disposed of; and the first Resolution was then adopted by 282 votes against 32. Thereafter the second Resolution was discussed, and eventually carried by 250 against 7 votes. The Resolution (amended in accordance with a motion by Mr. Anderson to restrict its application to "each separate motion") ran thus in its original form:—

That, in Committee of the whole House, no member have power to move more than once during the debate on the same question either that the Chairman do report progress or that the Chairman leave the chair, nor to speak more than once on such motion, and that no member who has made one of those motions have power to make the other on the same question.

Saturday afternoon last was taken up with a discussion of the Scottish Sheriff Courts Bill, apropos of the motion to go into Committee; with the passing through Committee of the East India Loan Bill, unburdened by Sir George Campbell's amendment, and unattenuated by Mr. O'Donnell's amendment to limit by one half the sum to be levied in India; and with certain miscellaneous business. The ire of Mr. McLaren was excited by progress being reported as soon as the House had gone into Committee on the above-mentioned Scotch measure. The hon. member complained that Scotland, though it paid £7,000,000 a year in taxation, was treated by the Government as if it were a Crown colony which had been conquered by an army or a fleet. But Sir Stafford Northcote appeased the wrath of Mr. McLaren; and the only other animated incident of the sitting was Mr. Biggar's more forcible than polite objection to The O'Donoghue as a member of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Bill Committee on the ground that he was "not a proper representative of the Irish party." But the appointment of The O'Donoghue was agreed to nevertheless by 56 against 2 votes.

Mr. Biggar's attack on The O'Donoghue was referred to by the hon. member for Tralee on Monday, when the proverbial difficulty of making a purse out of a porcine ear received a fresh illustration. The O'Donoghue complained that the language used by the member for Cavan was "liable to a very injurious interpretation," adverse to his character. Mr. Biggar, in lieu of retracting or explaining the grounds for his grave statement, said he would be ready to give his reasons whenever The O'Donoghue should be again proposed as member of any Committee. Whereupon Sir Stafford Northcote, amid cheers, insisted that further explanation was necessary. The O'Donoghue contented himself with repeating the words which Mr. Biggar was reported to have used against him. "Mr. Speaker, Sir," began Mr. Biggar, as is his wont; and his justification simply amounted to a reference to some past debate out of which the hon. member for Tralee "did not come very pleasantly." This was virtually the sole excuse the member for Cavan had to give for the insinuations he had made. Sir William Harcourt having given Mr. Biggar a lesson in etiquette, the Speaker, by the exercise of a little firmness and decision brought this personal question to a close. Replying to the Marquis of Hartington, the Chancellor of the Exchequer then enumerated the measures which the Government will have to sacrifice. These were the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Bill, the Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill, the Factories and Workshops Bill, and the Post-Office Money-Orders Bill. As for the date of prorogation, Sir Stafford Northcote could hold out no hope of the business of the House being finished before Wednesday, Aug. 15. In concluding his statement, the right hon. gentleman seized the opportunity of expressing the deep regret which every member of the Ministry felt at the sudden death of Mr. Ward Hunt, the First Lord of the Admiralty. The Marquis of Hartington, in a few well-chosen words, showed how fully those who sat on the Opposition side of the House shared in the general feeling of regret at the lamentable event. The noble Lord added:—

We are all aware of the zeal with which he discharged his official duties, and our feelings of regret are aggravated by the reflection that his end may have been hastened by the too great pertinacity with which he resolved to remain at his post and do his duty in the House, even when, as many of us can testify, he was physically unable for the task (Cheers).

In Committee on the South Africa Bill, the rest of the night was spent, many hours being wasted by the obstructive tactics of Messrs. Parnell, Biggar, O'Donnell, and Callan, who joined Mr. Courtney in his opposition to the measure, and who succeeded so well in their determined course of action that by the hour the House adjourned (2.20 a.m.) such little progress had been made that only clause 3, as amended, had been agreed to.

The memorable sitting of Tuesday was begun at the usual time, the Speaker taking the chair a few minutes before four o'clock. Mr. Fawcett was the first to occupy the attention of the House. Despite the protest of that somewhat grandiose personage, Sir J. McGarrel Hogg, the hon. member for Hackney was successful in his motion to postpone till Monday next the consideration of the Lords' amendment to the Metropolitan Street Improvements Bill. This measure originally granted permission for a new thoroughfare to be made from Shorditch, via Clerkenwell, Bloomsbury, and the Seven Dials, to Charing-cross; but Mr. Fawcett based his motion on the fact that the House of Lords had, at the instance of the Marquis of Salisbury, inserted a clause to give special protection to his Lordship's property by excluding from the operation of the bill the squalid districts through which the proposed new road from Tottenham-court-road to Charing-cross would run. Mr. Fawcett's motion was agreed to by 98 against 96 votes. The Chancellor of the Exchequer informed Mr. Whalley that it would not be necessary to ask for a fresh vote of money to defray the expense of conveying the reinforcements to the East. It was quite early in the evening when, the remaining questions having been disposed of, the House went into Committee on the South Africa Bill. The prolonged opposition was commenced by Mr. O'Donnell, who, on clause 4 being brought forward, immediately moved that progress should be reported, his alleged reason for doing so being that he might ask the Government whether, having in the clauses already passed received full authority from the House to ask the colonies to federate or unite on any terms they pleased, they thought there was any need to take up further time with the bill. But Mr. Whalley having drawn from the Chairman an admission that Mr. O'Donnell was introducing a discussion which ought to have been raised on the second reading, a desultory conversation ensued on the motion. Mr. Parnell, with characteristic imperturbability, was indulging in one of his long speeches, when first Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, and next Sir William Harcourt, the latter lashing himself into a white heat, called the hon. member for Meath to order. The equanimity of Mr. Parnell was not to be disturbed by the rotund objurgations of the right hon. member for Oxford. He resolutely pursued his determined course of obstruction to the various clauses, acting in concert with Mr. Biggar, Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. O'Connor Power, Mr. Gray, and Captain Nolan. To see the hon. member for Meath—a slender and rather good-looking young Irishman a little over thirty, with a determined cast of features, and bearded as a pard—quietly rise time after time, and, undeterred by the shouts and interruptions of angry Conservatives, unflinchingly say his say, must have occasioned any stranger present the utmost surprise. Mr. Parnell has the outward appearance of a gentleman. He is able, though obstinate. Nothing seems more surprising than that patriotism (with an emphasis on pat) should have thrown the hon. member for Meath into close companionship with Mr. Biggar, whose uncouthness of speech and manner form a marked contrast to the refinement of Mr. Parnell. Not to weary the reader with a dry recapitulation of the many amendments that were moved by Mr. Parnell or his coadjutors, or of the several calls to order that ensued, we may briefly summarise the chief features of this remarkable sitting. As the evening wore on, and the small band of Irishmen, with whom Mr. Courtney was for a time associated, exhibited no signs of relaxing their opposition one whit, even Mr. W. E. Forster was provoked to utter a word of defiance. The right hon. gentleman, with characteristic English manliness and straightforwardness of speech, declared that although he was sixty years of age he, for one, was willing to make some sacrifice and to support the Government in carrying the bill in the teeth of this determined opposition. Cheers greeted this emphatic statement of Mr. Forster—cheers which indicated that the sturdy majority were ready "to make a night of it." It was mainly by incessantly moving puerile amendments to clause after clause, or by moving that progress should be reported, that Mr. O'Donnell and his colleagues maintained their resistance during the small hours and during the whole of Wednesday morning and into the afternoon of Wednesday. Mr. Butt and the majority of Irish members, it should be mentioned, offered no encouragement to these un-Parliamentary tactics. Indeed Mr. Butt, provoked beyond endurance by some more audacious assertion than usual from Mr. O'Donnell, said, with warmth:—

I deny that those who act contrary to the pledges given to the Irish party are members of that party. I know that the Irish party have repudiated the hon. member for Dungarvan (loud cheers). I would be false to my countrymen if I did not say that; and if I thought the hon. member represented the Irish party, and if the Irish party represented my country—and he does not represent my country—I would retire from Irish politics as from a vulgar brawl in which no man can take part with dignity to himself or advantage to his country (loud cheers).

The Chairman gallantly kept the chair till a little after four in the morning, when he was relieved by Mr. Childers, Mr. W. H. Smith and Sir H. Selwyn-Ibbetson thereafter occupying the chair in turn till Mr. Raikes returned. Over a hundred members remained till six o'clock to outvote the handful of obstructives; and Mr. Forster and Sir William Harcourt still faced the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Mr. Lowther. Sir Stafford Northcote was not relieved till about half-past eight by Mr. Cross. After an absence of a few hours only, the Chancellor of the Exchequer returned to find Mr. O'Donnell and Mr. Biggar yet opposing the bill. A quiet intimation from the Leader of the House that it might be necessary to concert means soon for effectually stopping the erratic conduct of the obstructive members at length brought Mr. O'Donnell to reason. Opposition was at length relaxed; and at ten minutes past two on Wednesday afternoon the South Africa Bill, as amended, was ordered to be reported, amid loud cheers. But the sitting was not over even then. The Speaker took the chair. Not unreasonably, Mr. Butt thought it was too late, "at that advanced hour of Tuesday's sitting," to proceed with the Irish Judicature Bill. But the measure, as amended was taken into consideration; and Mr. Parnell and Mr. Biggar resumed their obstructive policy by dividing the House again and again, the Attorney-General for Ireland maintaining his good temper all the time, however. During one of these many divisions, Lord Beaconsfield entered the Peers' gallery for the first time since he left the House of Commons for "another place." The noble Earl, who seemed in good health, and who had his lily-white hands protected by lavender kid gloves from contact with any part of the Lower Chamber, regarded the scene below with some curiosity. The Prime Minister scrutinised the trio of "obstructionists" who were left (Mr. Parnell, Mr. Biggar, and Captain Nolan) through his eyeglass; and, on being joined by Sir Stafford Northcote, his Lordship plainly delivered himself of a neat piece of Disraelian irony, for the subtle expression which passes for a smile with the Premier creased his face, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer quite basked in the smile of his Leader, as who should say—doth not a meeting like this make amends? Clause 13 having been reached, the bill was proceeded with no further that day; and, the remaining orders of the day having been rapidly got through, the longest sitting on record ended, amid the hearty cheers of hon. members and the grin of Mr. Biggar, at ten minutes past six on Wednesday evening, the House having sat for twenty-six hours and ten minutes.

On Thursday Mr. Newdegate gave notice that on the first convenient day he would ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government intended to take any steps in order to mark the sense of the House at the conduct of certain members in obstructing the business of Parliament—conduct that proved especially inconvenient to the House on Tuesday and Wednesday last. Mr. Parnell, rising in his usual place, said that, having heard the notice just given by Mr. Newdegate, he should also give notice that he would ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intended, as leader of the House, to propose or adopt any method whereby unprotected or independent members of the House may be protected from the constant interruptions to which they were subjected whilst endeavouring to address the Chair on the subject matter before the House; and also whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in view of the practice now become common, of originating discussions on points of order, intends to adopt any means of preventing this practice. Whilst the notice of Mr. Newdegate was received with general applause, that of the hon. member for Meath was met with ironical cheers and laughter. The Board of Education (Scotland) Continuance Bill and the Sheriffs' Courts (Scotland) Bill passed through Committee.

A PICNIC NEAR GIBRALTAR.

The gallant officers bearing her Majesty's commission, who happen to be stationed with their regiments or on the staff in the garrison of the famous "Rock," which is more familiarly spoken of as "Gib," do not find it an intolerable place of sojourn when they have access to pleasant local society. This depends, indeed, very much upon the ladies, of whom there is usually a fair proportion in residence, and with whom it is most desirable, at Gibraltar and everywhere else, to cultivate an amicable acquaintance to the extent of one's personal claims and social opportunities. The Spanish mainland, adjacent to this really isolated British fortress, within an easy ride of the military quarters, presents some very agreeable spots for a picnic party; and our illustration of a scene in the Cork Woods should convince all friends at home that the hardships of garrison service are not without some occasional compensation. There is also some good shooting, we are told, at a different season of the year; and a pack of fox-hounds, the celebrated "Calpe Hunt," providing suitable entertainment for our sporting countrymen. These local advantages will probably continue, whatever may become of the rather questionable trading interests of Gibraltar, under the new ordinance for the regulation of the Customs dues at that port.

A fine new church, which has been erected at Wentworth, near Rotherham, by Earl Fitzwilliam and other members of the family, to perpetuate the memory of their parents, at a cost of £25,000, was consecrated on Tuesday by the Archbishop of York.

The Bishop of St. Albans reopened the restored Church of St. Lawrence, Blackmore, Essex, last Saturday. On the same day the Bishop opened a temporary church for the new district of All Saints, Southend, Essex; the gift of the site and of the endowment having been bequeathed by the late Miss Heygate.

A chapel-of-ease, which has been built by the Marchioness of Westminster and Lord Wolverton, was opened at West Orchard, Dorset, on the 12th inst. It is in the Early English style, from designs of Mr. T. H. Wyatt. The sermon was preached by the Archbishop of York.

A new church which has been erected at Porton, a hamlet in the parish of Idmister, Wilts, to replace the old chapel of St. Nicholas, was consecrated last week. It is in the Decorated style, from designs of Mr. Pearson, of Harley-street, and it will accommodate 153 worshippers. It has cost about £1500. The Bishop of Salisbury preached.

The parish church of Netherhampton, in Wilts, has been rebuilt at a cost of £1900, towards which the Earl of Pembroke has contributed about £1500, and the formal reopening of the edifice took place last week, the Bishop of Salisbury attending the service. The building is in the Decorated English style of architecture of a simple type.

The foundation-stone of the new Church of St. James, in Great Cheetham-street, Higher Broughton, Manchester, was laid on Monday night by Mr. S. W. Clowes, M.P. for North Leicestershire. The edifice will accommodate 600 worshippers, and is estimated to cost £7000. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Clowes, M.P., and the Bishop of Manchester.

On the 19th ult. the new church which has been erected by Sir Curtis and Lady Lampson, of Rowfant, at Copthorne, was opened by the Bishop of Chichester. The church is a handsome building in stone, with a spire commanding a very distant prospect. It is in the Early English style, and no expense has been spared by the founders. The east window, representing, among other subjects, the Evangelist and Apostle St. John, after whom the church is named, was the gift of Messrs. George and Henry Lampson.

Bishop Steere on Monday night gave an address before the members of the St. Paul's Foreign and Colonial Mission Union, at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, on the work going on at Zanzibar and Central Africa. This mission has now schools at Zanzibar for children freed from slavery, and a settlement for freed slaves at Mayasi, 130 miles from the coast on the mainland. They were also building a memorial church and schools on the site formerly occupied by the slave market at Zanzibar, and intended to add a hospital. There was great need for men and money to carry on the work and extend it.

A return to the House of Lords has been printed of the various sources from which the income of the see of Sodor and Man is derived, and its amount, with a letter from the Lieutenant-Governor of the Isle of Man to the Secretary of State. The Lieutenant-Governor on the 11th ult. forwarded a letter to the Secretary of State as to the disposal of £500 a year, which it was proposed to withdraw from the income of the bishopric of Sodor and Man, and to apply in the augmentation of the livings within the diocese. There are seventeen livings in the Isle of Man, twelve in the gift of the Crown and five in that of the Bishop. The Lieutenant-Governor suggested that the livings in the gift of the Bishop should benefit in equal manner with those in the gift of the Crown.

The committee of the Additional Home Bishoprics Endowment Fund has held its last meeting for the session. Mr. Cazenove, in the absence of the Earl of Devon, presided. It was reported that the fund had received during the past twelve months contributions amounting to upwards of £18,000, which had from time to time been invested in four per cent railway stock; that from these investments £10,000 stock had been transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners on account of the St. Albans Bishopric Fund, and £2000 had been made over to the Truro Bishopric Fund, to which a further transfer was about to be made. A letter was read from Mr. E. Carlyon, local secretary to the Truro Endowment Fund, stating that, with the further help promised by the Central Fund, they were in a position to transfer to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners at once, for the benefit of that fund, the additional £500 a year guaranteed to be raised within five years from the foundation of the bishopric. It appeared that nearly £100,000 had already been locally promised towards the endowment of the new sees proposed in the Government bill. On the motion of Mr. Beresford-Hope, seconded by Canon Gregory, it was decided that the work of the fund should continue to be organised by the staff of the Additional Curates Society, to whom a cordial vote of thanks for their past services was ordered to be entered on the minutes.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. Horace Davey, Q.C., M.A., late Stowell Fellow of University College, has been appointed to succeed Sir Henry Cotton as Counsel to Oxford University.

A meeting of the Convocation of London University was held yesterday week (Dr. F. Wood presiding) to consider the action of the Senate in adopting Mr. Russell Gurney's Permissive Act, providing for the admission of women to medical degrees. A long discussion was terminated by the passing of a resolution expressing regret that the Senate had adopted the Act without reference to or consultation with Convocation. In support of the course taken by the Senate it was stated that it was in accordance with an opinion given by the law officers of the Crown.

The graduation ceremonial of Edinburgh University was held on Wednesday in the General Assembly Hall, at the close of the summer session, in presence of a large assembly. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred on the Rev. Mr. Groisart, English Presbyterian minister, Blackburn, and 143 students in medicine and surgery had degrees awarded to them. The closing address was delivered by Professor Sanders.

Professor Allen Thomson, president elect of the British Association, which is this year to hold its annual meeting in Plymouth, has made his last appearance as Professor of Anatomy in the University at Glasgow, when he presided at the ceremony of capping the medical students who had passed the examinations for the various degrees. The Professor entered upon his duties in 1848, so that he has now occupied the chair—which is one of the most important of its kind in the kingdom—for twenty-nine years.

The Builder states that the Mercers' Company have purchased sixteen acres of land in Hammersmith, at a cost of something over £40,000, and on this site buildings will be erected for the St. Paul's School. Mr. Barnes Williams is the company's architect, and will, we suppose, build the new school. The existing school was built from the designs of the late Mr. George Smith, about the year 1823.

On Friday, being the annual prize-day of the City of London School, the prizes in the various departments were distributed by the Lord Mayor. Dr. Abbott, the Head Master, delivered a short address, which was practically a report on the state of the school, its progress, its successes, and its wants. After congratulating the committee on the general condition of the school, he enumerated the principal distinctions gained at the Universities by the pupils. These included a fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, a first-class in the Classical Tripos, two Wranglers, and at Oxford three first classes in Classical Moderations. No less than twelve open scholarships and exhibitions had been gained at the Universities, including two at Balliol College, Oxford.

Lord Salisbury yesterday week attended at the Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's-hill, for the purpose of distributing to the successful students the prizes at the close of the sixth session. In the course of his address to the students on the career of public usefulness which awaits them in India, he stated that there was too much reason to believe that a second period of famine is settling down on the vast district which constitutes Southern India. Colonel Chesney, the president of the institution, announced the intention of the council to create honorary fellowships.

The prizes at the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army were distributed on Tuesday by Mrs. Tait, in the presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, many members of the governing body, and a distinguished company. An exceptional interest attached to the meeting, as it was the first prize distribution since the school had been made independent of the elder branch of the institution at Bath.

Tuesday was the occasion of the annual distribution of prizes at the Royal Naval School, New-cross, to which her Majesty subscribes £100 annually. Lord Gilford, C.B., one of the Lords of the Admiralty, presided. A report of the general examination spoke highly of the attainments of the scholars. J. Slater, first in classics, mathematics, and French, was awarded the gold medal. The Naval cadetship given by the Admiralty had been won by A. H. Freeman, who lately passed first into the Britannia.

On the 26th ult. the annual prize-giving and commemoration of founders was held at King Edward's School, Bromsgrove. The honour list comprised a Ceylon Civil Service appointment, an open Scholarship at St. John's College, a Cookes Scholarship, and a proxime accessit for the Eaton Scholarship at Worcester College, Oxford, besides nine leaving certificates given by the Oxford and Cambridge Examining Board in 1876.

Thursday week was the speech and prize day at Forest School. Four candidates, two with distinction, had gained certificates since the prize-day of 1876; but the success of present candidates and the full report cannot be declared till September. The list of honours read out by the Head Master, besides five certificates gained under the Oxford and Cambridge School Examinations, included G. F. Franks, Balliol College Oxford, Second Class, Final Classical Schools; Robert Frost and G. T. Lee, Matriculation, University of London, First Division; Arthur S. Pagden (elected to an open Scholarship at Wellington College), open Exhibition at King's College, Cambridge; E. S. Shuttleworth, Scholar of St. Mary Hall, Oxford, Third Class, Final Classical School.

The recitations and prize distribution at the Islington Proprietary School took place on Thursday evening. The chair was taken by J. Pearson, Esq., Q.C. The reports of the different examiners in classics, divinity, mathematics, French, German, natural science, drawing, and writing, were of a favourable character. The Rev. R. Wheeler Bush, M.A., Head Master, read a long list of distinctions gained by the pupils, past and present, during the year, at the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, and Edinburgh, at the Civil Service Examinations, and elsewhere.

The following award of foundation scholarships has been made at Highgate School:—P. R. Christie, T. G. Thorp, B. P. French, F. G. Lushington, A. H. Atkinson, B. M. Allen, A. J. Allen, P. M. Lushington.

Exhibition day at the London International College at Isleworth attracted a large number of visitors. The prizes to the successful pupils were distributed by Mr. H. Richard, M.P.

July 18 was the "breaking-up" day at Magdalen College School, Oxford. The Head Master, after some preliminary observations, read out a list of honours gained during the past twelve months, comprising three first classes, as many second classes, three college scholarships, and one exhibition (at Balliol), one an honourable mention for the University junior mathematical scholarships, and three similar distinctions in examinations for college scholarships, two of these being at Corpus. The reports of the examiners in junior classics and mathematics, and in modern languages and natural science were then read, and the distribution of prizes proceeded with. The most important of these were the Sheppard Prize (Classics), which fell to H. W. Cardew (Demy of Magdalen College); the President's Medal for Composition, which was obtained by J. Pratt, the President's Medal for Mathematics, won by E. B. Vincent (Scholar of University College); and the Daubeney Medal for Natural Science, gained by C. J. Parker.

The scholarships tenable at Brighton College for the ensuing year have been awarded to Bienemann, Tippet, Moor, Moriarty, Hughes, Richardson mi., Jackson, and Hamilton; University exhibitions to Jones, Moriarty ma., and Dill.

Thursday week was speech-day at the King's School, Canterbury. The Dean of Canterbury read out the list of distinctions obtained during the past year. The list included the names of T. Field, of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, First-class in Classics, Final Schools; R. L. Otley, Pembroke College, Oxford, proxime accessit for Ireland University Scholarship; J. Dean, Open Classical Scholarship, Hertford College, Oxford; F. T. Harrison, Scholarship, Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; B. H. Latter, Exhibition, Christ Church, Oxford; and others. The exhibitions to the University were awarded to B. H. Latter and F. N. Crowther. The King's Scholarships tenable in the school as follows:—Senior Scholars: W. G. Mosse, S. M. Mason, B. Blaxland, M. Scott. Junior Scholars (open): F. P. Hill (Manchester Grammar School), A. T. Perkins, J. J. Williamson, H. M. Harke, H. M. Villiers (Rev. A. Tabor's, Chesham). Probationers: Cobb, Kenney-Heibert, Armstrong, Gordon, Fielding, Kingsford, Jones, Riden.

The annual distribution of prizes at Berkhamstead School, Herts, came off on Thursday week. Lord Verulam, in his opening address, contrasted the state of the school when he first became acquainted with it some forty years ago with its present flourishing condition. H. Gray (son of the Rev. H. Gray, of Hockliffe, near Leighton) was declared the winner of the annual exhibition of £60. The Head Master, after giving a list of the distinctions won by the boys, stated that in the new scheme as settled by the Charity Commission the maximum age had been extended to eighteen, and that a sum approaching £500 per annum would be given away in exhibitions and scholarships.

A very large gathering of old boys and others attended yesterday week to witness the prize-giving at the Dorset County School. Great satisfaction was expressed at the account of the numerous successes obtained during the year. These comprised an open scholarship at Cambridge, a first class at the London matriculation, and eleven passes, including five honours, in the Cambridge local examinations.

Last week the annual distribution of prizes at Clifton College was held. Lord Ducie, president of the college, presided, and, as the mouthpiece of the governing body, he offered those present their congratulations and thanks. The Rev. Dr. Percival, Head Master, read a list of honours gained by past and present members of the school, which, he said, was a sufficient indication that they had done a very good year's work. He did not remember any year in which they had had such a list of honours to produce.

The prizes to the successful scholars of the Middle Class School Corporation, Cowper-street, City-road, were distributed yesterday week by Sir Arthur Hobhouse, K.C.S.I. Mr. J. G. Fitch, who, at the council's request, superintended the examination of the school, having presented a very satisfactory statement of its results, the report was adopted on the motion of Mr. C. R. Freshfield, M.P., and the prizes were distributed. The Rev. W. Rogers moved a vote of thanks to the Head Master, Dr. Wormell, which was carried with enthusiasm; and the proceedings terminated with thanks to the chairman.

The annual distribution of prizes at Stationers' School took place on Wednesday, at Stationers' Hall, in the presence of a numerous assembly. The Master of the Stationers' Company, Mr. William Rivington, occupied the chair. The reports of the examiners show that the school is in a high condition of efficiency, and that it provides not only an excellent education of the modern type for which it was especially founded, but an adequate training for youths preparing for a professional career or for the Universities. The reports contain a very creditable list of distinctions won by the school during the last few years at Oxford, Cambridge, the London University, Lampeter College, King's College, and the College of Preceptors.

At the distribution of prizes at Chelmsford Grammar School, it was announced that the Head Master, the Rev. J. Tanner, had resigned.

Founder's Day was commemorated at Abingdon School yesterday week. The Rev. J. G. Stafford Hilliard preached the school sermon and Archdeacon Ross gave away the prizes.

The Rev. Edwin Hobson, M.A., Vice-Principal of St. John's College, Battersea, has been appointed Principal of the New College for Schoolmistresses, which is to be established under the auspices of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge and the National Society.

Alderman W. J. R. Cotton, M.P., Chairman of the board of governors, presided at the first annual distribution of prizes to the successful competitors in the midsummer examination of Mary Datchelor Girls' School. The charity is of ancient origin in the City, having been founded for the purpose of apprenticing boys from the lower classes to various trades and crafts. The large accumulation of funds consequent upon the increased value of property in the City, the trustees recently decided, with the sanction of the Charity Commissioners, to devote to the foundation of a middle-class girls' school, under the above title, at Denmark-hill, Camberwell.

THE WAR IN ASIA: SKETCHES IN THE CAMP OF MOUKTAR PASHA, BY ONE OF OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS.

THE REV. W. B. POPE, D.D., THE NEW PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Rev. William Burt Pope, D.D., has been elected President of the Wesleyan Conference at Bristol. He is one of the most distinguished modern preachers and theologians of the Methodist connection. It is doubtful if the Wesleyans have ever had in their ranks a more distinguished theological scholar. He was born in Nova Scotia in the year 1822; but, while he was yet an infant, his parents returned with him to this country and settled in the West of England. He received a classical education in a private school in the neighbourhood of Plymouth. He early showed an aptitude for the ministry and a love for theological study. He went to the Wesleyan Theological Institution at Hoxton for the training of ministers, where he was a diligent student. On leaving that college he was appointed to a circuit in the year 1842. Since that time he has continually gained reputation, and has travelled in some of the most important circuits, including Manchester, Hull, London, and Leeds. As a preacher he is distinguished by his ability in exposition and his acuteness of reasoning. He dwells occasionally upon the most refined theological distinctions, and his sermons are always characterised by close reasoning and spirituality of tone. In the year 1867 he was appointed Divinity Professor in the Wesleyan College at Didsbury, and has continued to fill that post with great ability and assiduity. He is the author of several high-class theological works, and has been for some years the editor of the London Quarterly Review. Among his principal works are "The Prayers of St. Paul," the "Person of Christ," and a "Compendium of Theology." The degree of Doctor of Divinity was recently conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh. It will be his lot to preside over the last conference into which the laymen are not admitted.

The proceedings of the Conference, besides confirming this important change in its representative constitution agreeably to the resolutions passed last year, have been of considerable importance. The statistics of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection are in general satisfactory. The income of the Home Mission and Contingent Fund is £36,919, and more than one hundred home missionaries are employed, fourteen of them in connection with the Army and Navy. Sustentation funds in

RAILWAY HOSPITAL TRAINS FOR THE WAR.

The Berlin Central Committee of the International Association for the Relief of Sick and Wounded Soldiers in the Field has caused two complete ambulance-trains, for the Russian army in the Bulgarian campaign, to be constructed at the chief carriage-factory of the Posen Railway, at Guben. Each train consists of twenty-five carriages. The first carriage is for the accommodation of two medical men or surgeons, each of whom has a comfortable couch to sleep on, a cupboard, writing-desk, lavatory, and other conveniences; the hinder part of this carriage is occupied by the surgeons' assistants. The carriages devoted to provision for the daily wants of the travelling patients contain everything that is required for an orderly household; a complete kitchen, with cooking ranges for baking, stewing, and boiling, is of course included, as may be seen in our Illustration. This kitchen-carriage is followed by its tender, which comprises a larder or pantry and cellar, and a scullery. The carriages designed for the reception of the sick and wounded are very judiciously arranged, with portable beds on each side—namely, six beds at one side and four beds at the other; the space left by the four beds at one side being fitted by a table and washing apparatus, supplied with water by pipes. The draining off foul water, and the ventilation of these carriages, are well provided for. The interior of all the carriages is lined with oil-cloth on the walls and floors, and mats are laid down. The Red Cross is painted on the exterior, with an inscription, in Russian letters, stating that they belong to the Berlin Central Society for the Sick and Wounded. The Emperor of Russia has expressed his thanks, and those of the army, for this beneficent gift in aid of suffering humanity. Both the hospital trains have been made complete, with their furniture, and have been sent to Bucharest.

MILITARY ATHLETIC SPORTS.

The second yearly exhibition of athletic performances by soldiers and officers of the Queen's regular forces was held last week. It took place on the Tuesday and Wednesday, in the cricket-field of the South Camp at Aldershot, instead of at Lillie-bridge, West Brompton, where it was held last year. The arrangements were made under the direction of the honorary secretary, Major Gildea, Inspector of Gymnastics for the Army, with the assistance of an efficient managing committee. The first day's proceedings began with a six-mile race, from the Royal Military College at Sandhurst to the Club-house at South Camp, Aldershot. It was won by soldiers of the 90th Regiment, who ran it in forty-seven minutes and nine seconds. Some hundred-yard races followed, both for privates and for non-commissioned officers; then races of 440 yards, 880 yards, and mile races; there was an officers' race of 880 yards. A series of gymnastic exercises followed—namely, on the vaulting horse and the parallel bars, high and wide jump, and "putting" a 16lb. shot, which are the feats shown in a few of our sketches illustrative of this meeting. The performances on the second day consisted of foot-races, 100 yards, 440 yards, and 880 yards, with consolation races of 300 yards; a "tug of war," in which ten men of one regiment contended against ten of another; several combats of bayonet against bayonet, sword against bayonet, and sword against sword (mounted), (one of which appears among our Illustrations); a variety of gymnastic feats; the exhibition of skill with the sabre, in slicing lemons, and in other nice cuts; and of skill with the lance, combined with horsemanship in "tent-pegging." The officers and others who engaged in the mounted competitions were Surgeon-Major F. P. Staples, of the Army Medical Department, Lieutenant C. F. Beresford, R.E., Captain M. R. West, R.H.A., Chief Instructor Adams (of the Gymnastic Staff), Staff-Sergeant Bryant, Sergeant-Instructors Haigh, Noaks, Meates, and several non-commissioned officers of the 1st Life Guards, 1st Dragoons, 16th and 17th Lancers. The attendance of spectators was not so large as at the meeting of last year, but the performances were generally better.

Extra Supplement.

GOODWOOD RACES.

We need say little here about the always pleasant festival of a favourite national sport, which has this week been celebrated, as in many successive years of the past half century, in the Duke of Richmond's noble park, where the West Sussex Downs are relieved by rich woodlands and delightful glades, with cedars and beeches of stateliest growth. Our chronicle of racing events will inform the reader of what has been done at Goodwood; and the presence on Tuesday of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is an incident that cannot be omitted from the record of personal matters belonging to the Court and the world of Fashion. The lively scenes which are delineated in our Artist's Sketches on the race-course, and which appear in the Engravings that compose our Extra Supplement, must be quite familiar to all who have been accustomed to attend the races, as they have been witnessed year after year by many thousands of visitors. There is the journey along the road to Goodwood Park, with the toilsome pull up a rather steep ascent, which is trying to the teams of overlaid vehicles; there is the vast and motley assemblage of spectators, overlooked by those of privileged gentility on the shady and grassy bank above the course; the crush and throng of an eager multitude at every point of vantage; the Grand Stand, more especially, with its occupants tightly boxed up to enjoy the sight, though under a broiling sun, and unable to wipe their faces. There is also the ordinary preparation for the great race of the day—the clearing of the course—the start—the running—the finish—the brief excitement of a contest which has been the theme of such great expectations. All this may be seen at Goodwood, and is not without interest to the observer who neither bets nor affects to know the merits of any horse in the field.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Goodwood meeting was appropriately ushered in by the hottest day of the season, and the plague of dust on the road from Drayton to the course was even more trying than usual. Still such a splendid day ought to have attracted an immense number of spectators, and we were rather surprised to find the Grand Stand and ring less full than is usual on the first day. The Prince of Wales, who is the guest of the Duke of Richmond for the week, was present; but the Princess did not leave London, as Prince Albert Victor has not yet recovered from his recent illness. The racing on the first day was scarcely up to the average; still there were one or two very interesting items. One of these was the debut of Athol Lad, an own brother to Prince Charlie, in the Ham Stakes. He is a chestnut colt, standing fully 16 hands 2 inches, and not unlike his illustrious relative. He does not, however, possess the quality of the "Prince of the T.Y.C.," and is leggy and unfurnished. Everyone says that he is a very bad roarer, and we suppose that what everyone says must be true, but never did a horse perform less like a roarer. He was beaten fully a quarter of a mile from home, yet he answered every call, coming again and again with unflinching gameness, and appeared to win from sheer stamina. Cannon has long had the reputation of being the best jockey in the world on a two-year-old, and certainly his performance on Athol Lad was a perfect masterpiece of riding. When it was found that the twenty-three numbers for the Stewards' Cup did not include that of Mousquetaire (7 st. 7 lb.), who had been favourite from the first appearance of the weights, there was a look of blank dismay among backers generally. No one, however, could fairly blame Lord Lascelles, as he had been completely forestalled in the market, and had no chance of backing his horse at anything like a fair price. In Mousquetaire's absence, Caballero (6 st. 4 lb.) was promoted to the post of favourite, but he fared nearly as badly as his predecessor, as he broke a blood-vessel, and was pulled up before he had galloped two hundred yards. At the distance, Monk (6 st. 12 lb.) looked like winning, but a few strides further on Herald (7 st.) shot by him, and secured an easy victory by two lengths, Warrior (6 st. 6 lb.) being beaten about the same distance for second place. Both the top weights, Trappist (9 st. 10 lb.) and Lollypop (9 st. 2 lb.), ran wonderfully well, and we are not sure that both could not have obtained places; but old Oxonian (7 st. 8 lb.) sadly disappointed his supporters, and Twine the Plaiden (7 st. 7 lb.) also did badly. The Richmond Stakes, a new two-year-old race, to which £500 is added, produced a capital field of sixteen, including Bishop Burton, Thoughtless (late Crucifix), Ersilia, Jannette, and Bellicent, all winners of good races. Jannette ran under great difficulties, being shut in, and changing her place no less than three times during the race, yet she won in a common canter, and we have no hesitation in pronouncing her the best youngster that has appeared in public this season. Spark was next to her, and the pair came right away from the rest of the field.

The weather was much cooler on Wednesday, and the attendance very much larger than on the previous day. Glen Arthur made a terrible example of Monk over the Craven course, and it is clear that the latter does not care to gallop more than three-quarters of a mile, and he need not be thought of again in connection with the St. Leger. Later in the day Glen Arthur summarily extinguished the very faint Doncaster pretensions of Albert Edward. A very strong report was current in the ring that Hampton (9 st. 5 lb.) was scratched for the Goodwood Stakes, and reminiscences of Mr. Hobson's policy on former occasions did not tend to comfort his supporters, so they were greatly relieved to see his number hoisted, along with eleven others. For some time before the start Prince George (7 st.) was all the rage, and Pageant (8 st. 7 lb.) and Chypre (7 st. 10 lb.) also advanced in the quotations. A capital start was effected at the second attempt, but Peeping Tom (6 st. 12 lb.), whose jockey had no whip or spurs, resolutely declined to exert himself, and went past the Stand at a kind of rocking-horse canter, to the great amusement of all except those who had backed him. Coquetdale (6 st. 6 lb.) made the running for nearly two miles, when Prince George went to the front and forced the pace, and, having his field well beaten nearly a quarter of a mile from home, won as he liked by eight lengths. Gloucester (6 st. 6 lb.) and Rylstone (6 st. 9 lb.) were placed second and third respectively; but it was quite clear that Pageant was second best; and many people thought that Hampton, with all his weight, could have gained third place had he been ridden out. The Lavant and Findon Stakes produced capital fields, and the result of each gave the bookmakers a much-needed turn, and put a great deal of the two-year-old form of the season in a complete tangle. Dalgarno won the first mentioned, beating Strathfleet, the winner of the July Stakes, Polestar, and Red Hazard; and in the latter Thistle scored an easy victory, Attalus and the highly-tried Jupiter finishing behind her.

On Thursday the Goodwood Cup was won by Hampton; Skylark being second, and Charon third.

The two most important cricket-matches of the present week have been those between Gloucestershire and Yorkshire and Kent and Hampshire. The former ended in a draw, there not being sufficient time to finish it; Mr. W. G. Grace (84) and Greenwood (91) were the principal scorers for their respective sides. Kent beat Hampshire by six wickets, the scoring on each side being very heavy. For the winners, Lord Harris (75), Mr. Mackinnon (44), and Remnant (65) did best; and on the other side we must not omit mention of Messrs. Duncan (75) and Booth (77), whose fine batting averted what promised to be a disgraceful defeat.

In spite of very strong opposition in many quarters, we are convinced that the Thames International Regatta possesses all the elements of success; but there is no disguising the fact that the management this year might have been improved. The distribution of the money given needs careful revision, and many little improvements can be made in the arrangement of the racing. The most important event was undoubtedly the race for professional scullers, in which T. Blackburn and J. Higgins finished in the order named, and easily defeated R. W. Boyd, the champion, who was all to pieces. This race is sure to lead to one or two matches. The London R.C. took both the eights and fours; and the invincible Eyre and Hastie, of the Thames R.C., had no trouble whatever in winning the pair-oared race. The pairs for professionals was another triumph for the south, as Higgins and Thomas rowed clean away from Boyd and Lumsden. Some of the races for tradesmen were very close and exciting, and we especially noticed the Alliance R.C. eight, which rowed in a style that would have done credit to any club. A strenuous endeavour should be made to secure the attendance of some colonial and foreign crews next year, so that the regatta might be really as well as nominally international. Due notice should be given of the programme of prizes for this purpose. The Prince of Wales, who presented the amateur scullers' prize (won by C. G. White), could not be present at the regatta; but the Duke and Duchess of Teck and their children viewed the racing on Saturday last from the Victoria saloon-boat, and seemed highly interested in the sport. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress were on board the Maria Wood. His Lordship gave much éclat to the close of the regatta by presenting the handsome and valuable prizes (mostly from the establishments of Messrs. Mappin and Webb, and Messrs. Hukin and Heath, Birmingham) on Monday at the Mansion House; and Captain Pelly, R.N., the chairman, stated that whereas the prizes amounted last November to over £800, more than £1000 had this year been distributed.

Mr. Horace Davenport proved that he maintains his rare powers as a strong and swift swimmer by winning the half-mile race at the Moulsey meeting of the London Athletic Club last Saturday, beating Mr. C. L. O'Malley; and by being again victorious in the mile race for the captaincy of the Ilex Club on Monday at Mortlake.

Professor Beckwith's skilful young son Willie easily won a mile swimming-race at Putney last Saturday against Moody, the champion of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Degett's coat and badge were won on Wednesday evening by John Tarryer, of Rotherhithe, ten lengths separating him from the second, Charles Collins, of Wapping Dock.

The Grand Chapter of Freemasons on Wednesday night voted 100 guineas towards the relief of the sufferers by the fire at St. John, New Brunswick.

There was a grand field-day yesterday week at Chatham, and the long-expected siege operations were carried out in the presence of the Commander-in-Chief and a brilliant staff.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Some correspondence between the trustees of the British Museum and the Treasury, in reference to the salaries to be paid to officers of the British Museum, has been issued. It concludes with the following letter from the Treasury to the trustees of the Museum:—

Treasury Chambers, July 26, 1877.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—The Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have had before them Mr. Winter Jones's letter of the 23rd instant, and they are happy to find in it a settlement which they can agree with the trustees of the British Museum in accepting. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has explained to the Duke of Somerset and to Mr. Lowe that my Lords think it more important to come to a practical agreement with the trustees than to argue further in support of a scheme founded on the principles, which they still think sound, of the report of the Playfair Commission, after it has become clear that the trustees, who are primarily responsible for the good government of the museum, are unwilling to adopt such a settlement. As regards the numbers of the two new classes, all those assistants who on March 31 last were receiving more than £250 per annum will be included in the new first class, such of them as now rise by £20 to £400 retaining that increment in their progress to £450; the rest of them will rise by £15 to the new maximum. Such of the lower section of the senior assistants as, on March 31 last, were receiving less than £250 per annum, and all the present junior assistants, will be included in the new second class; but that part of the class which consists of present senior assistants will continue to rise by £15 to £350, until such time as they may be selected (by merit, not seniority) for promotion into the new first class, which they will thereupon enter at their then salary, £350, or whatever less sum they may have reached. This, of course, is a privilege personal only to themselves. The rest of the new second class (now junior assistants) will have the advantage of rising to a maximum of £240 instead of £180, and such of them as are receiving less than £120 will be advanced to that minimum as from April 1 last. My Lords are not aware how many assistants will, upon these terms, fall at once in the new first class, but all reason for maintaining it at a top-heavy number will be removed, because no one will have suffered in his chances of promotion, as long as it exceeds sixteen, the present number of the upper section of senior assistants. My Lords are of opinion that, after composing the new first class in the above manner, no fresh appointments should be made to it as long as its members exceed thirty-eight, which latter number equals that of the present sixteen senior assistants of the upper section, plus half the number of senior assistants of the lower section, and also bears a very liberal proportion to the total number, eighty-nine, giving for the lower class only fifty-one, which is hardly large enough to exclude promotion by seniority, unless considerable resort be had to appointments to the first class from the outside, a proceeding that my Lords consider cannot be entirely excluded, but should (they think) be looked forward to only as an exception. My Lords consider that thirty and fifty-nine are sounder, as they are more usual, proportions for the first and second classes of such a body. These proportions may gradually be reached without any inconvenient stoppage of promotion. My Lords have assumed throughout this letter that the scheme takes effect from April 1 last inclusive. The trustees will, no doubt, direct their attention to that part (already noticed in the present correspondence) of the report of the Playfair Commission, wherein it is suggested that if printing instead of transcribing were more freely resorted to a considerable saving of expense might be effected. The trustees do not appear to think that it would be possible to adopt the other part of the suggestion in the same report—viz., that if a staff corresponding to the lower division of the general civil service were introduced into certain divisions of the museum, a still further economy might be secured.—I have, &c.,

(Signed) R. R. W. LINGEN.

A deputation, representing over sixty municipal corporations and headed by Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., waited on the trustees of the British Museum on Saturday in order to urge upon them the desirability of the collections contained in that and other national institutions being, as far as possible, rendered available for the benefit of museums under the charge of provincial corporations. In replying to the deputation, the Duke of Somerset pointed out that, in order to enable the trustees to lend any of the objects in the various collections of the museum, special legislation would be necessary. He promised, however, after inquiring particularly as to the class of objects which the deputation desired to have circulated, that the matter, which he considered a very important one, should receive the careful consideration of the trustees.

The School Board for London, at their weekly meeting on Wednesday—Sir Charles Reed presiding—disposed of a variety of business, and adjourned over the recess till Sept. 26.—Sir Charles Reed presided on Thursday week evening over the public opening of a new school in the Belleville-road, New Wandsworth, with accommodation for 816 children, at a cost of £13 5s. 1d. per head. On Monday last Sir Charles Reed presided at the opening of another new school in the Stockwell-road. This building is designed for the accommodation of 830 children; and there are large playgrounds. Sir Charles Reed said that the Board had provided for 150,000 children who wanted school accommodation, and yet the cry was for more schools. The Board has also now 7000 "Arab" children under training who would be otherwise on the streets or in prisons. On Wednesday evening a school capable of accommodating nearly 600 children was opened by Sir Charles Reed, in the Coal-yard, off Drury-lane, in the centre of one of the poorest and most densely peopled districts in the metropolis. The chairman, having alluded to the difficulty the board had found in procuring the site, added that it was one of the most expensive yet acquired by the board. There was one in the best part of Battersea, on the edge of Clapham-common, for which £1661 was given for 28,780 square feet; another, in Stockwell-road, £4811 for 33,240 feet; while in the poorest and lowest part of Drury-lane, a small area of 10,000 square feet for a school of 568 children cost the ratepayers £10,538. Sir Charles said that he had now opened the 159th school, giving accommodation for 157,000 children, and after the recess others would be ready; and as all were full, and the voluntary schools were stronger than they ever were, all this was a net gain to the cause of popular education.

A special meeting of the committee of the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire was held on Wednesday at the hall of MY LADDIE FAR AWAY. Song. By Miss M. LINDSAY, whose other songs have been so popular, well expresses a Scotch lassie's preference for a "laddie" of her "ain country"; and those who have met "Scotch laddies" far away with "golden hair," "voice so gay," and "face so fair" will not be disposed to quarrel with her; but she may sing a long time before the returns!—Vide Illustrated London News, No. 1 in E. ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE WAR.

Our Special Artist in the Dobrukscha with General Zimmermann's division of the Russian forces (the 14th Army Corps), which crossed the Danube at Braila and Galatz on June 20, has sent us many sketches from Matchin, Hirsova, Tchernavoda, Medjidieh, and Kustendje, which places have been successively occupied by the Russians without any serious resistance, except at Matchin on the first day. It is needful to explain to our readers that the population of this district is greatly mixed, and consists of five or six different races or nationalities, differing entirely from the inhabitants of other parts of Bulgaria. The Dobrukscha, especially the Delta of the Lower Danube, and the peninsula formed by its northward bend from Tchernavoda with the Black Sea coast, has been for ages past a land of refuge to which the fugitive remnants of broken and dispersed nations have betaken themselves for safety either from the Muscovite or the Ottoman Empire. This district is said to contain about eighty villages of distinct and separate nationalities—Turks, Circassians, Tartars, Bulgars, Armenians, Greeks, Slavs, and "Old Russians;" the last named being a race of Protestant emigrants from Russia, who fled to the south and passed the Danube from Bessarabia, nearly a century ago, to escape from religious persecution. A considerable number of these "Old Russians" inhabit the Christian quarter of the town both at Matchin and at Hirsova. It seems to have been these people, not the Bulgarians, properly so called, who met General Zimmermann with joyful and grateful demonstrations of welcome, upon the retirement of the Turkish forces. The sketch taken by our Special Artist at Varosh, the Christian quarter of Hirsova, which was reproduced in one of our Engravings last week, represented the General making an indignant speech, in Russian, to the deputation of Christian inhabitants who brought him their complimentary offering of "bread and salt." He refused to accept it, and scolded them roundly for the wanton destruction and pillage of Turkish houses. The reader may perhaps have observed that the dress of some of the leading figures shown in that illustration was not the ordinary costume of Bulgarian peasantry. We find, in a letter of the Daily News' Special Correspondent, dated Medjidieh, July 13, the following narrative of that scene, to which we have particularly referred:—

"The town of Hirsova is divided into two villages—one lying on each side of a rocky height which rises out of the Danube—and bears the ruins of an old fortification constructed in the Middle Ages, besides the new earthwork just built by the Russians to command the Danube in the direction of Tchernavoda. The lower village is inhabited by Christians alone, and is called Varosh; the upper one was the Turkish section, and is much the larger and better situated quarter. A visit to the latter village disclosed a scene of utter ruin and desolation, such as even the wild rumours about the devastation of the country had not prepared us for. In all the town, which had sheltered perhaps eight thousand inhabitants, not a single house is left untouched—every one is hacked and hewn in a most wanton manner. There is not so much as a table-leg or a chair-bottom in the whole town; not a single pane of glass, not an iron rod to the windows, not one whole door. Everything is cut and knocked to pieces, and made completely unserviceable. The little mosque is defiled, the symbols torn and scattered about the floor, the lamps broken; and in the little graveyard, now a tangle of shoulder-high thistles and brambles, some of the ornamented headstones have been broken, and many graves opened. Immediately on our arrival General Zimmermann made careful inquiry to discover the perpetrator of this mischief, and soon learned the entire truth of the story, which is that, while the Turks had possession, not the slightest damage was done, but after the troops departed the Christian population turned out en masse, and spent days in wildly cutting and hacking everything in the town. Of course, under the circumstances, it is next to impossible to discover the leaders of the outrages; but, if found, they will be roughly dealt with. Thinking to appease somewhat the wrath of the General, a deputation of natives marched to his quarters bearing the symbols of hospitality, bread and salt, and offered them to him. Here was the wished-for opportunity to ventilate his opinions on the actions of the natives, and the General lost no time in giving the deputation as hearty a dressing down as I ever heard, first in Russian and then in German; and the procession, headed by the priests, went away with rather a shamefaced expression, bearing the tokens with them. Immediately after came a delegation from a little Russian village on a similar errand, and, as no complaint had been made against these, their offering was received.

Besides the sketches recently taken at the actual seat of war, both in the Danubian Provinces and in Armenia, by several of our Special Artists following the Russian and Turkish Armies, we present to our readers this week a Special Map, drawn by Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, of the Balkans and the country to the south of that mountain range, with the valley of the Maritza, between Philippopolis and Adrianople. Great care has been taken to show the various passes leading across the Balkans. Irrespective of footpaths hardly known to any but the Balkarji, and certainly not available for the transport of artillery, these passes, so far as the country is included within the limits of our Map, are as follow:—

1. Rabanitz Pass. Elevation of the summit, 5733 ft. It connects the valley of the Upper or Beli Vid (the White Vid) with Rahmanli (Lamunare), a village in the valley of the Giopou (Srema), and is practicable for wheeled carriages.
2. Troyan Pass, 4700 ft., connects Troyan, a busy Bulgarian town of 1700 inhabitants, with Teke, in the Giopou Valley, and appears to be a mere mule-track.
3. Karlovo Pass, a mule-track, connects Troyan with Karlovo, a busy manufacturing place of 9000 inhabitants, mostly inhabited by Bulgarians.
4. Rosalita Pass, 6333 ft., is one of the highest of the Balkans, and the mountains near it attain an altitude of 7640 ft. It is, nevertheless, practicable for wheeled traffic. It connects Troyan with Kalofer, a busy manufacturing town, occupying an important strategic position on the watershed separating the valley of the Tunja from that of the Giopou.
5. Shipka Pass, 4320 ft., the easiest pass of this portion of the Balkans, is held firmly by the Russians. A good road across it was begun by order of Midhat Pasha, but has never been completed. It connects Tirnova and Gabrova in the north with Kazanlik in the south. Standing upon its summit, we look down upon the smiling vale of the Tunja, famous for its rose-gardens, and dotted over with numerous villages embowered in groves of walnut-trees. Kazanlik has a population of 21,000 inhabitants, of whom about 12,500 are Bulgarians, and 7500 Turks. Shipka, a large Bulgarian village of 800 houses to the north of it, boasts of two churches and a fine school-house.
6. Tipuriska-Polyana Pass, 4230 ft., only about nine miles to the east of the Shipka, connects Travna, the Nuremberg of Bulgaria, famous for its wood carvings and pictures, with Maglish, in the Tunja valley. When Kanitz visited Maglish, the Bulgarians and Turks there were on excellent terms.
7. Hainkoi Pass, 4000 ft., connects the Kalofer Dere to the south of Tirnova, with the village of Hainkoi on the Tunja, and was taken by the detached cavalry force commanded by General Gourko.

8. Tvarditza, or Ferejiah Derbend, 3520 ft., is one of the easiest passes of the Balkans, but the carriage road across it, like so many other works undertaken by the Turks, has never been completed. It connects Elena, in the north, with the lower Tunja valley.

9. Zupanchi Mesari Balkan, though only 3600 ft. in height, does not appear to be practicable for carriages throughout.

10. Demirkapu, or the Iron Gate, 3993 ft., joins the Slivno road connecting Elena with Kotel (Kazan) with Slivno, more correctly called Sliven, the Ialimie of the Turks. This is an important town of 21,000 inhabitants, of whom two thirds are Bulgarians.

The passes further to the west oppose but few obstacles to the movement of troops, though they undoubtedly present strong positions for defence.

Adrianople, the object at present of the Russian movements, is a city of 60,000 or 62,000 inhabitants, of whom about 20,000 are Turks, 15,000 Greeks, and as many Bulgarians. The positions held by the Turks, under Suleiman Pasha, are in advance of this town, and extend along the Sarli valley to Yamboli. Raouf Pasha, in command of the right wing, occupies Yeni Zara (Zaghra Jedid); the Turkish centre is stationed at Karabunar, and the Turkish left at Tirnova, a village near the junction of the Philippopolis line. The Russians hold Kazanlik and Eski Zara (Zaghra Atik, 2400 inhabitants). Following the valley of the Maritza upwards, we reach Philippopolis (Philippople), a town of 28,000 inhabitants. Nearly the whole of the fertile region to the south of the Balkans, now the theatre of war, is in the occupation of Bulgarians, and even in the towns, Adrianople and Philippopolis alone excepted, they constitute a majority.

As regards the spelling of the names, Mr. Ravenstein has transcribed the nomenclature of the Russian and German maps used by him agreeably to the English mode of pronunciation, with this exception, that the vowels are to be sounded always as in Italian, or as in the English words "ravine," "there," "go," and "flute." The gutturals are expressed by "kh" or "gh." This is the system now generally adopted.

Our Special Artists with the army of Mouktar Pasha in Asia have not been unemployed. The important battle fought at Zewin, or Sevin, halfway on the road from Erzerum to Kars, where the Russians suffered their first defeat, has been more than once mentioned in this Journal. One of the sketches now engraved shows the Turkish and Russian positions before that engagement among the hills of the Soghanly Dag; in another illustration we see the Turkish irregular cavalry dashing off in pursuit of the retreating enemy. The headquarters of the Circassians in the town of Erzerum, and the arrival of a convoy of wounded Turkish soldiers from Olti, are subjects of two of these sketches. A variety of minor incidents of Turkish camp life are delineated in the smaller engravings on another page.

The later news of the progress of the war, with the startling events of the present week, must have a separate notice.

REGIMENTAL COLOURS AT ETON COLLEGE.

On Saturday afternoon the interesting ceremony was performed of "laying up" the old colours of the second battalion 14th Buckinghamshire (Prince of Wales's Own) Regiment, in Eton College Chapel. About three months ago, the regiment being then stationed at Belfast, new colours were presented to the battalion, the ceremony being performed by Lady Templetown. The old colours have been presented to the care of Eton College, and were brought from Ireland by Captain Harrington and Captain Earle, with Colour-Sergeants Bullas and Wylie. The ceremony was performed at three o'clock, a special office being prepared for the occasion. There was a large attendance in the chapel, and the boys were in their places. The Eton College Volunteer Rifle Corps, under the command of Captain Warre, formed a guard of honour, and lined the aisle of the chapel. The Rev. Dr. Goodford (Provost of Eton), the Rev. Dr. Hornby (Head Master), the Rev. F. B. Durnford (Lower Master), the Rev. R. Errington (conduct), and the Rev. W. A. Carter having taken their position at the altar, a hymn, "Lord of all power and might," was sung, the colours being borne up the aisle by Captains Harrington and Earle, guarded by Colour-Sergeants Bullas and Wylie. On the hymn being concluded the colours were handed separately to the Provost, who received them and laid them reverently upon the altar, the volunteers presenting arms. A prayer followed, and the Provost having pronounced the benediction, the ceremony concluded.

The Derby Mercury mentions a report that the Midland Railway Company intend to introduce a dining-room saloon-carriage into some of their trains. In this carriage hot dinners may be cooked and served just as in an hotel or restaurant.

The fortieth annual show of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society was opened at York on Tuesday. As compared with last year there was a decrease in the entries of cattle, sheep, and pigs, but an increase in those of horses. It was resolved to hold the exhibition next year at Northallerton.

A return has been issued of the expenditure in the Tichborne prosecution. The total costs, charges, and expenses of the prosecution amounted to £60,074 12s. 4d.; of which £23,616 17s. went in counsels' fees, £18,711 6s. 1d. to witnesses, agents, &c., £10,268 5s. 11d. to law stationers and for printing, £6337 10s. 4d. for shorthand-writers' notes, and £3780 to the jury.

Mr. Hugh James Rollo, W.S., has been presented with a handsome cup and a purse of 200 sovereigns, in testimony of the appreciation by the Episcopal Church in Scotland of the large amount of work undertaken by him in its behalf for twenty-nine years, in the capacity of secretary of the Church Society and otherwise.

An Act has received the Royal assent relating to the examination of solicitors, in which statute there is an important section as to solicitors acting in ecclesiastical courts. Hitherto only proctors could practise, but now, on the operation of the Act, "Any solicitor may practise in all courts and before all persons having or exercising any power, authority, or jurisdiction in matters ecclesiastical in England, and shall be deemed to be duly qualified to practise, and may practise, in all matters relating to applications to obtain notarial faculties, and generally shall have and may exercise all the powers and authorities, and shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges, and may fulfil all the functions and duties, which appertain or belong to the office or profession of a proctor, whether in the provincial, diocesan, or other jurisdiction in England."

THE NEW ARMY WARRANT.

The War Office has issued a memorandum explanatory of the provisions of the proposed army warrant, "which will comprise the whole system of appointment, promotion and retirement of officers in the combatant ranks of the Army," and cancel all existing warrants on the subject. This new warrant professes to go beyond those portions which the Royal Commission of 1874 on Army Promotion had under consideration, and this opportunity, it is added, will be taken to amend certain minor matters which call for attention. The memorandum, having recapitulated the system hitherto regulating promotion and retirement, and the recommendations of the Royal Commission appointed in 1874, states that in the forthcoming warrant the general principles laid down in the proposals of that Commission will be, with certain exceptions, adopted. The following are the main points on which its proposals will be modified:—

With reference to the voluntary retirement offered to captains and subalterns, there has been substituted a fixed gratuity or retirement after fifteen years' and another after eighteen years' service, without any increase to these gratuities in the intermediate years. As an absolute line of retirement for captains after twenty years' service might act with hardship in the case of officers who have not obtained early promotion to that rank, two conditions will be required for compulsory retirement—that the officer shall have not less than twenty years' service, and that he shall have been a captain for not less than seven years; the bar to promotion after twenty years' service will not be removed, so that the captain will have the inducement to accept the retirement allowance of £200 a year. To ensure that major-generals shall attain the rank at an early age, compulsory retirement for future colonels at the age of fifty-five will be added; and to provide for the additional number of retired general officers, the retired list will be increased to 275 effective general officers for the Guards and Line, to be gradually reduced to 200.

The memorandum enumerates the retirements and pensions which will be open to the several ranks of officers, besides their reserved rights of sale, and adds that the retirements will be open to all post purchase officers—that is, to all officers who have entered, or may enter, a rank since the abolition of purchase. As voluntary retirements they will also be open to officers who are serving under Indian pension regulations; but the latter will be exempted (for the present) from all compulsory retirements, except that at the age of seventy. To all officers now in the Army the limited retired full-pay list after thirty years' service, and the retired half-pay after twenty-five years' service, will remain available. Purchase officers have all the pensions mentioned open to them; and, in addition, special pensions. The captain and major, instead of retiring from the Army, may pass to the half-pay of the next higher rank, and may surrender the half-pay within six months for £3200 and £4500 respectively; or, later, for reduced sums according to age.

The system of retirement for the future is thus stated:—A subaltern must pass for captain within six years of first permanent commission, or quit the service. He may after fifteen years' service, and must after twenty, retire. A captain may retire after fifteen years' service, and must retire on fulfilling the double condition of twenty years' service in all and seven years as captain. A major may retire after fifteen years' service, and must retire when he shall have completed twenty-seven years' service in all, with seven years as major. A lieutenant-colonel may retire after fifteen years' service, and must retire after five years' service as lieutenant-colonel. A brevet colonel may retire after removal from his regiment under the "five years' rule" on £420 a year for the cavalry or infantry, and on £450 a year in the artillery or engineers. A brevet colonel or general officer of artillery or engineers may retire after forty years' service on £600 a year. It is proposed to rearrange the ranks of the Royal Engineers in the manner suggested by the Royal Commission, and at the same time to add one colonel commandant to equalise their proportion of that rank with the proportion obtaining in the artillery.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held on Thursday at its house, John-street, Adelphi. Rewards and other payments amounting to £2700 were made on the 266 life-boat establishments of the institution. Several rewards were also granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts. Various contributions have recently been received by the institution, including £550 from X.Y.Z., to defray the cost of a life-boat and equipment for the Scotch coast; it being given by "thankful parents in memory of the life of a child wonderfully preserved;" £100 from the Ancient Order of Foresters, being their yearly contribution towards the support of their two life-boats stationed respectively at Tynemouth and West Hartlepool, and named the Forester and Foresters' Pride; £37 10s., surplus money arising from the Oxford and Cambridge Ball at Willis's Rooms on June 26; £11, proceeds of a small bazaar held by Miss Lucas, of Tooting; and £10 17s. 4d., collection made in the camp of the 3rd Administrative Battalion Lancashire Rifle Volunteers, after Divine service on Sunday, July 8, per Colonel Dugdale. The late P. E. Coates, Esq., of Stanton Court, Somerset, has left the institution a legacy of £500.

Reports were read from the three inspectors of life-boats to the institution on their recent visits to the coast.

The Board of Trade have received from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a copy of a despatch from her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, reporting that the Customs duty on cotton goods imported into the French colony of Senegal has been raised to 15 per cent.

The following appointments by her Majesty have been gazetted:—Mr. James Tucker to be Receiver-General and Mr. Randal Eden Webster to be Colonial Secretary for the Bermudas or Somers Islands; Mr. Henry Fowler to be Colonial Secretary for the British Honduras; and Major Charles Bullen Hugh Mitchell, R.M., to be Receiver-General for British Guiana.

The Daily News' correspondent at Alexandria gives an account of the wreck of the British steamer Cashmere near Cape Guardafui, the easternmost point of Africa, at the spot where the Meikong was lost only a fortnight before. The Cashmere was on her way from Zanzibar to Aden. All went well until July 5, when she ran into Sandy Bay, and it was at once seen that she must become a complete wreck. Several lives were lost in reaching the shore, but eighty-nine were saved. The shipwrecked crew and passengers underwent many hardships, and five days and five nights passed before assistance came to them. The steamer Queen Margaret then appeared, and took them from the small port they had succeeded in reaching, about thirty miles to the westward of Guardafui, and conveyed them to Aden. It is stated that the British Consul at Cairo has called the attention of the Khedive to the necessity of establishing a lighthouse at Cape Guardafui.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Of all men of letters the popular novelist seems to me to be the worst treated by posterity. Lamentably soon after they have passed away writers of fiction who in their day have been tremendous favourites seem to be entirely forgotten; nay, they may esteem themselves fortunate if even before their deaths they have not fallen into "the portion of weeds and outworn faces." Of course I am not referring to authors who are novelists, and something else—that is to say, poets. A Fielding, a Scott, a Dickens, a Thackeray can be in no peril of the grim verdict, "Found drowned in the river Lethe." But recall some of the most popular novelists whom you, my middle-aged friend, used to admire so fervently in the days when you were "young and curly." I won't take you so far back as "Anne of Swinsea," or Miss Porter; but what, I may ask, has become of the renown of Lady Morgan, of Mrs. Gore, of Banim, of John Galt, and especially of Mrs. Frances Trollope. You may say that the celebrity of the last-named lady has been eclipsed by that of her justly-popular son Anthony; still, to my mind, had "Orley Farm" or "Barchester Towers" even never been written, we should not care much nowadays for "The Widow Barnaby," for "Jonathan Jefferson Whitlaw" (an anti-slavery romance, nearly as powerful as "Uncle Tom"), or for "Michael Armstrong, the Factory Boy." Forty years ago fashionable society used to go crazy over those performances.

Yes; and likewise, about two-score years since, there was a wonderfully popular novelist, named Samuel Warren. This talented gentleman died last Sunday, in his seventieth year. He was a Q.C., a D.C.L., a Master in Lunacy (salary £2000), ex-M.P. for Midhurst, ex-Recorder of Hull, and a copious writer on forensic education and on the Law of Courts Martial—all eminent claims to remembrance, but secondary (so lovers of letters may think) to the fact that Mr. Samuel Warren was the author of "The Diary of a Late Physician" and of the romance of "Ten Thousand a Year." To this once idol of the circulating libraries the daily newspapers of 1877 have accorded, one five, one ten, one twelve, and one as many as eighteen lines of necrological notice. They would give as many to a defunct dancing-master.

One reason for the decay of the popularity of "Ten Thousand a Year" may be due to the circumstance that the romance abounded with political portraits drawn from the life (not always in the best taste), and which nowadays might require, as Dryden's "Absalom and Achitophel" did, a key for their identification. At the same time Mr. Warren contrived to create in Tittlebat Titmouse and in Mr. Oily Gammon, of the firm of Quirk, Gammon, and Snap, two distinctly original characters which, I will not say Henry Fielding, but Tobias Smollett might have been proud to have invented. "Ten Thousand a Year" was dramatised at the Adelphi, and had a great run; that admirable comedian, the late Mr. Edward Wright, playing Tittlebat Titmouse.

Mem: It was Master Warren who, in his judicial capacity, presided over the commission De Lunaticis held on the unfortunate Mr. Wyndham. The foreman of the jury who decided that Mr. Wyndham was sane and able to take care of his property was the late Sir Charles Taylor, Bart. Then, in the course of a year or two poor Mr. Wyndham spent about £140,000 and died.

Somebody has been good enough to send me the first number of a new magazine called the "Journal of Forestry." The periodical has nothing to do with the "Ancient Order of Foresters" (whose health and that of all their wives and families, and may they live long, I drink), but it tells you all about sylvan economics and transplantation and spruce timber, and "remarkable Silver Fir," and the Eucalyptus globulus of Jamaica, and so forth. I happen to have a passion for the study of trees. I cherish my "tall" copy of J. D. Harding's "Park and the Forest," Evelyn's "Sylvia" and Bacon's "Sylvia Sylvarum" are to me precious tomes; I have tried to copy the graceful woodcuts in the Misses Kirby's "Chapters on Trees," the rarest item in my cabinet of "curios" is a bit of the bark of the "Arbol de la Noche Triste," the tree against which Herman Cortes leaned during that fatal night when Montezuma's Aztecs made their last attempt to recapture the city of Mexico; and I lately made a most felicitous book-stall acquisition in the shape of a book called "The Planter's Guide," by the late Sir Henry Steuart, Bart., and illustrated by some of the most beautiful etchings by W. Turner—(who was "W. Turner?")—that I have ever seen. Thus, fully prepared to hail a new addition to the literature of arboriculture, I confess that I have read the "Journal of Forestry" with feelings akin to irritation. There is not a single illustration in the number; and a work about trees without woodcuts is as unsatisfactory as a bill of fare without an accompanying dinner.

An indignant gentleman writes to the Times to complain that the authorities of Greenwich Hospital have ordered all the chairs and forms to be removed from the Painted Hall, and that country cousins who come to see the pictures, Sir Francis Drake's astrolabe and Lord Nelson's coat and waistcoat, are compelled, when they are fatigued, to sit on the steps of the hall or on the floor. Why not? To sit on the floor, in the shade, in this tropical weather, is less an infliction than a sweet boon; and so far as I am concerned I should sit down on half a dozen doorsteps every time I went out for a walk were I not afraid, first, of the street boys, and next of the metropolitan police. There is a great deal more of the world to be seen from the pavement than ex cathedra. On the other hand, in these days of "Princess Robes," ladies who are fain to adopt a doorstep for a sofa might experience some difficulty in getting up again; so that I hope the authorities at Greenwich Hospital may see their way to letting the country cousins have their chairs and couches without let or hindrance.

Mem.: A dear friend of mine, who has just come home from a journey round the world, and especially in the interior of Japan, tells me that in that queer country most of the business of life is transacted sitting on a bamboo mat on the floor. That is the reason, perhaps, why the legs of the lacquer table he gave me are only three inches long. The Mexican ladies sit habitually on the floor; and very graceful they look, wrapped in their ribosos, and with their black silk dresses surging in shiny billows around them. In this sedent position, on the marble pavement of the Sagrario in the Great Cathedral of Mexico city, I remember seeing at least a thousand ladies on the Thursday in Holy Week in 1862. Thus they sate from seven p.m. till midnight: right through the "Stabat Mater" and right through the "Tenebræ."

Pass through Lincoln's-inn-fields any afternoon just now between four and five, and you shall see a sight than which a prettier and a more comfortable one these eyes, at least, have not for a long time gazed upon. At the time I have named the little children are admitted into Lincoln's-inn Garden—not the "Fields" proper, but the green pleasure adjoining the Hall of the Honourable Society. The beadle—a cosy man with a "family" air about him—smiled on me cheerily as I watched the small infantry of Holborn and Great Queen-street, of Clare-market and Drury-lane, trooping in their hundreds—I had almost said in their thousands—into the grassy Eden where they are privileged to romp and play. Poor little puny limbs, and pale, careworn faces! Poor little patched and tattered frocks and pinafores! I don't know how long these Arcadian gambols have been going on; but I am sure the public have reason to be heartily grateful to the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn for granting this boon to the children of the poor. But when will the "Fields" themselves be opened to the public, or at least to the children? And who are the Trustees or the Commissioners empowered to unlock the gates of that which should be a vast pleasure-garden?

It is a shame and a scandal that there are not more playgrounds for children in London. At least three hundred times a year, the hansom cab which conveys me eastward or westward takes me, as a "short cut," through Seven Dials and Newport-market; and I rarely make that journey without my heart sickening at the sight of the tiny urchins sprawling close to the very wheels of my vehicle and under the very hoofs of the horse. The vast majority of hansom cabmen are, I am glad from long experience to know and to maintain, very decent, sober, civil fellows, who drive with wondrous skill and care; but how the most cautious of cabmen escapes about once a week an indictment for manslaughter for driving over a child in Seven Dials or Great St. Andrew-street is to me a marvel.

There is a well-known line of Lord Byron which manifestly requires to be re-written. "Cold obstruction's apathy" is, as a figure of speech, clearly "played out." "Cold obstruction" in the House of Commons sitting throughout a whole night and the next day with the thermometer at 84 in the shade! For "Cold obstruction's apathy" I would respectfully beg leave, with the permission of Messrs. Parnell, Biggar, and O'Donnell, to substitute "Fierce Obstruction's Frenzy."

The oldest politician in Europe, and the last person who, in this country, has had the unenviable distinction to be sentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered, and the luck to escape the infliction of that terrible doom, has just died at Stapleton, near Bristol. He was nearly ninety-six years of age, and his name was John Frost. Conspicuous as a leader in the Chartist riots at Newport, in Wales, in 1839, John Frost, with Zephaniah Williams and W. Lloyd Jones, was tried for high treason and sentenced to death. The sentence was subsequently commuted to transportation for life, and ultimately the three convicts received a free pardon. Old Mr. Frost was old enough to have seen Robespierre, Lord Edward Fitzgerald, Tom Paine, Robert Emmett, Colonel Despard, and Thistlewood, and he was over fifty years of age when William Cobbett died. A lengthened career indeed.

AID TO THE SICK AND WOUNDED IN THE WAR.

Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, the president of the National Aid Society, has received a letter from Mr. Young, chief commissioner in the Black Sea, describing the plan which he has laid out for carrying on his operations. Mr. Layard, addressing the mission, said that assistance should be rendered at Erzerum. Mr. Young, with the aid of Said Pasha, was enabled to send a portion of his medical staff, completely equipped, to the scene of active operations at the Balkan front. By the interest of the Red Crescent Society special authorisations were also obtained from the Grand Vizier, under which Dr. Armand Leslie and Mr. Meyrick were dispatched to the front. Mr. Young hopes to establish communications with Dr. Crookshank, but fears that he is shut up in Rustchuk. "On every side," he adds, "there are appeals for help; but, unfortunately, the distress is daily becoming more and more felt amongst all classes throughout the country."

Yesterday week the Stafford House committee for the relief of suffering among the Turkish soldiers presented a report of their proceedings to a numerously-attended meeting held at the Duke of Sutherland's town residence. It was shown that the total receipts had been £18,001, and the expenditure and liabilities £15,365. A vote of thanks to the Duke of Sutherland for his active share in the work was moved by Lord Elington, M.P., and seconded by Lord Stanley of Alderley.

A private meeting was held yesterday week, at the house of Lady Lechmere, with the object of drawing attention to the destitute condition of the people of Serbia. The chair was taken by the Rev. William Denton, who, having read aloud several letters from influential persons, including Lady Strangford, Mr. Gladstone, M. Boustros, and others, expressing their sympathy with the objects of the meeting, and regret at being prevented from attending, called on M. Wojtkiewitch, member of the Société de Bienfaisance de Belgrade, to address the meeting. This gentleman, who brought a letter of introduction from the Archbishop of Belgrade, then explained the state of distress in Serbia owing to the recent inundations having washed away the seeds of the peasants, and destroyed their prospects of crops, and the great destitution that exists, aggravated by the presence of numerous refugees from Bulgaria, who escaped to Serbia as soon as the Russians crossed the Danube, fearing retaliation on the part of the Turks. After a few words from Sir Edmund Lechmere, the chairman, and others, the following resolutions were proposed and seconded:—"1. That the present state of the Serbian people, suffering as they are from the result of the recent war, as well as from the devastation of their crops caused by extensive inundations in the spring of the present year, and also from the claim upon their resources consequent upon the influx of refugees from Bulgaria and Bosnia, calls for the sympathy of the English people, and for some special effort to relieve their distress. 2. That a committee be formed for the purpose of collecting subscriptions to alleviate their distress." A list of the committee will shortly be published, together with a list of subscriptions. Contributions may be sent to Lady Lechmere, Rhydd Court, Upton-on-Severn.

The law officers of the Crown have, it is announced, given their opinion in the affair between the Peruvian ironclad Huascar and her Majesty's ships Shah and Amethyst. They find that the Huascar was to all intents and purposes acting as a pirate on the high seas, and that, for the protection of commerce, the attack made upon her was justifiable.

The second annual meeting of the West Yorkshire Miners' Association was held in the park at Pontefract on Monday. The meeting was addressed by Mr. A. Macdonald, M.P., and others. Resolutions were adopted in support of the union, and of the assimilation of the borough and county franchise, and expressing regret at the present depression of trade, and the recommendation of the Select Committee on compensation to workmen for injuries.—The men engaged at the Dowlais Ironworks, numbering several thousands, whose month's notice was to have terminated on Tuesday, have resumed work at the old wages, the masters engaging them from day to day.

LINCOLNSHIRE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The ninth annual exhibition of this society was held last week in the good old town of Boston. The streets were gaily decorated with flags and festoons and floral wreaths; there were several triumphal arches in Station-road, West-street, and High-street; the Market-place was adorned with an avenue of fir-trees planted in boxes, and the Iron Bridge with festoons of ivy and hanging baskets of flowers. The show-yard, which was entered by an opening in Wide Bargate, opposite the Cattle Market, occupied twenty-three acres of a park and field, divided by a row of fine elm-trees, adjacent to Mr. John Oldrid's garden. It comprised spaces and sheds for the exhibition of cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, and poultry, implements and machinery, smiths' forges and horse-shoeing, seed-stalls, wool, feeding stuffs and manures, with offices for the stewards and secretary, seats for visitors, and a place for a band of music, that of the North Lincoln Militia. The show of cattle was, owing to the recent cattle plague, smaller than at Lincoln last year, but it was still very good. There were some grand beasts among the shorthorns; the one represented in our illustration is the first-prize two-year-old bull, "Lavangro," belonging to Mr. F. J. S. Foljambe, M.P., of Worksop. This animal won also the challenge cup, given by the Marquis of Ripon, for the best bull of any age. The first prize for three-year-old bulls and older was taken by "Sergeant Irwin," bred by Mr. Linton, of Sheriff Hutton, but owned by Mr. T. Atkinson, of Unsworth, Manchester. The first prize for yearling bulls was adjudged to one shown by Mr. J. Torr, M.P., of Grimsby. The cows and heifers were deserving of admiration. The entries of sheep were ninety, against 123 at Lincoln last year, and ninety-seven at Grimsby the year before; but there were some fine rams of the Lincolnshire long-wool breeds. The challenge cup for these, given by Mr. E. Turner, M.P., was won by the four-shear ram of Mr. R. Wright, of Lincoln. In the cross-bred class, the prizes offered by Mr. W. J. Ingram, M.P., were won by Mr. W. Bett, of Fosdyke, Spalding, and Mr. J. M. Frudd, of Bloxholm, Sleaford. The show of horses, altogether, was greater than in any preceding year; it comprised 123 hunters, sixty-four roadsters, and 107 agricultural horses. The first prize for hunters was awarded to a bay gelding shown by Mr. J. B. Booth, of Catterick; Mr. E. Paddison, of Ingleby, Lincoln, also took a prize. The show of agricultural entire horses was the finest ever seen in the county. The first prize for draught horses of this class fell to "Le Bon," a bay horse, nine years old, shown by Mr. Coates Sharpley, of Louth, which is one of those in our illustration. The other horses represented there are the prize pony, "Novelty," belonging to Mr. J. W. Rowland, of East Ville, Boston; and the mare, "Lady Decanter," fifteen years old, belonging to Mr. H. Watson, of Filey, Yorkshire, which gained the first prize for breeding hunters, with her foal, born last April, which is seen by her side. In the pig department we have selected one, a white boar, two years old, bred and owned by Mr. R. Duckering, of Kirton Lindsey, which gained the first prize. The show continued open throughout Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week. In the afternoon of the second day the dinner took place in a large tent on the grounds, near the Wesleyan Chapel. Mr. James Banks Stanhope, president of the society, was in the chair, supported by Mr. J. Maltby, Mayor of Boston, Sir J. D. Astley, M.P., Mr. W. J. Ingram, M.P., Mr. E. Turner, M.P., Mr. Thomas Garfit, Sir Charles Anderson, Bart., the Hon. Murray Finch-Hatton, the Mayor of Louth, and other gentlemen. The company numbered 500; and the speeches, in proposing and replying to the toasts, were pleasantly received. The honorary director or manager, Mr. James Martin, of Wainfleet, and the stewards, Messrs. Pereira Brown, H. Cross, James Hornsby, E. Paddison, J. W. Rowland, J. Seaby, and J. Stephenson, are to be congratulated upon the success of the meeting at Boston.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the operation of the Joint Stock Companies Acts recommend that there shall be two registrations, and that no company shall be allowed to commence business until this process is complete.

Mr. Bishop Kennett, the station-master at St. Leonards, who for a quarter of a century has filled that important post at the Hastings Station, has been presented with a purse of 170 guineas, the list of subscribers including the borough members, the members of the corporation, and all the leading public men in the borough.

The Scotch papers publish the report of the Scotch Fishery Board for the year 1876. It states that, owing to circumstances of an exceptional character, especially from stormy and unfavourable weather, the yield of herrings at the Scotch stations was the smallest since 1859, the decrease in the number of barrels cured, compared with 1875, being 344,000. There was also a falling off in the cod and ling fisheries, 76,000 barrels fewer being cured than in the year preceding. The number of fishing-boats employed at all the stations was 14,547, and these were manned by 45,263 fishermen and boys.

The quarterly meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce was held on Monday. Mr. E. Ashworth, the chairman, reviewed the proceedings of the Chamber since the last quarterly meeting, and deplored the stagnation which exists in all kinds of manufacturing industry. He congratulated the meeting upon the result of the recent deputation to Lord Carnarvon in regard to trade with Gibraltar, and expressed a hope that before long treaties would be "attempted" both with Spain and Portugal. With regard to the Indian import duties, he considered that, although no division followed the recent debate in the House of Commons, the position taken up by the Chamber on this subject has been strengthened.

The Post Office Volunteers, called the 49th Middlesex, of which the Duke of Teck is the honorary Colonel, mustered in the quadrangle of Somerset House last Saturday afternoon, under the command of Colonel J. L. Du Plat Taylor, assisted by Major Thompson, Major Sturgeon, and Major Edis, the latter acting as adjutant. In company with the above regiment was a detachment of Viscount Ranelagh's corps, the whole forming one large body of well-equipped men. At three o'clock the battalion (thoroughly accoutred for camping) paraded in full marching order, Colonel Taylor first inspecting and addressing the men in spirited terms, and describing a plan of movements calculated to ensure regularity, unity, and comfort by road and rail. Shortly afterwards the corps, headed by the fine regimental band, moved off, in presence of a large assembly of spectators, to the Waterloo station for Aldershot, where they form a portion of the camp. The 49th, 2nd, and 21st Middlesex, with the 4th A.B. Hants, comprise one battalion under the command of Colonel Du Plat Taylor.—The Berkshire regiment of volunteers, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., mustered at Reading on Saturday, about 550 strong, and proceeded to Aldershot by train to undergo eight days' training at the camp. The men wore their new regulation helmet, which is modelled on that worn by the troops in India.

1. First Prize Draught Horse, "Le Bon," nine years old, owner Mr. Coates Sharpley, Louth.
4. Pony, "Novelty," five years old, Mr. J. W. Rowland, East Ville, Boston.

2 and 3. Foal and Mare, "Lady Decanter," Mr. H. Watson, Filey.
5. Challenge Cup and First Prize two-year-old Bull, "Lavangro," Mr. Foljambe, M.P.
6. Prize Boar (white), two years old, Mr. R. Duckering, Kirton Lindsey.

NEW BOOKS.

An extraordinary man indeed was he who gave to the world his "Confessions of an English Opium-Eater," and it cannot be truly said that his extraordinary light has been allowed to remain hidden from the public under a bushel; but, nevertheless, it would be as well to consult the two volumes entitled Thomas de Quincey; His Life and Writings, by H. A. Page (John Hogg and Co.), before any rash assertion be made to the effect that everybody knows all that can be known or is worthy of being known about the celebrated "English Opium-Eater." The volumes, at any rate, contain, it would appear, some "unpublished correspondence;" and the appendix, which presents "a medical view of Mr. De Quincey's case," is probably quite new, and is pretty certain to be read with the deepest interest. For, whatever opinion may be held about De Quincey as a philosopher, a logician, a scholar, a writer, a humorist, a critic, there can be no doubt that he was what the doctors call a very interesting case, and that, as a physical phenomenon, strange and abnormal, he is a very attractive subject for study and speculation. Perhaps it is a pity that his bequest of his body to Surgeon's Hall never went beyond the limits, as it seems, of a playful and conditional proposition. There might then, possibly, have been some satisfactory explanation of that which is most incomprehensible in his career. He is assuredly an encouraging object for the contemplation of chronic invalids. He reached the great age of seventy-five years, and he is represented as having been able to walk twenty miles in a day during his last decade; and yet, as most people are aware, he began life as a delicate child, he suffered from privation, almost sheer starvation, and illness in his youth, and he played, as has been generally supposed, all sorts of tricks with his constitution in his manhood. But herein is a marvellous thing: that opium, which is often believed to have been his bane, was, according to the latest theory advanced, his blessing; whether instinctively, as the dog to certain grasses and the cockatoo to certain gravel, or by the hand of Providence, or by mere accident, or by the hope of escaping from pain, he was driven to that drug, which was the best remedy for his complaint. He was afflicted, it is suggested, with "gastric ulcer;" and he was mysteriously prompted to seek the remedy "rendered necessary by persistent chronic disease." It may be asked how it was, then, that he ultimately "relinquished the excessive use of opium;" and the answer is that "the lesion of the stomach, from which he had suffered for so many years of his life, had by that time ceased to occasion him suffering." However this may be, it cannot be denied that a man, of whom it can be said that, for the greater part of his life, "he never ate, not to say enjoyed, a dinner;" that opium was "the only food that his delicate system not unfrequently could receive," and that he nevertheless lived to be seventy-five, would be entitled to be considered remarkable even if he had never penned a line; but that when he happens, in addition, to have won so high a literary reputation as was won by De Quincey, any new information regarding him is almost sure to meet with acceptance. Such information, though not, perhaps, to any important extent, may be discovered in the volumes published by Mr. Page, who comes forward, however, in the character not only of a succedaneous biographer, but also of a champion and a controversialist. In any case, he has provided good entertainment for those who are not yet satiated with the "English Opium-Eater" and all his works.

There is much personal interest attached to the Literary Remains of the late Charles F. Tyrrhitt Drake, F.R.G.S., which have been edited by Mr. Walter Besant (Richard Bentley). All who are familiar with the work of the Palestine Exploration Fund will know something of the subject of this book. It begins with a short memoir written by Mr. Besant, who, as secretary of the fund, was in constant correspondence with Mr. Drake, and is very well qualified to tell the brief story of his life. This has been done in a very charming manner; and the record is of great value as showing what a man may accomplish in the way of good work, even although only a fraction of the span of life has been granted, and even although "from an early age he had to struggle against the disease—asthma—which oppressed all his after life, and interfered during his school days with the activity for which his tall and powerful frame especially fitted him." It was this disease which at first necessitated a winter residence in Morocco, and led to continued visits to Egypt and the Holy Land, where he soon became familiar with the language and manners of the Arabs, which, with his activity and love of travel, fitted him in a special manner as an explorer. In 1869 he went to Sinai, where he met the party who were surveying that region, Majors Wilson and Palmer, R.E., the Rev. F. W. Holland, and Professor Palmer. This led to an arrangement between Drake and Professor Palmer to spend the next winter in Sinai, during which they explored the little-known ground of the Desert of the Tih, or of the Wanderings of the Children of Israel. Later he travelled in the Hauran with Captain and Mrs. Burton, and they published the result in two volumes, under the title of "Unexplored Syria," when they gave to the world for the first time the curious Hamah inscriptions, stone-cut in an Archaic and unknown character. Captain Burton contributes a few interesting notes to the memoir of their former travels, and Mrs. Burton also has penned a few in-memoriam notes, all of which tell how high Drake was valued as a friend, a traveller, and an explorer. He died in Jerusalem in June, 1874, at the very early age of twenty-eight. The volume just published contains a number of fragments he kept by him, which were evidently the beginning, in some of them, of subjects which he had in view to work out in the future. "Notes for a History of Jerusalem" is evidently one of these. "Modern Jerusalem" contains much that is new and fresh. The "Notes on the Birds of Tangier and Eastern Morocco" is said by the authorities to be a very valuable contribution to natural history. It is only to be regretted that these remains, valuable as they are, should be so short, and that the hopes and aspirations of one so willing to work were not allowed to produce the ripened fruit of maturity.

Those who happen to be acquainted with the leading characters of the Scottish Established Church during the last half century will receive with pleasure a couple of volumes of Memorials of John M'Leod Campbell, D.D. (Macmillan and Co.). They will at least know who and what he was, if not from an independent study of his profound theological essays, yet from the frequent mention of him, and his quiet influence upon the most original and catholic religious thinkers of the age, in the memoirs of his cousin, the late Dr. Norman M'Leod. It is forty-five years since John M'Leod Campbell, minister of Row, on the shores of the Gareloch, was expelled from the service of the Church of Scotland for the reputed heresy of teaching that salvation by Christ is freely offered to all human souls, and not exclusively to the elect. Since that period, until his departure from this world, in 1872, he had continued in private to apply a mind of deep moral insight and beautiful singleness of aim to the investigation of those severe problems, the decision of which is most essential to any intelligible, and therefore to any credible, theory of the Gospel. His few published works, though highly valued, have probably done less for the advancement and settlement of religious opinion than his personal communications with many of the most influential clergymen and laymen, both in the Scottish and in the English Church. Among these it is sufficient to name the Rev. F. D. Maurice, the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, and Dean Stanley, in this country, and Principals Shairp, Caird, and Tulloch, besides Norman M'Leod, in North Britain. The series of letters, and reports or anecdotes of conversations, which fill these two volumes, contain a vast amount of pregnant thought upon the most interesting topics of serious meditation. They include many letters to his intimate friend, Mr. Thomas Erskine, of Linlathen, an accomplished layman, whose studies in divinity have been considered the first and chief source of much clear development of lofty thought and earnest feeling in the recent history of Scottish religious life. We observe that the private letters of Mr. Erskine, edited by the Rev. Dr. Hanna, are announced as a separate publication. Among those of Mr. Campbell, which are here edited by his son, the Rev. Donald Campbell, some of them, addressed to his grown-up children, in the latter period of his life, are delightful, from their exquisite purity and serene tenderness of spirit.

We have to notice the publication of two volumes, bearing the title, Mortimer Collins, his Letters and Friendships, with Some Account of his Life, edited by Frances Collins (Sampson Low and Co.). We gave the portrait of Mr. Mortimer Collins, at the time of his lamented death, just a twelvemonth ago. We then bore testimony to his merits as a clever, pleasing, healthy-minded writer of light fiction and sportive prose and verse, who had fairly earned his success and contemporary reputation. Mrs. Collins has doubtless sufficient grounds for now believing that the circle of his personal friends and admirers is wide enough to make this compilation of his private letters, with reminiscences of his habits and manners, and of his domestic life, interesting to many readers. The feelings with which it has been undertaken at least deserve our respectful sympathy. We gladly recognise, in some excellent traits of character here put on record, as well as in the high tone of all his comments, serious or playful, upon the relation of marriage and the regard due to womanhood, the special qualities that must have greatly endeared him to those who knew him best at home. Indeed, there is plenty of evidence that Mortimer Collins, as a man, enjoyed the esteem of his intimate acquaintance, without any drawback. No doubt they have ample cause to cherish his memory as something much better even than a popular author. It is gratifying meantime to quote the following sentences from a letter written by one of his literary friends, soon after his decease:—"I should think no man ever worked harder in the profession of literature than he did; and yet he never seemed bored by it, or allowed others to share the weariness and anxiety which he must often have suffered. I cannot help dwelling upon this, because it was such a striking feature in his character, springing as it did from that deep religion in his soul, which made him feel that life was full of God, and therefore an unjoyous spirit was unworthy of true manliness." Again, the same friend says, "He rejoiced in diffusing gladness. He made one feel that, to make a heaven of earth, man has to love not merely his wife and family, but all living things." The result of such a characteristic mode of viewing life, consistently followed up in daily practice, is apparent in what is here written of him by his widow:—"There are many of us," she says, "who loved Mortimer so intensely that his loss is a terrible agony to us; and yet his influence over us all was such that we feel we should never show signs of mourning, or grief, or sadness. We always speak cheerfully concerning him, for he made us all feel that death was not a thing to be feared. We do not regret that we can no longer have the times with him that he made all too pleasant, but we are grateful that we have had so much pleasure." It is now open to the readers of these memoirs and correspondence, in some degree, to share with their editor the pleasure of which she here speaks; and we believe they will not be disappointed. They will find many agreeable little stories and familiar anecdotes of Mortimer Collins at home in his rural abode of Knowl-hill, Berkshire, and many sparkling witticisms in his abundant private correspondence, frequently bursting forth in extemporised stanzas of merry and musical verse.

A French book of travel—namely, Inde et Himalaya: Souvenirs de Voyage, by Comte Goblet d'Alviella (Paris: E. Plon and Co.), has been commended to our notice. The Comte d'Alviella was in India the winter before last, when the Prince of Wales was making his tour there. He wrote letters describing the events at the time to the Indpendance Belge, which correspondence was the basis of the present volume of travels. The letters were very graphic and lively, and being in the French language, they were quoted by most of the leading journals on the Continent. They were at the time almost the only source from which not only the Belgians and French, but the rest of Europe gained information of the display of Oriental magnificence which took place in honour of the "héritier de la Couronne Britannique dans son futur empire de l'Hindoustan." It was fortunate upon this occasion that the foreign writer was not a rabid Anglophobe, but an intelligent and active collector of facts, and brought a clear and impartial mind to bear upon them in his judgments. In the volume just published he offers many remarks on the condition of things in India, which might be worthy of consideration by those who rule that country, for a fresh and liberal mind such as the Comte d'Alviella brings to bear must see things in new and original points of view. There are also some capital descriptions of the scenery, the architecture, and of the many sights which the progress of the Shahzadeh through India brought forth. In his hurried visit the Comte d'Alviella managed to make two visits to the Himalayas. The visit to Sikhim, in the Darjeeling district, is that which he dwells most upon. He gives some very interesting details of the Buddhist priests and their religious services in that part of the world.

The Hints estate, near Tamworth, comprising the manor, mansion-house, village, and estate of 1576 acres, which for nearly 300 years has been held by the Floyer family, has been sold to Lord de Clifford for £127,000, exclusive of the timber, which is valued at nearly £9000.

The distribution of medals and of the Mansion House Fund to the rescued Pontypridd miners and their rescuers is arranged to take place to-day (Saturday). The Albert medals will be presented by Lord Aberdare, whilst the Lord Mayor will distribute the money, and Major Duncan, R.A., LL.D., of Woolwich, will present the medals of the order of St. John of Jerusalem.—The six leaders of the rescuing party who recently addressed the Lord Mayor, protesting against the awards of the Mansion House Tynewydd committee, have further communicated with his Lordship in reference to a statement attributed to him, that they had asked for a withdrawal of the unconditional acceptance of their refusal of the testimonial of plate originally intended for them. They emphatically deny that they have done anything of the kind, and still adhere to their protest; but, nevertheless, they are prepared to give to his Lordship "a hearty welcome to their time-honoured hills."

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We gave last week a summary of Mr. Mapleson's season at this establishment, which closed on Saturday. A postscript thereto is necessary in reference to the benefit of Mdle. Etelka Gerster, which took place on the closing night, when that excellent artist appeared as Astriframante (the Queen of Night), in "Il Flauto Magico." The music of this character was written by Mozart for the special display, in two bravura songs, of the voice of a particular singer, who possessed in a rare degree the extreme high soprano range, reaching to F in alt. Mdle. Gerster achieved a brilliant success by her thorough command of its enormous difficulties, both as to compass and execution. Nothing could be finer than her delivery of the staccato and scale passages, each air having elicited enthusiastic applause, which in the case of the second ("Gli angui d'inferno") was such as to necessitate its repetition. Madame Marie Roze, as Pamina, sang with much effect, particularly in the duet, with Papageno, "La dove prende," in the pathetic aria "Ah! lo so," and in the declamatory passages for Pamina in the last finale. Signor Del Puente acted and sang with much spirit in the farcical character of Papageno; Signor Foli gave the music of Sarastor with much impressiveness, especially the aria "Qui sdegno." Mdle. Alwina Valleria was a vivacious representative of the small part of Papagena; Signor Carrion, as Tamino, sang smoothly; and Signor Rinaldini was a very efficient Monostatos. Subordinate characters were filled by Mdles. Baumeister and Clinton and Madame Lablache (the three Genii); Mdles. Robiati, Filomena, and Risati (the attendants on the Queen of Night), Signor Brocolini (Un Oratore), and Signori Grazi and Franceschi (the two armed men).

Mdle. Gerster's reception, by a crowded audience, on her benefit night afforded ample proof of the great and genuine success which she has obtained during her first London season.

"Il Flauto Magico" was followed by the National Anthem; and with this closed the Italian opera season of 1877.

This (Saturday) afternoon the performances of operas in English by the Rose Hersée company begin at the Crystal Palace with a version of Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," in which Madame Rose Hersée will sustain the character of the Countess; Madame Cave Ashton being cast for Susanna.

On Saturday next (Aug. 11) Covent Garden Theatre will be reopened for promenade concerts, under the management of Messrs. Gatti, and with Signor Arditi as conductor, as in past seasons.

The appearance of Mdle. Titens at the Leeds Musical Festival (to take place in the middle of September) being still doubtful, the committee have engaged Mdle. Albani. Should Mdle. Titens sufficiently recover to take part in the festival, the principal soprano solos will be divided between the two ladies.

THEATRES.

The theatrical season may now be considered as terminated; even the French drama has closed its brief cycle, and the Gaiety welcomes back its old English actors. Miss Farrer reappears after her illness, and Mr. E. Terry returns, with Byron's "Weak Woman" and burlesque of "Bohemian G'yurl." These require no criticism. Mr. Henry Irving took his benefit on Monday, in "Hamlet," to a house crowded in all parts. He will not reappear until next December. Mr. Joseph Jefferson, however, continues at the Haymarket until the 11th inst. Yesterday the Prince of Wales's closed for the usual vacation. There is some hope for the future, since Mr. Chatterton has explained the nature of the piece to be produced at Drury-Lane, recently announced as a new realistic play by Mr. W. G. Wills, in which Miss Leighton will, it seems, sustain the leading rôle. The drama, a version of Sir Walter Scott's "Peveril of the Peak," will be produced under the title of "England in the Days of Charles II." A new drama by Mr. Paul Merritt was inaugurated on Monday at the Prince of Wales's, Birmingham, entitled "Daughter of Eve." At the Aquarium, Westminster, Dr. Lynn appears every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

Miss Glyn's readings were continued on Friday week with "Measure for Measure," and concluded on Tuesday with "King John," the tragedy being distinctly and adequately represented. The success of the series has been highly satisfactory. For Friday is announced an extra reading, consisting of a repetition of "Macbeth." We trust, as we have already stated, that the entire series may be repeated.

FINE ARTS.

At the Byron Gallery in Savile-row is to be seen a picture purporting to be "Gainsborough's renowned portrait of the Duchess of Devonshire." The owner of the present work is Mr. John Foster, a gentleman resident in Australia, to whose father it is said to have been given by the Duchess.

Mr. Louis Haghe and Mr. Edwin Long, A.R.A., awarded the medals and certificates to lady students in the Crystal Palace Company's School of Art, Science, and Literature on Saturday last. The silver medal for water-colour painting in the class conducted by Mr. E. A. Goodall was given to Miss F. Fawcner, of Cornworthy House, Lee; the certificate in this class to Miss Townsend, from Attleborough Hall, Nuneaton; and a drawing of the Pompeian Court by Miss Bertha Griffith was highly commended. The silver medal for water-colour painting in the class conducted by Mr. Frederick Smallfield was given to Miss Ledsam, of Norwood; the certificate to Miss Maud Robinson, of Streatham. The certificate for drawing from the antique in the class conducted by Mr. W. K. Shenton was adjudged to Miss Kate Gow, of Streatham.

A building has been erected in Derby to be permanently devoted to the purposes of art education, and its completion is now being fittingly celebrated by an exhibition within its walls of paintings, sculptures, and other forms of art of unusual variety and attractiveness. Contributions have been successfully applied for from the art collections in most of our leading towns, such as London, Birmingham, Manchester, &c.; while many valuable cases of jewellery, electrotypes, Persian pottery, with examples of decorative art by Messrs. Poynter, Leighton, &c., have been lent by the South Kensington Museum. The Indian works of art and textile fabrics are the loan of the Secretary of State for India. The paintings number over 700. The collection of bronzes is particularly good, as are those of Dresden china, Lambeth faience, and terra-cotta wares.

Great numbers of what were supposed to be Colorado beetles, and to have been hatched from eggs brought in seed potatoes from America, having been discovered on potato plants in the suburbs of Hereford, the Home Secretary sent down Captain Tennant, the naturalist, to inquire into the matter. By that gentleman it has been found that the insect observed was one of the ladybird species, and a good friend of the potato grower.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1877.

A word or two respecting the threatened Famine in India. We cannot do much, it is true, even if we can do anything, to avert or mitigate the seemingly impending tragedy. Such as it is likely to be, however, it will come nearer home to what are called "British interests" in India, and will more largely involve the interests of humanity, than anything recently reported to us of the Russo-Turkish War in Bulgaria. We do not except even the Battle of Plevna, the frightful loss of life which it occasioned, the repulse of the Russians, and the probable derangement, in consequence, of their plan of the campaign. The prospect we have to face is a far gloomier one than the actual events which have occurred South of the Danube, dreadful though they be. It is true that the last Telegram from Lord Lytton is a shade more favourable in its contents than those which have been successively received during the last few weeks, but it is far from being sufficiently favourable to relieve us of the suspense which former messages have created. In the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras scarcity almost amounting to a famine has prevailed for some time past. Half a million human beings have already succumbed, in the latter Presidency alone, to the diseases consequent upon a want of sufficient food. 1,750,000 fellow-creatures, and our fellow-subjects, are now dependent on daily relief. If this were all, one might still hope that the calamity might be so vigorously grappled with by the Government of India as to reduce its proportions to those of the Bengal Famine in Lord Northbrook's time. But it is not all. A second "period of famine," as Lord Salisbury told his hearers some few days since at Cowper's Hill, "is settling down over Southern India." A second harvest seems likely to fail; and in that case the horrors of famine will for many months to come be increased rather than diminished. It is even calculated by men who are intimately acquainted with the districts of which they speak that the claimants of relief from the hands of the Government may rise before the crisis is over from 1,750,000 to 20,000,000. Without adopting this estimate, it seems to be too probable that, under any circumstances, a terrible period of anxiety lies before us, which not even a sufficient rainfall at the present season will be able wholly to avert.

There are several circumstances, as the public is reminded by Lord Salisbury, which differentiate the famine in prospect from that which occurred and was mastered in Bengal. There the task of the Government was limited to a comparatively narrow territorial area. In Madras it is totally different. "The population in that Presidency is not dense, the territory is enormous, and relief has to be distributed in the main through European officers." Where are they to be found in adequate numbers for the exigency? To be of use, they must know the language of the people, and there are large districts in Southern India where Hindostani would be of less use than English. Any attempt to cope with this difficulty would require time, and time is the one desideratum that cannot be commanded. Then, again, the means of transport are necessarily scanty. The vast region exposed to the liability of famine is traversed by but one railway. Grain must be carried from one point to another by cattle, and the terrible drought has already swept off vast numbers of the animals which the effective distribution of food for man imperatively requires. The task before the Indian Administration is consequently one which no mere energy or official self-devotion can fully perform. The pecuniary outlay may, perhaps, be provided against; even the quantity of grain required may be collected; but how is it to be distributed over so vast a territory, and especially how are outlying districts to be supplied in due time with the food which the sustenance of life requires? We have no doubt whatever that the Indian Administration will do its very best to master the emergency, but we fear that its most devoted and unwearied efforts will fall far short of what is called for by the occasion!

There is, perhaps, less evil to be apprehended on the score of the pecuniary expenses incurred by the Government of India in providing, as far as it is possible to do it, against this terrible calamity than Indian statesmen appear to foresee. Doubtless, the financial condition of the Eastern Peninsula is far from healthy, and is quite unequal to the strain of fresh burdens. But, after all, the money spent in the saving of human life, however it may cripple or dwarf the development of national progress in India, can hardly be regarded as ill spent. This is our primary duty, and it has to be performed, whatever may be the inconveniences to which we may be subjected thereby. Public works will, no doubt, have to be largely postponed for want of the revenues which have been otherwise swallowed up. But the moral effect upon the people of India of even a lavish expenditure for such an end will not be the same as it might have been had the money been required for a great war. To some extent also we may deepen any beneficial impression made upon the population by the liberality of the Government, by the spontaneous liberality of our people at home. We have reason to believe that urgent appeals to the generosity of the British public in mitigation, as far as it can be mitigated, of the present calamity will be brought to bear upon the British people. Money, it is true, however abundant, cannot reach the full limit of the evil to which the population of Southern India seem destined to be exposed. But whatever can be done thereby, we are confident will be done. It will serve not merely to diminish suffering, but also to display sympathy. We have lately somewhat paraded our anxiety to incorporate India in the British Empire. We have thus increased our responsibilities to the populations of that vast dependency. We know not how far the Act by which we crowned the union between the United Kingdom and India may have gratified any portion of the teeming population of that Peninsula, but we are satisfied that we shall be expected to perform to the best of our ability the duties to our fellow-subjects which we have declared ourselves willing, and even anxious, to undertake. For this, however, we may probably have to wait awhile. The appeal has not yet been formally made. It will depend mainly upon the manner and form in which it is presented to this country how far the response to it will meet reasonable expectation. The need is so great, so pressing, and so far beyond the reach of Government, that there need be scarcely any scruple in view of confounding the duties of Government with those of individuals. The exigency claims, and will have, we hope, the strenuous and hearty co-operation of all. And even then, we fear, unless tidings of a happier tenour should reach us within a few days, the calamity in prospect will be unprecedently overwhelming in its magnitude.

The Earl and Countess of Morley and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Grey have arrived at Homburg.

The Right Hon. Sir Henry and Lady Elliot and Miss Elliot have arrived at Minto House, Roxburghshire.

The Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers, M.P., and Miss Louise Childers have left town for America.

Great rejoicings took place on Tuesday and Wednesday at Bryanstone by Lord Portman's tenantry in Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, in honour of the coming of age of the Hon. W. H. B. Portman, eldest son.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Captain Horace Ricardo, Grenadier Guards, eldest son of Mr. Percy Ricardo, of Bramley Park, Surrey, with Miss Henrietta Goulburn, eldest daughter of Colonel Goulburn, of Betchworth House, Surrey, was solemnized on Tuesday at St. George's, Hanover-square. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a dress of white satin duchesse, the corsage bodice trimmed with pointed lace and small bouquets of orange-flowers, the skirt being draped with the same lace and also trimmed with orange-blossoms and satin bows. Over a wreath of orange-blossoms and myrtle flowed a Brussels lace veil, fastened to the hair by two diamond stars, the other jewels being a diamond cross and diamond bracelet, gifts from her father and mother. The bridesmaids were Miss Cecilia Goulburn (her sister), the Ladies Evelyn and Violet Gordon-Lennox (daughters of the Earl and Countess of March), Miss Lloyd, Miss Edith Townshend, Miss Harford, Miss Hartopp, and Miss Ada Hartopp. Their dresses were composed of white silk en princesse, which were draped with white muslin, with insertions of antique lace and a wide lace edge; white straw hats trimmed to harmonise with the dresses. Mr. Cecil Ricardo, brother of the bridegroom, was the best man. The Very Rev. E. Meyrick Goulburn, Dean of Norwich, performed the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. G. R. Kensit, M.A., Vicar of Betchworth. Colonel and Mrs. Goulburn received their friends at breakfast at their residence in Eaton-square. Captain and Mrs. Ricardo left for Paris for the honeymoon.

The marriage of the Hon. William Cansfield Gerard, eldest son of Lord Gerard, and Miss Mary Milner, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Beilby William Milner, of West Retford House, Notts, and granddaughter of the Archbishop of Armagh, was celebrated on Tuesday in King Henry the Seventh's Chapel, Westminster Abbey. The Rev. Henry White, of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, performed the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by her brother, wore a white satin princess gown, trimmed with white duchesse point lace and bunches of orange-blossoms, a wreath of real orange-blossom, and a tulle veil. Her ornaments were diamond stars and a diamond bracelet, the gift of the bridegroom; a pearl and diamond pendant, the gift of Lord Gerard; a pearl and diamond bracelet, given by Lady Gerard; and a turquoise and diamond bracelet, the gift of her mother. The bridesmaids were Miss Ethel and Miss Emily Milner, sisters of the bride, Miss Constance Heywood and Miss Fairfax, her cousins. They were dressed in white cashmere and blue silk dresses and Marie Stuart bonnets, and each wore a gold bracelet set with diamonds and pearls, the gift of the bridegroom. The Earl of Rosebery was best man. After the marriage Mrs. Henry Milner received the wedding party at breakfast at Princes-gate, after which the bride and bridegroom left by special train for The Durdans, near Epsom, the seat of the Earl of Rosebery. The presents were numerous and costly, including a diamond and turquoise pin, the gift of the Prince of Wales to the bridegroom.

After the usual morning service in Westminster Abbey on Thursday the marriage of Lord Garvagh and Baroness Florence de Bretton was, by permission of the Dean, celebrated with full choral service. There was a numerous congregation. The service was performed by the Rev. J. Fleming, assisted by the Rev. Henry White and the Rev. S. Flood Jones (Precentor of the Abbey). The bride, who wore a white satin dress, trimmed with orange-blossoms, and a Brussels lace veil fastened with diamonds, was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. C. Treffry. The bridesmaids, seven in number, were Miss Lawrie, Miss Monck, Miss A. Monck, Miss Cooper, Miss Swain, Miss Florence Treffry, and Miss Stanley. The bridesmaids wore white silk princess dresses, tulle veils, and wreaths of dark red flowers, and each carried a splendid bouquet. The best man was Mr. Dalrymple. After the service the party proceeded to the wedding breakfast, at No. 1, Chesham-place, and subsequently the bride and bridegroom departed for their honeymoon to the seat of Lord Dillon, in Oxfordshire.

The marriage of the Lady Mayoress (Miss Ada Louisa White) with Mr. Cecil Herbert Thornton Price was solemnized on Thursday afternoon, at St. Paul's Cathedral, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishop of Ely, Canon Liddon, the Rev. W. C. F. Webber, the Rev. J. M. Robertson (Chaplain to the Lord Mayor), and the Rev. W. S. H. Meadows, Vicar of Chigwell. The fact that a wedding had not taken place in the cathedral for 120 years gave additional interest to the ceremony, and the building was thronged from end to end. The bride was attended by sixteen bridesmaids—namely, her sister, Miss Florence White, Miss Curtis, Miss Kate White, and Miss Wilton (her cousins), Miss Annie Foy, Miss Mabel Foy, Miss Fairclough, Miss Hadley, Miss Stranack, Miss Hubbuck, Miss Margetson, Miss Kennedy, Miss Tegner, Miss E. Smith, Miss Mills, and Miss A. Mills. The bride's dress was a princess robe of rich white brocade. The dress was trimmed with garlands of orange blossoms and leaves down each side, while similar garlands fell half way down the train, which was brocaded with roses and rosebuds, and was bordered with a ruche of tulle. The front of the dress was trimmed with puffs of white tulle, divided by rows of white satin. The bride wore a large Brussels lace veil, and carried an enormous bouquet of orange-blossoms, stephanotis, &c. The bridesmaids were dressed in pale pink cashmere with long polonaises of pink silk. They wore wreaths of roses round their heads, and pale pink tulle veils. After the service, Dr. Stainer played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." The wedding breakfast took place at the Mansion House. On the previous day the Lady Mayoress received a number of wedding gifts. That of the Corporation of London—a service of plate valued at three hundred guineas—was presented by Mr. Alderman Finnis; Mr. R. Gray, as Master of the Vintners' Company, handed to her Ladyship a beautiful gold bracelet and diamond pendant; and Mr. Stewart, Master of the Farriers' Company, a valuable silver tea service. The officers of the Lord Mayor's household gave the Lady Mayoress a valuable opera-glass.

THEATRES.

Encouraged by the success of the first children's pantomime at the Adelphi, Mr. Chatterton has again induced Mr. Blanchard to repeat the experiment, and on Saturday, accordingly, "Little Red Riding-Hood; or, Harlequin Grandmamma," was produced. The management have done their utmost in the picturesque adornment of the familiar theme, and the scenic accessories are such as to secure the admiration of all spectators. The infant actors have now become famous, and their performance of the different characters is marked by histrionic excellence in great variety. Among these honourable mention is deserved by Miss Lizzie Seymour, in the part of Corneygrains, singing-master and dancer; by Miss Abrahams, in Pomona; and particularly the Infant-Cherito, who, as Nonpareil, the leader of the Fruit-Fairies, performs marvels of execution. A duet, entitled "Swiss Toys from the Lowther Arcade," produced a round of applause for Bella Goward and her sister. In conclusion, Mr. Chatterton appeared, attended with two Lilliputian footmen, who were the occasion of much mirth, to receive the congratulations of the audience.

A new drama has been produced at the Pavilion, entitled "Honour Among Thieves," which has ensured a signal success. The name of the author is not given, but the story and structure of the piece indicate considerable practical skill, and the characters are distinguished by broad and striking contrasts, which are strongly effective. The basis of the argument is a forged will, made in favour of a scapegrace nephew, who, aided by two rascally lawyers, signs it with the hand of his dead uncle. The leading part was admirably sustained by Mr. Carden, whose powerful acting ensured the success of the new production. The scenery and accessories of the piece were all of a costly description, emulating the best of such embellishments at more fashionable theatres, though scarcely better conducted.

On Friday, last week, as an extra evening, Miss Glyn gave her second reading, as announced, of "Macbeth." We trust that this may be the virtual commencement of a new series. Her representation of the various stages of the dramatic interest was both artistic and complete. It wanted little of actual acting, except costume and stage accessories. A noteworthy quality of her vocal interpretation of this solemn tragedy was its comprehensiveness, and in parts a subtle significance indicating a profound study of the poet's design.

Miss Carlisle has taken a benefit at the Crystal Palace, appearing as Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons." It was her first appearance in the character, but will not be her last. The performance is of great promise.

Messrs. John Sanger and Son have again taken a lease of the Agricultural Hall, and will reopen it at Christmas with a grand spectacle representing the Russo-Turkish war, on a large scale, including a thousand men and horses and a dozen or two of elephants and camels.

A general meeting of the renters, or debenture-holders, of Drury-Lane Theatre was held last Saturday in the saloon of the theatre, for the purpose of receiving and considering a report from the renters' committee as to the management of the theatre by the committee of the proprietors. The report stated that the closing of the theatre for Italian opera during the whole of the London season had been very disastrous, involving a large depreciation in the value of the three hundred £500 debenture stock shares, and a large reduction in the value of the saleable admissions from £6 to £8 to a difficult sale at some 20s. each. A serious error as to the value of the renters' property was made by the chairman at the last proprietors' meeting, in stating that the value of the shares had risen from £92 to £105. Unfortunately, the facts were exactly opposite, a £500 share being £13 less valuable in 1877 than in 1866. The committee, however, were not alarmed at the gloomy prognostications regarding the future of the theatre. They again protested against the committee of proprietors retaining entirely and exclusively the management of the property. The £100 shares had for many years ceased to have any financial or pecuniary value whatever, and the committee were, therefore, of opinion that steps should be taken by the renters and debenture-holders, either by application to Parliament or the Court of Chancery, to obtain control over the theatre. The report was, after some discussion, adopted.

POLITICAL ITEMS.

Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., Financial Secretary to the Treasury, has been appointed First Lord of the Admiralty, an appointment which will give general satisfaction. Consequent upon his acceptance of the office a writ for a new election for Westminster has been issued, and the High Bailiff has fixed Saturday (to-day) at noon for the nomination of candidates. Meanwhile an influential meeting of the electors has been held at the offices of the Westminster Conservative Association, and Mr. Smith has put forth an address to his constituents. No opposition to his re-election is expected. A portrait of Mr. Smith appeared in the number of this paper for April 4, 1874, consequent upon his appointment to the office of Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

About 1400 members of the Bolton Liberal Association and their friends visited the grounds of Hawarden Castle last Saturday, and were addressed on sanitary matters by Mr. Gladstone, whom they found with his son, Mr. W. H. Gladstone, the member for Whitby, engaged in felling a tree. A summary of Mr. Gladstone's speech is given at page 138.

A Conservative demonstration was held on Monday at Hatfield Park, the seat of the Marquis of Salisbury. At a banquet given in the grounds, which was attended by a large number of members of Parliament and presided over by Viscount Sandon, the Marquis of Salisbury, in responding for her Majesty's Ministers, expressed his belief that there were no "working men" in the thorough sense of the term who deserved the term so completely as his colleagues who sat in the House of Commons. He did not know that the House of Lords could claim either to share their labours or the honour which attached to them, unless it should please Parliament, by way of pain or penalty, to impose upon Messrs. Biggar and Parnell a temporary peerage. The noble Marquis deplored the present war, and said it was only right that, as England was the ally and friend of both the contending parties, there should be neutrality, not only in acts but also of speech. The Government were thoroughly convinced that the patriotism of Englishmen, if they had need to appeal to it, was equal to any emergency, and would shrink from no sacrifice which the interests and honour of the country might demand. Speeches were also made by the chairman, Mr. W. H. Smith, Sir C. Russell, Mr. W. Gordon, and other gentlemen.

The recent proceedings of the "Obstructives" in Parliament were discussed on Monday at a meeting of Home-Rule members held in London, presided over by Mr. A. Moore. Mr. Butt addressed the meeting, and a resolution was proposed declaring the conduct of a small section of the party to be reprehensible. Mr. Parnell made a speech denying that his policy was one of obstruction, and an amendment was moved to the effect that the resolution was inopportune. The meeting, however, broke up without any decision being come to.

At a Liberal gathering held near Bath on Monday Lord John Harvey, one of the Liberal candidates for the representation of that city at the next election, said he was afraid that Parliament had not now the same high reputation which it had a few years ago. He expressed approval of Mr. Gladstone's policy on the Eastern Question.

Poole Conservative Association, of which Sir Ivor Bartie Guest, Bart., is the president, celebrated its annual fête at Camford Park, near Wimborne, on Monday. There was a very large gathering.

Lord Burghley, eldest son of the Marquis of Exeter, is the Conservative candidate for North Northamptonshire, vacant through the death of Mr. Ward Hunt. In his address to the electors, he says he approves of the home policy of the Government, and advocates neutrality in the war, "at the same time jealously watching those interests which so much affect the position of this country in the East." The Hon. Thomas Fitzwilliam having declined to contest the seat, Captain Edmund Wyatt-Edgell, of Stanford Hall, grandson of the late Baroness Bray, has consented to become the Liberal candidate, and has been accepted by the party as their candidate. Captain Wyatt-Edgell has issued his address. He states that he will promote all measures calculated to forward the principles of civil and religious liberty. He feels that the agricultural classes have great cause to complain, additional burdens having been cast upon them without any compensating advantages. He would support any measure tending to their relief, either by a more equal adjustment of local taxation or by the formation of county financial boards. Captain Edgell would support a measure for assimilating the county to the borough franchise. He counsels neutrality with regard to the present war. The polling will take place on Monday next.

The Conservative leaders in the South Shropshire division met at Shrewsbury last week to select a candidate for the vacant seat. The choice fell upon Sir Baldwin Leighton, whose late father represented the division for many years. In his address to the electors Sir Baldwin states that he is in favour of the establishment of county boards and increased grants from the Treasury for local purposes. The nomination is fixed for Thursday, at Church Stretton, and the polling for next Tuesday, if there should be a contest.

Messrs. Mills and Johnson, the members for Exeter, addressed their constituents at an outdoor Conservative demonstration on Monday. Both gentlemen alluded to the Irish obstructives, and characterised their conduct as calculated to bring into contempt an institution of which the country was most proud.

The Buckingham Conservative Association held a public dinner in the Townhall, Buckingham, on Tuesday evening. The Hon. Percy Barrington presided, and among those present were Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., Mr. Egerton Hubbard, M.P., and about eighty members of the association.

Mr. A. J. Balfour, the Conservative representative of Hertford, addressed his constituents in the Corn Exchange on Tuesday evening, and a vote of confidence was passed.

The nomination for Clare took place at Ennis on Monday, when Mr. Reeves (Conservative), Sir Bryan O'Loughlen, Bart. (Home Ruler), Mr. Burton (Liberal Conservative), and The O'Gorman Mahon (Home Ruler) were nominated. The Roman Catholic clergy announced from the altar on Sunday their support of Sir Bryan O'Loughlen. The polling is fixed for Monday next.

Speaking at Insch, Aberdeenshire, last Saturday, Sir J. D. Elphinstone, M.P., one of the Lords of the Treasury, referred at some length to the policy of obstruction, saying that it was impossible that five or six men should be permitted to bring the Government of this great Empire into ridicule.

Mr. John Carrick, of Brampton, has been elected Coroner for East Cumberland, in succession to his late father, who held the office for forty-two years.

The Townhall and Market-house at Wincanton, Somerset, were destroyed by fire on Thursday morning. Several other houses were much damaged.

THE WAR: RETREAT OF THE TURKISH ARMY FROM TERSEK.—ARTILLERY COVERING THE RETREAT.
FROM A SKETCH BY ONE OF OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE WAR.

Our Special Artists with the Russian and Turkish armies continue to furnish a variety of sketches, representing many incidents both of the Bulgarian and of the Armenian campaign. We are grieved to observe that they supply fresh testimony of the horribly cruel and wantonly malignant behaviour of the native Christians and the Mohammedans to each other. The Bulgarians, too frequently encouraged or assisted by the Cossacks of the Russian army, seem to have been perpetrating such deeds of havoc and foulest outrage, ending in wholesale massacre, where Moslem families are left at their mercy, as to rival the worst atrocities committed by the Circassians and Bashi-Bazouks last year in other parts of the country. Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist with the Turkish army, was lately at Shumla, where he saw a dozen or more Turkish women and children who had been wounded by the Cossack lances and pistol-bullets. He has sent us a sketch of these poor creatures showing their wounds, from the old grandmother to the baby in its cradle. Herr Schönberg, an Austrian artist, who has accompanied the Russian army in the east of Bulgaria since the beginning of the war, and whose sketches have been seen and approved by the Grand Duke Nicholas and by the Emperor Alexander himself, reluctantly bears witness to the barbarities of the Cossacks in the Dobrukscha. He assures us that they have attacked and destroyed the Tartar villages of that province, towards the seacoast; and, not content with plundering and burning the houses, they have overtaken fugitive parties of those inoffensive people, whom they have scourged and otherwise ill-treated, and finally killed, afterwards carrying off the goods and chattels they had with them. An outrage of this infamous character is described by Herr Schönberg as having taken place on July 23, near Kadikoi, on the road from Mangalia to Varna, about six German miles south of Kustendje, from which town his letter is dated. He and two companions, who are German newspaper correspondents, saw from a distance the Cossacks ride down upon the waggon that conveyed the defenceless Tartar family and its scanty remaining possessions; he afterwards remonstrated with the Russian officer in command, who merely shrugged his shoulders. These Cossacks were part of a large number who rode forth out of Kustendje that day, and divided themselves into sundry parties, spreading over the whole country south of Kustendje, and visiting every hamlet and village. As the Russian Commander-in-Chief in Bulgaria has deigned to accept from Herr Schönberg an excellent water-colour drawing of the blowing-up of the Turkish monitor Lutfi Djelil at Braila, which his Imperial Highness has given to the Emperor Alexander, we presume that Herr Schönberg's evidence will not be rejected as hostile to the Russian side. It is here published for the information both of the Russian Government and of Lord Derby, to whom Colonel Wellesley, the British Military Commissioner at the Grand Duke's headquarters, is said to bring an official report concerning the alleged misdeeds of Russian irregular troops. On the other hand, we have just received from an occasional correspondent some terrible proofs of the most recent massacres, with torture and violation of females, practised by the Turkish Bashi-Bazouks in the Bulgarian town of Yeni Sagra, on the south side of the Balkans. The frightful tale was related by Captain James Gambier, R.N., writing from that place on the 18th ult., in a letter which has appeared this week in the Times, and he has sent us a few sketches of the hideous objects that he saw there only two days after the massacre. We cannot present to our readers Engravings of these and similar sketches, but there is no doubt of their correctness. The actual occurrence, in many Bulgarian districts, of every imaginable and possible crime, including those most abhorrent to nature, perpetrated by men reckoned in the service of the Sultan, though really mere savages of wild and lawless Asiatic hordes, is beyond all dispute; and it is certain that such horrors are still going on, wherever the movements of the regular armies cause the sudden removal of Turkish governing authorities, without at once supplying their place by the arrival of Russian troops. This may be expected throughout Roumelia and Bosnia, as well as Bulgaria, unless some foreign Power should intervene. It is but too apparent that the Russian military authorities, whose attention is sufficiently engrossed by their own strategic difficulties, fail to control the equally ferocious and licentious bands of irregulars following their standard in the invasion of Turkey. Above all, we cannot resist the deplorable conviction that, among these very Bulgarians of the Eastern Orthodox Church, whose liberation is the avowed aim of the Russian crusade, are numerous popular gangs of the vilest ruffians in Europe, now banded together for the purpose of plundering, outraging, and slaughtering their Moslem neighbours. A correspondent of the Pall-Mall Gazette writes from Therapia, under date July 27, a letter headed "Organised Atrocity." In this he alleges that before even Russia declared war there was formed at Bucharest, under the auspices of the Pan Slavist committees, a "Brigade of Vengeance," composed of four battalions, chiefly Bulgarian revolutionaries, whose connection with the insurrection of last year barred their return to Turkey. Joined to them were a number of professional ruffians of the sort which has furnished recruits to the "insurrection" in the Herzegovina. The writer says:—"This brigade was organised with the avowed object of taking advantage of the war to put to death every Mohammedan in European Turkey upon whom they could lay hands—man, woman, or child; to burn every mosque and every Moslem habitation; in short, to exterminate the Mussulman population of Bulgaria and Thrace. The 'Brigade of Vengeance' has been brought over into Bulgaria under cover of the Russian advance, and it has been doing its work in co-operation with the Cossacks." We know nothing, for our part, of the existence of such a corps as is here described; but we may not conceal the testimony which has reached us of some facts which seem to admit this explanation.

The Sketches engraved for this week's Number of our Journal are those representing less repulsive subjects. Our Special Artist with the Russians in the Dobrukscha has indeed found in the burning villages of Tergesek (or Erkesikoi) and Baltacesti, halfway between Hirsova and Medjidieh, lamentable subjects for his pencil. There was no fighting with the Turks at these places; may we not ask why they were destroyed? The wanton desecration of the Mohammedan graveyard at Matchin is shown in another sketch by the same hand. The two "English Prisoners of War," who are seen in the custody of Russian soldiers at Tchernavoda, are Mr. Harris, traffic manager of the Danube and Black Sea Railway from that place to Kustendje, and Mr. Roff, its chief engineer or superintendent of locomotives. The railway, which was constructed by an English company, had been left intact by the Turks when they abandoned that line of defence. Messrs. Harris and Roff remained in charge of the line and rolling stock, but when they conducted a train to Tchernavoda they were arrested by the Russian military officer there in command, who sent them under escort to General Zimmermann. After some hours' duration, they were released, and Mr. Harris went on board H.M.S. Rapid at Kustendje, the Russians taking possession of the railway. The smaller propeller steamboat Evelina, belonging to this Railway Company, has since been employed from Kustendje to fetch off the distressed Bulgarian fugitives on the neighbouring seacoast. Our Special Artist has contributed a few Sketches of that service, which will appear next week.

The other Illustrations now given are from sketches by Mr. Melton Prior, with the Turkish army in its strategic retreat upon Shumla (at Tersenek on the 12th ult.), and one by Mr. Bell, in Armenia, representing the field-telegraph office tent in the camp of Mouktar Pasha at Sevin, or Zewin, where a battle was fought not long ago, to the defeat of the Russians. We refer also to our map of the country around Plevna, with the accompanying record of the important military operations which took place there at the beginning of last week. The battle of Plevna was described in our last, and subsequent accounts have proved it to be a serious check for the Russian advance into Turkey. But it cannot be regarded as decisive of the campaign, though it has compelled the Russians to abandon their positions south of the Balkan. They have now brought large reinforcements over the Danube, and on Wednesday last they made an attack on Lofcha, but were again repulsed with some loss. Active operations seem also to be renewed in Armenia, but we can scarcely yet discern the plan of a fresh campaign.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

We learn from Paris that Marshal MacMahon intends to visit the Western, Southern, and Midland Departments in the course of the present month, but that neither his route nor the date of his departure have yet been fixed.

M. Thiers visited the Castle of Stors on Sunday, and attended a political meeting in the neighbourhood to recommend a candidate for the approaching election. His reception by the country people was a kind of triumph, and he was saluted by loud cries of "Vive M. Thiers!" "Vive la République!" In the course of a speech, in which he advocated the return of M. Senard by the constituency, he said that, like that gentleman, "he believed that to-day only the Republic is possible."

It is stated that attempts are being made to patch up an alliance between the Government and the Left Centre, with a view to ensure the Republican defeat at the elections. An article has appeared in the Journal des Débats, which is attributed to M. Thiers, declaring that any such combination is impossible. Baron Hausmann, in obedience, it is said, to instructions from Prince Louis Napoleon, has come forward as a candidate at Ajaccio, in opposition to Prince Napoleon.

The French papers continue to announce the dissolution or suspension of the Municipal Councils of various towns. Among them are Montelimart and Roubaix. The Orleans Court of Justice has affirmed the judgment of the tribunal at Montargis, acquitting a man named Pouzot, who has been charged with selling newspapers without a proper license.

Another press conviction has taken place in Paris. On Monday the manager of the Mot d'Ordre was found guilty on a fresh charge, and sentenced by default to two months' imprisonment and 4000f. fine. In Corsica a man has been sentenced to twenty days' imprisonment for insulting Marshal MacMahon. The editor of the Echo de Saintonge has been sentenced to a fine of 1000f. and fifteen days' imprisonment for having published a libel upon the Ministry.

The annual public sitting of the French Academy was held on the 2nd inst., M. Alexandre Dumas presiding. Prizes were announced, three, of 2500f. each, being awarded to M. Paul Allard, Assistant Judge of the Civil Tribunal of Rouen, author of a work entitled "Les Esclaves Chrétiens;" to the representatives of the late M. Sauvage, for his "Pensées Morales et Littéraires;" and to M. Lucien Biart, author of a work entitled "A Travers l'Amérique." The prize of 3000f., founded by the late M. Bordin for encouraging high literary studies, was awarded to M. Chantelauze for his "Marie Stuart, son procès et son Exécution;" and the Marcelin-Guérin prize, of the value of 5000f., was divided in equal proportions between M. Capmas, Professor of the Faculty of Law of Dijon, and M. Eugène Pelletan.

Judgment was yesterday week delivered in the Tribunal de Première Instance at Paris in the counter-application made by the Marquis de Caux in regard to his wife, Madame Adelina Patti. The Court found for the Marquis, and pronounced in his favour la séparation de corps et des biens, and condemned Madame Patti to pay the costs of the suit. Madame Adelina Patti has, says Galignani, paid M. Escudier, manager of the Italian Theatre at Paris, 100,000f. as forfeit for the breach of engagement. She has also telegraphed to M. Strakosch, of New York, to say that she accepts his proposals for the United States—namely, 10,000f. for each performance, and a benefit—fifty-one performances guaranteed, of more than half a million francs.

M. Halévy's "Reine de Chypre" was performed on Monday night for the first time in the new Opera-House in Paris; and the Daily Telegraph correspondent says that, in spite of the lateness of the season and of the terrific heat which has sent the majority of Parisians in pursuit of other baths than that to be found in a French theatre, the house was filled to the ceiling.

SPAIN.

It is stated from Madrid that the Government is desirous of concluding a new treaty of commerce and navigation with France and Great Britain on a basis of complete reciprocity in concessions, and reductions of the customs' tariffs.

Official news has been received from Cuba stating that the insurgents have been defeated by the Royal troops in six consecutive engagements near the banks of Rio San Pedro, in the Eastern Department. The insurgents lost several members of the revolutionary junta and two influential leaders.

We learn from Hong-Kong that the difficulty between Spain and China has been amicably arranged, the latter having agreed to pay several thousand dollars.

GERMANY.

The chief of the Imperial Admiralty has finished a tour of inspection along the northern coast, and the result, in which the general staff and engineers concur, is said to be that Germany is practically unassailable by sea, and that the entire coast is now amply prepared for any war.

Field Marshal von Steinmetz died on the 3rd inst., quite unexpectedly, at Landeck, in Silesia. He was born in 1793, and entered the Prussian army in 1813. He was famous on account of his victories at Nachod and Skalitz, in the war of 1866; but in 1870 he made some mistakes at Vionville and Gravelotte, in consequence of which he was relieved of command in the field, and appointed military governor of the province of Posen.

Prince Gustav von Wasa, father of the Queen of Saxony, died at Pillnitz on Saturday evening.

Professor Helmholtz has been elected Rector of the University of Berlin for the coming academical year.

MEETING OF THE TWO EMPERORS.

The Emperors of Austria and Germany met at Ischl on Wednesday, according to appointment. The meeting is described as most cordial. The Emperor of Germany, immediately on his arrival, paid a visit to the Empress of Austria. The Emperor William left Ischl next morning, after cordially taking leave of the Empress and the Austrian Crown Prince. The Emperor of Austria accompanied the Emperor William to Edensee. Their whole interview testified to the existence of the frankest understanding between the two Monarchs.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

Public sentiment in Hungary continues to protest against the occupation or annexation of Bosnia, and demands "the maintenance, in its integrity, of the Ottoman Empire." In 200 towns meetings have been held in favour of the Turks.

In Croatia, on the other hand, feeling goes the other way. A meeting of Slavonic sympathisers was held at Agram on Sunday evening, attended by about 1200 persons. After a protracted discussion, a resolution, proposed as a compromise, was adopted expressing the conviction of those present that the barbarous and cruel oppression of the Christian peoples in the East would continue so long as Turkey existed, and that the Turkish empire in Europe must therefore fall, if an existence, compatible with the dignity of mankind, was to be secured to the Christians in the East. The meeting further affirmed its warmest sympathy with those nations who were fighting for freedom, and also with Russia, the ally of Austro-Hungary; and, in conclusion, expressed the conviction that Austro-Hungary will not defend Turkey.

EGYPT.

Prince Hussein Kamil Pasha, the Khedive's second son, is suffering from a severe attack of neuralgia. He was to start on Monday for a sea trip of a few weeks in the Archipelago.

The convention with England for the suppression of the slave trade was signed on Saturday.

It is telegraphed to the Standard that the Government of the Khedive has refused to repay to the Bank of Egypt the sum of £160,000, which was advanced without security in order to pay the coupons.

The correspondent of the Daily News at Alexandria telegraphs some details of a battle between King John of Abyssinia and King Menelek of Shoa, resulting in the total defeat of the latter. The battle occurred in the middle of June at Bujiarrar, where the Shoaites were strongly intrenched. It was reported at Massowah that King Menelek had surrendered to King John, and that the kingdom of Shoa had been annexed to Abyssinia. Another report is that the rebellion in Darfur has been suppressed, and that Colonel Gordon is expected shortly at Souakim. Up to July 19 nothing was known at Massowah of peace having been concluded between King John of Abyssinia and Egypt.

AMERICA.

Several members of the Cabinet are reported to favour the organisation of a commission of arbitration to settle the labour disputes. Meanwhile the strike of the miners in Luzerne county continues. The State militia is being replaced by Federal troops. The Government has ordered the return of the men-of-war and marines to their regular naval stations. A large portion of the army will be kept east of the Mississippi.

President Hayes has prohibited the sale of firearms to the Indians.

The Federal troops have arrested forty-five Valdez filibusters on the Mexican frontier.

The date of the shooting at Creedmoor for the Centennial Prize has been changed from Sept. 13 to Sept. 14.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

By the latest mail from South Africa we have information that the Earl of Carnarvon's official approval of the annexation of the Transvaal has reached that country, and that Sir Theophilus Shepstone, who has met with a very cordial reception in every part of the new colony, has been appointed the first Lieutenant-Governor.

A petition draughted by the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at Port Elizabeth has been very numerous signed and sent home for presentation to her Majesty. The petition, which states that Port Elizabeth is the principal trade centre of the European Colonies and States in Southern and South-Eastern Africa, declares:—

That, but for the watchful care of your Majesty's Ministers and the several local Governments, and the timely intervention of your Majesty's authority, it is more than likely that the vast combination known to exist among all the Kaffir and Zulu tribes would have caused them to swoop down first upon the white settlers in the Transvaal, and, extending their operations, mark their inroads by massacre, pillage, and general destruction, and thus forcibly thrust back civilisation in South Africa for many years, to the great loss of the agriculturist, the capitalist, the merchant, and the distress of the colonists generally. That the memorialists have, therefore, seen with sincere satisfaction how solicitous your Majesty has been to preserve the lives and property of your Majesty's subjects in these parts of the realm, and that your Majesty's Special Commissioner to South Africa, Sir Theophilus Shepstone, well knowing the natives and their character, and to what the present condition of things political among and around them was rapidly tending, did, with foresight and judgment, and not before it was imperative, and the only and best thing that could be done in the cause of humanity at large, intervene at the moment of extremity, and assume the administration of the country and declare the Transvaal British territory. That your memorialists believe that, although this assumption of power may not have been in the strictest accordance with the usages of your Majesty's Government, the act itself is universally deemed in this colony, and by the majority of Europeans in other parts of South Africa, a necessary and a wise one, whatever their opinions may be as to the forms and method adopted by your Majesty's Special Commissioner on this very critical occasion.

INDIA.

The Viceroy will proceed to Madras on the 16th inst.

A telegram respecting the famine has been received at the India Office from the Viceroy. It is dated Aug. 6, and states that the prospects of the season have generally improved in Madras, but the distress is still severe. In Mysore pretty general showers have done some good, but the prospects have not materially improved. In Bombay Sir Richard Temple telegraphs that fair rain in the eastern districts has saved much of the young crops, but along the western border the famine area is larger. There have been slight showers in Goojerat and Kattiar, but the anxiety regarding those parts still remains. In the North-West Provinces rain has begun to fall in many districts, and anxiety is much relieved. There has also been some rain in the Punjab, but more is wanted; the condition of crops is fair. The numbers relieved were:—In Madras, 957,000 on works and 839,000 charitably; in Mysore, 48,000 on works and 151,000 charitably; in Bombay, 248,000 on works and 149,000 charitably.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times sends the following particulars regarding the outrage at Quettah, of which we have already heard:—As Lieutenants Hewson and Kunhardt were inspecting the works in progress, three men were observed to be following them. While the officers were inquiring into a dispute between the contractor and a workman about some measurement, these men approached from behind, cut down Lieutenant Hewson, wounded Lieutenant Kunhardt, and killed a sepoy who had run to the rescue. Captain Scott, of the 4th Sikhs, who was drilling his regiment at the time, seeing the affray, ran up and bayoneted the three murderers, who attacked him in succession. The motive for the attack is unknown. The inquiry is still proceeding.

JAPAN.

Some important engagements have been fought between the Imperial troops and the rebels, in which the former were successful. The Government has now no further occasion for levying more troops.

NEW ZEALAND.

A telegram of the 18th inst. from Wellington states that the Budget has been presented to the House of Representatives. The following are the chief heads of the Hon. Major Atkinson's financial statement for the year ending June 30, 1877:—The consolidated revenue amounts to £1,950,000, being an increase over the previous year of £238,000; the land revenue amounts to £1,040,000, forming a total revenue for the year ending June 30, 1877, of £2,990,000. The estimated revenue for the year ending June 30, 1878, including land revenue, is stated at £3,109,000, and when the surplus of the year ending June 30 last, £148,000, is added to it, the total estimates of receipts for 1877-8 will amount to £3,540,000, against an estimated expenditure of £3,110,000, leaving a surplus divisible among the counties of £329,000 and a balance of £100,000. The profits on Government railways during the last six months amount to £80,000. The Treasurer estimates the profits for the current year at £170,000. Parliament is asked to authorise the issue of a loan of two millions, to be applied as follows:—Railways, £940,000; ditto from released guaranteed debentures, £800,000; to defray provincial liabilities, £250,000. No increase of taxation is proposed.

Fiji.

Governor Sir Arthur Gordon has proclaimed Suva the capital of Fiji.

The Colonial Secretary of Fiji has published a report which supplies some trustworthy statistics upon the trade and commerce of the group during the last year. It appears that the total exports amounted to £107,464 and the imports to £112,808. The principal articles of export were—copra and cocoa-nut oil, £1436; cotton, £11,922; sugar, £9036; maize, £3464; and bêche-de-mer, £2491. Next to Hamburg, to which port produce of the value of £36,774 was sent last year, the bulk of the exports find their way to Sydney. The difficulties in the way of maintaining regular and cheap inter-isular steam communication greatly retard agricultural operations. The total white population at the end of 1876 was estimated approximately at 1569 persons.

The German village of Garnsee, near Marienwerder, which had 1100 inhabitants, and the Swedish seaport of Sundswall, which had 6000 inhabitants, have been nearly destroyed by fire. In the former case a woman eighty-two years of age was burnt, and 800 persons are homeless.

An addition has been made to the already long list of official publications relating to the affairs of Turkey by a blue-book of about 300 pages, just issued. The period it covers is only from March 29 to May 31 inclusive. Mr. Layard, writing at Therapia on May 16 to Lord Derby, says:—"Mr. Valentine Baker has now received the rank of Siva, or General of Brigade in the Turkish service, and has, consequently, the title of Pasha. He will be under the orders of the Minister of Police, and will be charged with the reorganisation of the gendarmarie or mounted police. His contract with the Porte was signed last Thursday, the 10th. Baker Pasha will receive 200 Turkish liras a month (about £2000 a year), and his engagement is for three years, commencing from the 23rd ult. He will have several English officers under him as inspectors of districts and for other purposes."

Prince William Pitt Leleiohokoe, the Heir-Apparent to the Throne of Hawaii, died at the Iolani Palace on April 10, of rheumatic fever, at the age of twenty-two. He was the youngest member of the family of the late Hon. C. Kapaakea and the late High Chieftess Keohokalohe, being the brother of the King of Hawaii and of their Royal Highnesses Princess Lydia Dominis and Princess Miriam L. Cleghorn. On Feb. 14, 1874, two days only subsequent to the election of his Majesty, he was proclaimed Heir-Apparent to the Throne, and invested with the style and title of "His Royal Highness." On the day after his death (April 11) a proclamation was made, in front of Aliolani House, of the appointment by his Majesty, with the consent of the nobles, of her Royal Highness Princess Lydia Kanakacha Liliuokalani, eldest sister of his Majesty, as successor to the throne. The newly-appointed Heiress-Apparent was born on Sept. 2, 1838; and was married to his Excellency John O. Dominis, Governor of Oahu, on Sept. 16, 1862.

In the afternoon Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., laid the foundation-stone of a new memorial chapel, and gave an address on Welsh Nonconformity.

The National Eisteddfod of Wales will begin at Carnarvon on the 21st inst. and continue for the three following days. The Bishop of Chichester announces that the public appeal in aid of the memorial to the late Dean Hook has resulted in £2050 being subscribed. The committee have contracted for a monument for the late Dean, to be placed in the cathedral; also for a clock, with the proper chimes and bell, to be fixed in the bell-tower—an object which Dr. Hook had always much at heart, there being no good public clock in Chichester.

An address was recently presented to the Bishop of Durham by 160 of the principal laity of the diocese (Lord Londonderry at their head), inviting him to sit for his portrait, which was to be placed on the walls of Auckland Castle as a "memorial of one whose usefulness in his day and generation was surpassed by none." The Bishop, however, has declined the proffered honour, while duly appreciating the motives of the proposers.

A service for the working classes was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday evening. The entire area of the cathedral was open and free to all.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Rev. Philip Magnus presided on the 2nd inst. at the distribution of prizes to the pupils of University College School. The school now contains 615 boys, and is thus one of the largest upper-class day schools in London. Its new buildings, which are chiefly due to the generosity of Mr. Samuel Sharpe, are completed. The work of some of the higher classes is specially arranged with a view to the London matriculation, and fifteen of the boys at present in the school have passed that examination, four of them in honours. The Rev. H. Weston Eve, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, the Head Master, in the course of his introductory remarks, said that there were four entrance scholarships at University College to be competed for last session, and all were gained by pupils of the school. There were four Andrews Scholarships of the first year, and three of them fell to pupils of the school. Of four Fielden Scholarships, three fell to pupils of the school; and Myers, a pupil of the school, gained the highest honours of his year at the college—the Jews' Commemoration Scholarship. Some of the principal prizes were adjudged as follows:—L. H. Jacobsen took the Case prize for classics; Halliburton, the Cook mathematical prize; H. R. Williams, Mr. Ball's prize for an English essay; Holman, Mr. Magnus's prize for natural philosophy; Nuttall, Mr. Mavitta's prize for mechanical drawing; Huxley, the captain, became entitled to the Case Exhibition. L. H. Jacobsen was first in Greek, but, as the Case prize disqualified him, the Greek prize fell to Huxley. L. H. Jacobsen was also first in Latin, but the prize went to his twin brother, E. P. Jacobsen. Hartog in Hebrew, Beauchamp in French, Leon in German, Woodbridge in Spanish, E. Moritz in English literature, the Jacobsens, de Cordova, and Mann in Greek and Roman History, and Williams in English History, were first in the lists. The geography prize in the sixth class was taken by E. G. Harmer, who came up from a public elementary school with the Hartog Scholarship, a School Board Exhibition founded in memory of Numa Hartog, a former pupil of University College School, who, after becoming Senior Wrangler at Cambridge, suddenly died at Hampstead of smallpox. E. Moritz took the prize for social science, Holman the first prize for natural philosophy, Dettaille, J. A. Leon, and Durham in chemistry and botany. In mathematics and arithmetic, Halliburton, C. Moritz, Meredith, and Catchpool took the principal prizes.

On the 3rd inst. there was a large gathering of friends and former members of Malvern College to see the prizes distributed by Lord Hampton, one of the vice-presidents of the college. Mr. Faber, the Head Master, prefaced the proceedings of the day by a few remarks. Among other honours won by pupils during the preceding year were a studentship at Christ Church, two first classes in moderations, and two second classes in the final schools at Oxford, two open scholarships and a wranglership at Cambridge, three direct appointments at Sandhurst, and the fifth place in the list of those going out in the Indian Civil Service. Lord Hampton, in distributing the prizes, remarked on the course taken by Clifton College in obtaining a charter of incorporation, and recommended the same steps at Malvern College and similar institutions.

Ottewill, twenty-one, draughtsman, Derby; D. A. Low, twenty, engineer, Dundee.

The annual distribution of prizes took place at Coatham Grammar School, yesterday week. The Archdeacon of Cleveland presided. The Examiner (the Rev. W. Dunn, M.A., Cambridge) spoke of the excellence of the papers he had examined; he was struck with the closeness with which many boys in almost every class followed each other, which showed the sharp competition there had been for the prizes.

The distribution of prizes at Rossall took place on the 25th ult., when the Bishop of Manchester presided. After the Examiners had reported upon the work done in the examination, the Head Master read the list of honours for the past year, which comprised eight scholarships and exhibitions at the Universities, besides the second Chancellor's medal at Cambridge, which (with the eighth place in the first class of the Classical Tripos) had been gained by G. Chawner, of King's; and a distinguished double degree (twentieth Wrangler and second class in Classics) taken by H. E. Dixon, of Christ's. The exhibitions were gained by L. Clarke and H. R. Woolrych; Lord Egerton of Tatton's prize, by L. Clarke; the Ansie Gold Medal (for Mathematics), by A. C. H. Jones. At the luncheon held subsequently Canon Hornby (the president of the council) presided.

The annual speech-day at Lancing College, the anniversary, was celebrated in the usual manner. The Rev. Dr. Sanderson, the Vice-Provost, took the chair. After the reports of the examiners had been read the prizes were given.

Speech-day took place, with the usual ceremonies, at the Godolphin School, Hammersmith, in the presence of a numerous company. Lord Ebury, supported by the Rev. R. G. Baker, General M'Murdo, C.B., and other trustees, distributed the prizes, and commented on the favourable report received from the University examiners and on the large increase in the numbers of the school.

Boissier; first-class mathematics (moderations), Oxford, T. Hands; open mathematical scholarship, Queen's, Cambridge, T. K. MacKenzie; open mathematical scholarship, Magdalene, Cambridge, E. W. T. Beck.

"BETWEEN HOPE AND FEAR."

The archaeological learning of Mr. Alma Tadema, as well as his masterly artistic powers, must be recognised in such a picture as the one selected for our principal Engraving, from the late Royal Academy Exhibition. His exact knowledge of the details of household life, of costume, and of manners among the opulent class of Romans at the most splendid period of classical antiquity has frequently won the approval of scholars most especially conversant with those subjects. The scene of family history which is here represented has also the kind of interest that belongs to a story of the domestic affections, and of the crisis in a maiden's fate when she is about to hear from the lips of her somewhat austere parent the name of a favoured suitor whom he intends her to marry, and whom she will scarcely be allowed to refuse. There is, perhaps, but too much cause for her present embarrassment if we could guess the secret of her heart; but we fear there is little chance of her supplications availing to make the old Roman father change his mind.

Ah me! for aught that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth.
But either it was different in blood,
Or cross! too high to be enthralled to low!
Or else misgraffed, in respect of years,
Or spite! too old to be engaged to young!
Or else, it stood upon the choice of friends;
O hell! to choose love by another's eye!

The Mayor and Corporation of Leamington have invited the Sanitary Institute to hold its congress in their town, and the invitation has been accepted. The congress will meet early in October.

The receipts on account of revenue from April 1, 1877, to Aug. 4 were £25,926,091, against £25,244,960 in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year. The net expenditure was £30,352,254, against £29,688,005 to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balances on Aug. 4 amounted to £1,530,631, and at the same date in 1876 to £1,551,220.

The annual show of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland was opened on Wednesday at Galway, the Lord Lieutenant and the Duchess of Marlborough being present. A banquet took place in the evening, the Lord Lieutenant being among the speakers. Taking the show as a whole, and having regard to quality as well as quantity, it is the finest show held by the society since that held at Balls Bridge, Dublin, in 1871. The number of short-horns is fewer than last year, but there are some splendid animals among them, and there are some aged bulls, such as probably never before were exhibited in a show-yard. The Clydesdale horses were magnificent. Among the prizes the Purdon Challenge Cup was won by Mr. Richard Chaloner with his bull Royal Arthur. Mr. Reynell, of Killucan, took the first prize for the best shorthorn bull calved in 1875; Captain Cosby, of Stradbally, Queen's County, came first for the best shorthorn bull calved in 1876; Mr. George Alexander for Hereford bulls; and Sir Charles Knox Gore for polled Angus bulls. The Croker Challenge Cup, for the best weight-carrying thoroughbred horse, was won by Swordsman, the property of Mr. Joseph Macmahon, of Queen's County. Messrs Arres and Mather, of Ballinasloe, were first for the best agricultural horse; Mr. Hannan, of Killucan, took the prize for an agricultural brood mare. For the best hunter over five years old the first prize was awarded to Mr. Lambert, of Athenry.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

In marked contrast to the prolonged sitting of the Commons, the sittings of the Upper House have become small by degrees and beautifully less. The Lord Chancellor (to whom the woolsack must be a far softer cushion than is the chair to the Speaker) sat for twenty minutes only yesterday week and on Saturday last, when their Lordships contented themselves with the purely formal business of passing a few measures through certain stages. On Monday the same dry process was repeated, and Royal Assent was given by Commission (the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, and the Earl of Skelmersdale being the Royal Commissioners) to the following bills:—

The Registration of Leases (Scotland) Act (1857) Amendment Bill, Trades Marks Bill, Board of Education (Scotland) Continuance Bill, Norfolk Estuary Bill, Bignor's (Dartford) Estate Bill, Regent's Canal and Dock Bill, Bishop Auckland District Gas Bill, Margate Extension and Improvement Bill, Burslem Local Board Bill, Louth Gas Bill; Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Bill, Abbotsbury Railway Bill; Whitehaven, Cleator, and Egremont Railway Bill; the Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham's Estates Bill, and the Walker Trust Bill.

On Tuesday it was made evident that the deadlock of judicial business is not confined to the metropolis. The Earl of Harrowby presented a petition from the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce pointing out that a fourth assize was necessary at that important city. Quite alive to the evil, the Government would not hesitate, said the Lord Chancellor, to appoint more Judges if it should be found that they were absolutely necessary. The Earl of Beaconsfield having prayed their Lordships to consent to sit on Wednesday, the bill for improving the condition of the canal population of England was read the second time, on the motion of the Duke of Richmond, Lord Shaftesbury cordially approving the measure. The Irish Prisons Bill was then read the second time, and other measures were advanced a stage.

Various bills were also pushed forward during the brief Wednesday sitting, which was mainly occupied by an exposition on the part of the Duke of Richmond of the Destructive Insects Bill, which has been framed to resist the invasion of this country by the Colorado beetle, and which was read the second time.

On Thursday the Commons' amendments in the South Africa Bill were agreed to. The Commons' reason for disagreeing from one of the Lords' amendments in the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Bill was considered; and the following bills were read the second time:—The County Officers and Courts (Ireland), the Sheriffs Courts (Scotland), the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland), the Police Expenses Act Continuance, the Colonial Stock and East India Loan Bills. The Marquis of Salisbury, in moving the second reading of the East India Loan Bill, declared there was no foundation whatever for the apprehension sometimes expressed with regard to Indian finance, nor for the statement that the expenditure of the Government upon reproductive works had been otherwise than prudent and frugal. He was also happy to say that in the famine districts there was not now so gloomy a prospect as existed a fortnight ago, there having been a heavy rainfall and a consequent saving of many of the crops. Her Majesty's Government, however, would continue their efforts to mitigate the calamity as much as possible. A discussion upon India then followed, occupying some hours of their Lordships' valuable time.

COMMONS.

The twenty-six hours' sitting made so profound an impression on the House that it was scarcely surprising to find it referred to yesterday week in the shape of a question and a Ministerial answer. Mr. Newdegate asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it was his intention to propose any motion by which the House could record its sense of the great inconvenience to which it was put by a very small minority. But Sir Stafford Northcote said, amid approving cheers, that it would be more dignified to let the records of the House speak for themselves. Should there be any repetition of such scenes the House would know how to deal with them, added the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with quiet emphasis. The South Africa Bill as amended—the measure over which the prolonged fight took place—passed through Committee, despite the strenuous opposition of Mr. O'Donnell, who vainly moved that it should be read that day three months, and as fruitlessly moved the rejection of various clauses. At the instance of Mr. W. H. Smith, the Colonial Stock Bill was read the second time. Various other measures were subsequently advanced a stage.

On Saturday last the tempest-tossed South Africa Bill reached a quiet haven at last. Sir George Campbell having demurred to the haste with which it had been pushed through Parliament, Mr. W. E. Forster retorted that it was one of the best-discussed measures he had ever known; but Mr. Parnell—the personification of the man convinced against his will—still opined that the bill had been passed by force, even "at the point of the bayonet." The Lords' amendments to the Universities Bill were then considered; and, with the exception of the alteration in clause 16, which was not sanctioned, the amendments were agreed to by 61 against 44 votes. The Irish County Courts Bill and Irish Prisons Bill were next read the third time, as was the Scottish Sheriff Courts Bill.

Mr. Fawcett on Monday followed up his victory against the Marquis of Salisbury by inducing the House to disagree with clause 4 of the Metropolitan Streets Improvement Bill. The hon. member for Hackney, with no little unction, pointed out that the rejection of this clause would cause an important improvement to be reinstated in the bill—namely, the construction of the new street from Charing-cross to Tottenham-court-road. The vexed clause was accordingly dropped, in spite of opposition from Mr. Gorst and Mr. Raikes; and, on the motion of Sir J. M. Hogg, a Committee with quite a Radical leaning was appointed to confer with a Committee of the House of Lords on the subject. The inefficiency of the blockade of the Black Sea by the Turks was insinuated in a query put by Sir Charles Dilke to Mr. Bourke; but the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs was not prepared to admit that the blockade was inefficient. Mr. Trevelyan, who said that the new Army Warrant would add £320,000 a year to our burdens, and who was of opinion that the scheme was otherwise objectionable, introduced the following amendment on the motion to go into Committee of Supply on the Supplementary Estimate for Promotion and Retirement in the Army:—

That this House, while fully prepared to consider the question of retirement with a view to secure a sufficient flow of promotion in the Army, cannot at this late period of the Session proceed to sanction a scheme which demands mature and careful examination, inasmuch as it entails a large increase of expenditure on the English and Indian Exchequers, and materially affects the future of our military system.

Various minnows of debate having nibbled at the scheme, the Tritons rose in the persons of Mr. Gathorne Hardy and the Marquis of Hartington, the Secretary for War with accustomed energy and fluency defending the Government proposals, and urging their immediate adoption, and the noble Lord the Leader of the Opposition damping them with faint praise as being merely a temporary expedient. Mr. Trevelyan had a considerable majority against him—139 to 77. The vote of £25,000 was then agreed to, and the remaining orders were disposed of.

A coming event intimately concerning Mr. W. H. Smith has lately cast its shadow before it in the shape of an unmistakably sailor-like roll in the gait of the hon. member for Westminster as he has walked up the floor of the House—so much so that those who may have divined his appointment as First Lord of the Admiralty could not have been much astonished if the hon. gentleman had given colour to the idea by an occasional hitch at his ample unmentionables. Yet the forthcoming assumption by Mr. W. H. Smith of the duties of the First Lord of the Admiralty might have appeared a problematical matter as recently as Tuesday last, for Sir Stafford Northcote replied in the most guileless manner imaginable to an inevitable question from Captain Pim, informing that inveterate inquirer that it would be best to wait until the office was filled, so as to have the benefit of the new First Lord's advice before undertaking any changes in the administration of the Navy. Suppressing any hompipe tendency which he may have felt, the incipient First Lord himself gravely rose to answer Mr. Whalley. The Financial Secretary to the Treasury assured the hon. member for Peterborough that neither Detective Druscovich nor Detective Palmer was employed in the Tichborne case, whilst, as for the whereabouts of Jean Luie, Mr. Smith could not tell "where she or he" was. This ingenuous avowal of ignorance as to the sex of Jean Luie provoked much laughter. A query put by Mr. Holt seemed to indicate a fear on the part of the hon. member that the Rev. J. S. Lyle, chaplain to the Bishop of Colombo, might convert the natives of Colombo to the peculiar tenets of the Holy Cross Society. Whereupon Mr. Whalley rose afresh to intimate his intention of bringing in a bill to alter the Prayer-Book by the substitution of "minister" for "priest" (Laughter). Mr. Sullivan gave solemn notice of his resolve to bring Sir J. D. Elphinstone to book on Friday for alluding to the obstructionists as "ruffians." As if enough time had not been spent in opposing the South Africa Bill, Mr. Courtney, with suggestive sympathy for the Boers, delivered himself of a long and wearisome protest against the annexation of the Transvaal, and found a congenial supporter in the irrepressible Mr. O'Donnell. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen (who should take pity on the reporters and shorten his name by one half) rendered willing support to the Government; and so did Mr. Jenkins, for a wonder. Mr. Lowther defended the action of the Government with ability; and Mr. Whalley condemned in strong terms the Fenian tone of Mr. O'Donnell's speech. Then arose an interesting naval debate on the engagement between H.M.S. Shah and Amethyst and the Huascar, Sir J. Hay warmly defending the action of Admiral De Horsey in introducing the following motion:—

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable whenever there is a sufficient number of ironclad ships to revert to the practice of stationing one of them in the Pacific.

Mr. Brassey, in his capacity as an amateur jack tar who has circumnavigated the globe, likewise approved the gallant Admiral's conduct. But Dr. Cameron, with the shrewdness of a canny Scot, said the naval aspect of the affair was one thing, but the international view of the matter was far graver, and he counselled the House to suspend judgment until the official papers had been studied. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre coincided with Dr. Cameron's views. Mr. Egerton said it was impossible to place the decisions of the Foreign Office and the Admiralty before the House yet; but he might state that the Government had no intention of recalling Admiral De Horsey. Sir William Harcourt reminded the House that he was "Historicus." As an authority on international law, he could not see that the Admiral was quite justified in taking the severe and forcible measures he did against the Huascar. The Attorney-General's reply was of the true "Britannia Rules the Waves" order, and, as such, was cordially cheered from the Conservative benches. He emphatically defended the action of Admiral De Horsey; but, at the same time, did not pretend to pronounce any opinion on the matter on the part of the Government. This Hibernian line of argument met with a smart rejoinder from Mr. Goschen, to whom the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with more liveliness and spice than he has shown for some time, administered an equally smart rebuke. In Committee of Supply Sir Charles Dilke moved the reduction of the Fiji vote, but had his motion rejected by 133 to 18 votes. The supplementary vote of £100,000 for the annexation of the Transvaal was agreed to, after a vain effort on the part of Sir George Campbell to reduce it by £25,000, and after a similarly vain motion by Mr. O'Donnell to eliminate the whole vote.

The motion by Sir W. H. Dyke, on Wednesday, for a new writ for the election of a member for the city of Westminster in the room of Mr. W. H. Smith, who had accepted the office of First Lord of the Admiralty, was agreed to, and the personal popularity of Mr. Smith was attested by the general cheering which greeted the announcement. In Supply the votes for law and criminal purposes in Ireland were agreed to in the teeth of opposition from Messrs. Parnell, Biggar, and O'Donnell. The Appropriation Bill was read the first time, and a few other measures were pushed forward.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer on Thursday made an appeal to Mr. Geo. P. Bentinck not to press his motion on the second reading of the Appropriation Bill, with respect to the Eastern Question, on the ground that her Majesty's Government felt that such a discussion would at the present moment be inconvenient and prejudicial to public interests. Mr. Bentinck, whilst expressing his regret at the appeal, reluctantly withdrew his notice. Mr. Whalley was proceeding to address the House upon the subject involved, when he was informed by the Speaker that he was out of order. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying to an observation from Mr. Fawcett, stated that a similar appeal had been made to a noble Lord in the other House, and that, in consequence, he declined to persevere with his motion upon the affairs in the East of which he had given notice. Mr. Whalley protested against the House being prevented from entering into a discussion on the subject in question, and was proceeding, amid loud cries of "Order, order!" to make some remarks, when he was informed by the Speaker that his conduct was very irregular. Mr. Whalley, notwithstanding continued on his legs, and asked whether any other Government except the Papacy had expressed an opinion concurring with the sentiments of hostility towards the Emperor of Russia contained in the despatch of Lord Derby. The Speaker informed the hon. member that he must rule again that he was out of order. Mr. Whalley having once more essayed to address the House, the Speaker intimated to him that, having been more than once ruled out of order, the hon. member had now brought himself under the new rule. The Chancellor of the Exchequer then read the new rule, and, in accordance with it, moved that the hon. member be not further heard. The Speaker thereupon put the motion, which was agreed to amidst a general cry of "Ay, ay!" and much laughter. Mr. Forster asked whether we had a "favoured-nation clause" in any of our treaties with Spain. Mr. Bourke said it was quite true that the Spanish Government had entered into a commercial treaty with Germany and Switzerland which placed other countries at a disadvantage compared with them. The Government contended that we had a favoured-nation clause with Spain. Several treaties with clauses bearing upon that point had existed, but they had been modified by Lord Aberdeen. In 1845 a correspondence took place, in which Lord Aberdeen denied that the "favoured-nation clause" in those treaties applied to commercial matters. A correspondence was now going on with the Spanish Government as to the bearing of those clauses, and her Majesty's Chargé-d'Affaires at Madrid had been instructed to demand the application of the "favoured-nation clause;" but no reply had as yet been received. Mr. Bourke further informed Mr. Forster that the Foreign Office had received information confirming the report of the drowning of Africans near the Congo, and that one of the persons said to be implicated was a British subject. In reply to Mr. Ashley, Mr. Bourke stated that a telegram had been received intimating that the convention with the Khedive for the suppression of the slave trade on the Red Sea had been signed. On the motion for the second reading of the Expiring Laws Continuance Bill, Mr. Parnell resumed his opposition to the measure, but ultimately withdrew his amendment for the rejection of the bill, which was then read the second time. On the second reading of the Appropriation Bill Mr. Grant Duff called attention to the apparent change of policy of the Government of India with States west of the Indus, and asked for explanations as to the occupation of Quetta, the negotiations at Peshawur, and the proposed change of administration in the frontier districts. A debate of some length then ensued. The Appropriation Bill was finally read the second time.

Mr. Lowe has declined to be put in nomination for the Lord Rectorship of Edinburgh University.

The Great Yarmouth and Stalham Railway was opened for traffic on Tuesday.

The Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association is holding an exhibition of sanitary appliances in the Owens College grounds, which will remain open the whole of next week.

The Mark Lane Express says the most noticeable feature in the agricultural reports of the past week is the improvement which has taken place in barley. Wheat may now be considered to have reached maturity, and in well-sheltered southern districts harvesting has begun.

A severe thunderstorm passed over Huddersfield on Wednesday afternoon. About two o'clock Frederick Eccles, joiner, aged nineteen, was engaged on some new houses at Bradley, when the lightning killed him. A companion, named Whiteley, was also struck, but escaped serious injury. There were thunderstorms in other parts of the country.

At a quarterly meeting of the Stafford Town Council, held on Tuesday, it was unanimously resolved to offer the office of Lord High Steward to the Borough of Stafford, rendered vacant by the death of the Earl of Shrewsbury, to the Earl of Lichfield, who resides at Shugborough Hall, near Stafford. The post is purely honorary.

A meeting of representatives of South Wales and Monmouthshire miners was held at Merthyr on Monday, when it was resolved to form a union, to be called the Amalgamated Association of Miners. Mr. T. Halliday was elected president of the association. The question of production in the coal and iron trades will shortly be taken into consideration by the Central Board of the Miners' National Union, who were empowered by the conference recently held at Durham to deal with the subject. Mr. Macdonald, M.P., president of the National Union, has been requested by the Central Board to prepare a scheme for consideration at a meeting to be held soon.

The annual congress of the British Medical Association, which numbers upwards of 7000 practitioners in all parts of the United Kingdom, opened on Tuesday afternoon at Manchester, and continued during the three following days. Many scientific questions were discussed, and the subjects of general interest, under the head of "State Medicine," came before the gathering; but, besides these, the Corporations of Manchester, Blackpool, and Macclesfield, as well as the manufacturers and professional men of Lancashire, had taken care that the members of this hardworking and benevolent profession should not devote themselves wholly to business, the various authorities and private persons having organised means of enjoyment.

The Gazette of Tuesday announces the following diplomatic appointments:—The Hon. F. R. Plunkett, now Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at Washington, to be Secretary to her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburg; Mr. Victor A. W. Drummond, now Secretary to the Legation at Rio de Janeiro, to be Secretary to the Legation at Washington; Mr. F. R. St. John, now Secretary to the Legation at Buenos Ayres, to be Secretary to the Legation at Rio de Janeiro; Mr. J. P. H. Gastrell, now a Second Secretary in her Majesty's Diplomatic Service, to be Secretary to the Legation at Buenos Ayres; and Mr. W. E. Goschen, now a Third Secretary, to be a Second Secretary in her Majesty's Diplomatic Service.

The annual meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland was opened on Tuesday at Hereford. The members of the institute were welcomed by the Town Council, and in the afternoon Sir Gilbert Scott, Bart., gave an historical account of the cathedral. The members of the society went on Wednesday to Ludlow and Loominster, and examined the fine old churches of those towns, and also at the former place the ruins of the castle.—The annual meeting of the Cambrian Archaeological Association, of which the Prince of Wales is president, was opened at Carnarvon on Tuesday evening, under the presidency of Lord Clarence Paget. The inaugural address was delivered by Professor Babbington, who dwelt on the great advance of archaeological science in North and South Wales. The Bishop of St. Asaph was elected president for the ensuing year, and the Hon. J. G. Wynn hon. secretary for North Wales.

The Gardeners' Chronicle publishes the general results of an inquiry throughout the United Kingdom as to the condition and prospects of the potato crop. The crop will prove an average one, although the tubers are small, and from ten days to a fortnight later than usual. The potato disease has made its appearance almost everywhere, more or less, and in some cases in an aggravated form.—The Garden states that most kinds of fruits are this year a failure. Apples are in some few places a fair crop, but they are thin generally. Pears and plums appear almost everywhere to be a failure. Wall fruits are also unsatisfactory, but in some districts there is an average crop of peaches and nectarines. The cause of failure in our fruit crops this year is by many attributed not wholly to the unfavourable spring which we have experienced, but in a great measure to the sunless autumn of last year, which was unfavourable to the perfect ripening of the wood. Small fruits of all kinds appear to be everywhere abundant, though in some cases inferior in quality. Apples are, however, the fruits which most concern us; and, although immense quantities may be expected from America, the prices will probably be very high.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"Give it 'em 'ot, Poley!" Such was the beautifully worded exhortation which, according to the Times, was addressed by the mob in Bow-street lately, when Mr. Poland, the eminent barrister, who is retained by the Crown to prosecute the three Detectives, arrived at the court. "Give it 'em 'ot, Poley!" The criminal classes are very fond of giving affectionately familiar petits noms to the agents and ministers of the law. Mr. Montague Williams is, I believe, habitually termed "Monty" by ladies and gentlemen who have been "in trouble," or who deserve to be in it; Mr. George Lewis, jun., is usually termed "Young Mr. George;" and I have heard (in Whitechapel) Mr. Baron Bramwell qualified as "Bram." I only mention the rabble's salutation to Mr. Poland in order that I may record my protest against there being any police court in Bow-street at all. It is a shame that this broad thoroughfare, once a very fashionable one, and even now the home of the most splendid and aristocratic theatre in Europe, should be disfigured every morning and afternoon, on all the days of the year save Sundays, by gangs of roughs and thieves, the associates of the culprits whose misdeeds are being adjudicated on by Sir James Ingham and his colleague. The arrival and departure of the Prisoners' Van (or "Black Maria" as the roughs call it) give rise to continued scenes of ribaldry, profligacy, and violence, which are a nuisance to the district and a scandal to the age.

Bow-street ought, when metropolitan improvements are taken seriously in hand, to form part of a sumptuous boulevard running straight from the top of the Waterloo-road, crossing the soon-to-be-toll-freeed Waterloo Bridge, absorbing the two Wellington-streets, taking in Endell and Bloomsbury-streets, and terminating in Bedford-square. But with that horrible police court and the morning and afternoon congregation of felony round the "Black Maria," Bow-street must always stop the way and prevent the formation of a really noble via from north to south London. You will tell me that they are building a new and commodious structure on the east side of the street to replace the old and miserably inconvenient police court on the west side. That is precisely of what I complain. A site for the new tribunal might easily have been found in Long-acre; or, better still, if it was found absolutely necessary to erect the new edifice in Bow-street, the back thereof should have been in that thoroughfare and the front in Drury-lane. At all events, I hope that the architect of the new building has provided a spacious courtyard, screened by a high wall and protected by substantial gates. The existing nuisance might be modified by the prison van being driven into the courtyard instead of being drawn up in front of the courthouse door. I make no apology for these notes being long and for their not being of a "gossiping" nature, because I have written them with a purpose. The present condition of Bow-street, in its criminal aspect, is a disgrace to the nation, and degrades us in the eyes of foreigners.

There were strong men before Agamemnon; and the honourable members for Meath, Cavan, and Dungarvan must not plume themselves on being the inventors of the art of driving the House of Commons and its exalted officers to despair. Do you know Winthrop Mackworth Praed's airy lines "on seeing the Speaker asleep in his chair in one of the debates of the first Reformed Parliament?" Here is one of the verses:—

Sleep, Mr. Speaker: slumber lies
Light and brief on a Speaker's eyes;
Fielden or Finn in a minute or two
Some disorderly thing will do;
Riot will chase repose away:
Sleep, Mr. Speaker: sleep while you may.

I have not a complete set of "Hansard" by me, and am thus debarred from knowing what was the precise nature of the "disorderly things" which, according to Mr. Praed, Messrs. Fielden and Finn (ubi sunt?) were apt to do.

Mem.: There are some capital descriptions of the "disorderly" scenes which too frequently took place in the first Reformed Parliament in that novel of "Ten Thousand a Year" about which I had something to say last week. I gently complained then that the death of the once-popular novelist had met with but scant mention in the press. The late Mr. Warren has been "mentioned" since with a vengeance, and has been debited, by one journal in particular, with all kinds of follies and foibles. Whenever I read an ill-natured paragraph about a dead man I always wonder whether the writer thinks anything about his friend round the corner who is waiting to "touch up" his, the paragraphist's, little faults and foibles when he has joined the majority.

Not to have seen "Pongo" is to exhibit an amount of forgetfulness of one's social duties which Society would be loth to forget or to forgive. I always like to keep well with Society; so I hied me lately to the Westminster Aquarium, with a view of paying my respects to the Only Gorilla. There happened, however, to be a very interesting ceremonial going on, in the shape of the distribution, by Mr. W. W. Robertson, of the prizes to the successful competitors in the Maritime and Piscatorial Exhibition now being held at the Aquarium. Then I dined, and made the acquaintance of "Zazel," an interesting young lady, who devotes all her energies to the tasks of walking on a slack wire, swinging from the flying trapeze, and being fired out of a hundred-ton gun.

I got to Pongo at last. He had passed a very busy and fatiguing day in the reception of visitors, and had gone to bed. Literally so. Admitted to his sanctum, Mr. Frank Buckland, I, and one or two more gentlemen, found Pongo in bed, like Taffy (who was a Welshman) in the celebrated marrowbone story. Pongo, lying on a little pallet close to his guardian's bed, with his head on the pillow, "like a person," and one little black paw supporting his big black chin, looked whimsically, yet at the same time distressingly, human. His keeper gently woke him; and then the poor little brute passed one paw over his eyelids, just as a waking child would do, slightly yawned, stretched himself, and turned his eyes (which are very lustrous and expressive) towards us, as though inquiring what "we might please to want." But it being nearly ten o'clock, we thought it best, after shaking hands with him, to leave him to himself. They tucked him up; he got a fold of the counterpane comfortably beneath his chin; and we went away to see Zazel fired out of the hundred-ton gun.

There was a dog in Pongo's private room who interested me even more than the little man-monkey did. The dog is the Gorilla's constant playmate, and is, I daresay, his guide, philosopher, and friend, understanding all that he in the monkey language says. Did you ever read the old book De Asina Brutorum? Did you ever wistfully cogitate on the Mystery of the Beasts? There came over me as I went away from "interviewing" the interesting quadruped in the trundle bed an absurd desire to ask the dog (who was frisking about us in a very friendly manner) to ask Pongo to lend me half a sovereign, to be punctually repaid next Monday fortnight.

You may think that so ridiculous a notion was like what Cervantes called "la razon de la sin razon;" yet did it seem to me that of the two brutes the dog's was the Superior Intelligence; that he could understand what I said and what Pongo would say; that in the communication between us there he was nearest to me; but that between the Gorilla and myself there was an immeasurable and impassable gulf. He looked miserably human, I admit; but still I failed to recognise him as my Cousin German.

How should I know whether Osman Pasha, who has been winning such very striking victories over the Russians is ex-Marshal Bazaine or not? Yet people are continually asking me the question. In the Franco-German War of 1870 people used to go about declaring (quite erroneously) that General D'Aurelle de Paladine was the Duc d'Aumale. That he was not the Duke was speedily and satisfactorily proved; but truth (you may have heard the remark before) is stranger than fiction; and while this silly fable was being circulated the world were utterly ignorant of the fact that a certain "Robert Le Fort," a young private who had fought very valiantly in a régiment de marche, was really one of the Princes of the Orleans family. The Colonel commanding the regiment was evidently not very well "up" in his history of France, since Robert le Fort figures very conspicuously indeed in the ancestral record of the House of Orleans.

Touching Turkish Pashas, I may hint that the fez covers a multitude of nationalities, and that it is somewhat difficult to tell where the Osmanli ends and Giauour begins. I have heard of a Pasha of Mecca who had been an English drummer-boy in the force with which Sir Ralph Abercrombie invaded Egypt; and most of us are familiar with the story of the Russian Admiral who, on the part of the Czarina Catherine, was dispatched to treat with a Turkish Pasha commanding one of the armies of the Sultan Mustafa III. Coffee and pipes having been served, the negotiators were left alone; when said the Turkish Pasha to the Russian Admiral, "Hoo's a' wi' ye, Sandie?" They were both canny Scots from Greenock.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Any falling-off in the attendance at Goodwood during the first two days was amply compensated for on the Thursday, when the Stand and Ring were unusually full, and the Lawn presented a more brilliant appearance than ever. The first race of importance was the Molecomb Stakes, for which Red Hazard was made a very hot favourite, as it was generally conceded that he ought to have won the Lavant Stakes on the previous day. This time Archer was his pilot instead of Custance, and, holding a good position throughout, he took up the running at the distance and never left the issue in doubt. The brilliant entry for the Goodwood Cup gave promise of a most interesting race; but one after another the probable starters dropped into the list of the missing, and at last only five joined in the parade before the Stand. Of these Winchelsea was merely saddled to make the running for Charon, whose chance could not be esteemed very highly, and the repeated offers of 4 to 1 against Petrarch proved that he was by no means the same horse who won the Ascot Cup so gallantly. The race was virtually, therefore, a match between Skylark and Hampton, and for a long time they fought hard for the premiership in the betting. The little son of Lord Clifden looked very gay and jaunty, showing no trace of his severe gallop in the Stakes just twenty-four hours previously; but Skylark, always a very taking colt, except in his slow paces, never seemed better; and the persistent followers of Archer finally bore down all opposition, and brought him to 5 to 4, while 3 to 1 could be easily obtained about Hampton. Directly the flag fell, Winchelsea shot away to accomplish his mission, and soon placed a very wide gap between himself and the other four. At half distance he was fully 150 yards in front of Charon, who lay second; and, less than a mile from home, he still had a lead of about a hundred yards. Then, however, he died away, and the other four quickly caught and passed him, Hampton taking up the running fully half a mile from home, and coming along at such a pace that Petrarch and Charon were in hopeless trouble at the distance. Here Skylark made a determined effort, but utterly failed to reach the leader, who sailed past the post a very easy winner by nearly two lengths. Charon and Petrarch were both eased, and the former was placed third. A better Cup performance has not been seen for many a day, and people are now more ready to believe that the hurdle-racer is one of the best stayers that Peck has ever trained. After a look at that grand two-year-old Childeric, who had a virtual walk-over for the Prince of Wales's Stakes, the numbers were hoisted for the Chichester Stakes, and there was an immediate rush upon Mousquetaire (7 st. 12 lb.). He met Trappist (9 st. 7 lb.) on 8 lb. worse terms than he would have done in the Steward's Cup, and beat him even more easily than Herald had done in that race, so the latter must be esteemed very fortunate to have escaped meeting such an opponent. The race between The Spark and Athol Lad for a Bentinck Memorial was one of the most interesting of the entire meeting. At the distance the pair were running head and head, each going equally well; but passing the stand Cannon gave The Spark a lash of his whip, and stole a lead of nearly half a length, which Athol Lad, though he was going the faster at the finish, could never quite recover, and was beaten by a short head. This was the second time during the meeting that Cannon displayed the most brilliant riding on a two-year-old. No less than five walks over brought the day's racing to a "lame and impotent conclusion."

On Friday Mousquetaire (7 st. 5 lb.) made a fearful example of his fifteen opponents in the Chesterfield Stakes, and made his premature backers for the Stewards' Cup feel more injured than ever. The only other event that we need notice is the Nassau Stakes, which fell to Lady Golightly, but she had such trouble in conceding 5 lb. to the very moderate Mirobolante that, unless she makes unparalleled improvement in the next month, we need not think of her in connection with the St. Leger. We must not dismiss the meeting without allusion to the wonderful form of Archer, who won no less than ten out of the seventeen races in which he took part; he was also credited with two walks-over.

The first day at Brighton was completely spoilt by the incessant downpour of rain, and the ring and stand presented a very melancholy appearance. Nor was the racing at all of a kind to compensate for the miserable weather, and backers must have reluctantly returned a large portion of their Goodwood winnings to the bookmakers. The running of the filly by Scottish Chief—Emily in the Chesterfield Stakes at the Newmarket July Meeting, when she was only a head behind Childeric, naturally made her a tremendous favourite for the Corporation Stakes; but it transpired that she had done no work for a fortnight, and Insulaire defeated her cleverly, after losing some lengths at the start. Dalham (8 st. 10 lb.) seemed to have the Brighton Stakes, for which nine ran, almost at his mercy; but he whipped round when the flag fell, and could never be fairly induced to gallop, Harbinger (6 st. 5 lb.) eventually finishing a head in front of the unlucky Woodlands (8 st. 6 lb.). The weather was very much better on Wednesday, and the attendance was naturally much larger than on the previous day. At one time it was feared that the Cup would collapse, as was the case last year, when Preakness was allowed to walk over; but Charon arrived in the morning, with Sugarloaf to esquire him, and Snail and Rhidoroch also joined issue with Julius Cæsar. As the Russley stable was content to rely upon the last named instead of Hampton, he was naturally backed against the field, though he looked a little light, and was led down to the starting-post. We fancy that a mile and a half is as far as he cares to go; at any rate, he had had quite enough of it at that distance on Wednesday, and could never get near Charon, whose easy success greatly enhances the merit of Hampton's Goodwood Cup victory.

Owing to the general bad weather, both the great cricket-matches of the present week have ended in draws. The Canterbury week commenced with Kent v. England, the county having two men given, Messrs. W. G. Grace and A. W. Ridley. The scoring was very heavy on both sides, and a victory for Kent appeared pretty certain could the game have been played out. Messrs. F. Penn (135), W. G. Grace (50 and 58), and W. Yardley (47 and 61), all batted well, as did Lockwood (63), on the other side. The Rev. F. G. Greenfield (95) did yeoman service for Sussex against Surrey, and, time permitting, the former county could not well have lost.

ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON REGATTA.

The annual meeting of the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron was held on Monday afternoon at Cowes. The Earl of Wilton (the commodore) presided. The Marquis of Londonderry (the vice-commodore) occupied the vice chair, and there was a large attendance of members. Several members having been elected, the Marquis of Londonderry said that he had a very pleasing duty to perform, which was, on behalf of the members of the squadron and himself, to present a full-length portrait of the Earl of Wilton as a mark of the respect and esteem they entertained for him as commodore during the thirty years he had presided over them, and to wish him happiness and long life to be still amongst them. Lord Wilton, in acknowledging the kindness shown to him, remarked upon the rapid strides which the squadron had made since he occupied the position of commodore. The club had grown from 160 members to 230, and in tonnage from barely 8000 tons to over 20,000. The Prince of Wales, who on his arrival at Cowes was received with a Royal salute of twenty-one guns from H.M.S. Lord Warden, lying in the Roads, together with a few members of the club, dined last evening at the clubhouse.

There is not much to say respecting the first day's racing of the squadron. It was essentially a schooners' day, and the victory of the Hildegard, although very popular, was not much to boast of. Reaching up and down the Solent with a southerly wind is rather uninteresting work for racing yachtsmen. The programme began with the MATCH FOR HER MAJESTY'S CUP. Open to yachts of any rig belonging to the Royal Yacht Squadron. Time race. R.Y.S. scale. Course, from Cowes to a mark-boat near Hurst, thence to the Nab Light vessel, and return to Cowes Roads. Distance, about fifty-two miles. The starters were:—

Yachts.	Rig.	Tons.	Owners.
Hildegard	Schooner	198	The Prince of Wales.
Kriemhilda	Cutter	106	Count Bathfany.
Vol-au-Vent	Cutter	104	Colonel Marchant.
Ayacanora	Schooner	137	Earl of Gosford.
Lulworth	Cutter	76	Mr. Adrian Hope.
Raven	Yawl	60	Colonel Stirling.
Shark	Schooner	176	Duke of Rutland.

To the astonishment of not a few, the vessels were started under way. The signal was to go to the westward, and the Vol-au-Vent, under small square header, led the way across the line. The old Shark sported a main balloon gaff-top-sail, the rest working square headers, with the exception of Kriemhilda, which sent up a jib-header. With jib-topsails set all round, the yachts reached down on the port tack towards Lymington. Kriemhilda went past Raven, which was second to Colonel Markham's boat, off Thorney Bay. With a freshening wind and a threatening sky they fetched round the Hurst mark-boat in the following order:—

	H. M. S.		H. M. S.
Vol-au-Vent	11 15 0	Lulworth	11 56 35
Kriemhilda	11 16 0	Shark	11 57 40
Raven	11 54 25	Ayacanora	11 59 30
Hildegard	11 55 0

With a little more weight in the wind came a steady down-pour of rain, which damped the enthusiasm of the sightseers considerably. Ryde Pier was almost deserted, scarcely more than a dozen or so of mackintoshed individuals being visible from the decks of the racing vessels. Shark's jib-top-sail took the foretopmast over the side. Notwithstanding this, she managed to keep ahead of Kriemhilda, gybing round the Nab next to Vol-au-Vent. The Hildegard soon passed the cutters, and in the sea outside the Noman the Vol-au-Vent walked away from Kriemhilda very fast. They gybed round the Nab as follows:—

	H. M. S.		H. M. S.
Hildegard	1 30 0	Ayacanora	1 42 0
Vol-au-Vent	1 35 0	Raven	1 43 20
Shark	1 39 50	Lulworth	1 50 0
Kriemhilda	1 41 0

The reach back was very quickly accomplished. Kriemhilda, when off Nettlesome, carried away her jib top-sail-sheet, and the sail blew to tatters, which perhaps saved her topmast. She was not doing very well; but Vol-au-Vent was reaching surprisingly fast. Amidst loud cheers from all the vessels in harbour, they finished thus:—

	H. M. S.		H. M. S.
Hildegard	2 41 40	Kriemhilda	3 1 0
Vol-au-Vent	2 51 17	Raven	3 4 48
Ayacanora	2 54 58	Lulworth	3 15 55
Shark	2 57 0

Hildegard was the winner, with 3 min. 30 sec. to spare over the time allowance to Raven, the smallest boat. This is the second cup that his Royal Highness the Prince has won with this schooner.

Wednesday was a little more favourable as regards weather, inasmuch as the rain did not pour down with the steady persistency of the day before. There was considerable interest attached to the meeting of the Florida, Latona, Ada, and Julianar in the Solent. With the exception that Florida carried away her bowsprit, no accident of any importance occurred to mar the proceedings. After a slashing race, they finished as under:—

	H. M. S.		H. M. S.
Latona	2 10 40	Fiona	2 32 12
Ada	2 16 30	Bakaloum	2 47 25
Julianar	2 17 50	Surf	2 52 0

Latona winning the yawls prize of £100 with something to spare over and above the time she had to allow the others.

On Thursday the race for the Town Cup, value £100, with a second prize presented by the Royal Yacht Squadron, for cutters of not less than thirty tons, took place. The following started:—Kriemhilda, Lulworth, Neva, Bloodhound, Myosotis, Vol-au-Vent, and Britannia. Time for tonnage, R.Y.S. scale. At ten a.m. the start took place, a fine S.W. by S. breeze blowing. At the time of going to press Vol-au-Vent was leading.

HAMPTON, THE WINNER OF THE GOODWOOD CUP.

THE PIGMY MARMOZET (LIFE SIZE) AT THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS.

THE GOODWOOD CUP WINNER.

At Goodwood Races, on Thursday week, as is stated in our record of National Sports, the Goodwood Cup was won by the bay horse Hampton, belonging to Mr. F. G. Hobson. This horse is five years old, and is the offspring of Lady Langdale, by Lord Clifden, having in him, therefore, the blood of Newminster and Kettledrum, of Touchstone and Ratanaplan, and other famous sires. Hampton, as a two-year-old, was a selling plater at the place after which he is named, and was purchased by James Nightingall for 200 gs. He won the Metropolitan at Epsom, and then passed into the hands of Mr. Harvey, and into Mr. Robert L'Anson's stable. He won the Goodwood Stakes of last year, but came in fourth at that race on the Wednesday of last week. He carried a weight of nine stone, his rider being F. Webb, and his performance is esteemed highly deserving of praise.

THE PIGMY MARMOZET.

Among the recent additions to the collection in the Zoological Society's monkey-house is an example of the pigmy marmozet. This is the smallest and one of the rarest of the monkeys of the New World, and no other living specimen, so far as is known, had previously been brought to Europe. The little animal was purchased by the Society at the end of April from an engineer who had been working on one of the steam-boats of the Upper Amazons. It was stated to have been obtained near Pebas, in Eastern Peru. The pigmy marmozet was originally discovered by the German naturalists Spix and Martius in their exploration of the Amazons. Messrs. Castelnau and De Ville, in their transit across South America and descent of the Upper Amazons, likewise obtained a series of specimens, which are now in the Paris Museum. It is, however, by no means a common species in collections. We believe Mr. Edward Bartlett, during his lengthened sojourn in Eastern Peru, was only able to procure a single specimen. The total length of the body of this little animal is about five inches; its tail is about the same length. It is therefore the smallest of the true monkeys, though some of the allied group of lemurs are still more diminutive. Our illustration is of the size of life.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

In consequence of the death of Mr. Ward Hunt, the usual Ministerial whitebait dinner will not take place.

It is hoped (says the Times) that public business will be sufficiently advanced to enable her Majesty to prorogue Parliament on the 14th or 15th inst.

The Hon. S. J. Tilden, late Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and the Hon. John Young, of Montreal, now staying in London, have accepted their election as honorary members of the Cobden Club.

Mr. William Abbott has issued his usual half-yearly sheet, entitled "The Joint-Stock Banks of London," which, besides furnishing a comparison of the various items composing the balance-sheets on June 30, gives many interesting calculations in the form of percentages, &c. Messrs. Bates, Hendy, and Co. are the publishers.

The valuable library of the late Dr. E. F. Rimbault, well known in the musical world, has recently been sold by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson, and Hodge. It contains several very curious works, especially in the collection of ancient music, and these were eagerly contested for and fetched high prices. The entire library produced £1977.

Mrs. George March (Virginia Gabriel), the composer of many charming songs and several operettas, died on Tuesday at St. George's Hospital, from injuries received through a fall from her victoria on Saturday last. The horse took fright in Grosvenor-place, and Mrs. March fell on the pavement and sustained a compound fracture of the skull. She never recovered consciousness.

The Duke of Northumberland has promised to contribute £1000 to the Home Hospitals Association if the whole of the £20,000 named in the prospectus be raised by Jan. 1, 1879. About £4000 has been promised already, and further contributions may be sent to the honorary secretary, at the Mansion House; or to the bankers, Messrs. Barnett, Hoares, Hanburys, and Lloyd, Lombard-street, E.C.

The Home Secretary has addressed a letter to the Lord Mayor, making suggestions with a view to the suppression of the practice of buying or stealing children from Italy to beg about the streets. Mr. Cross points out how the "padroni" can be prosecuted and the children sent to industrial schools, and requests the Lord Mayor to cause instructions in accordance with these suggestions to be issued to the City police.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the fifth week in July was 76,725, of whom 36,135 were in workhouses, and 40,590 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1876, 1875, and 1874, these figures show a decrease of 19,6284, and 15,220 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 629, of whom 428 were men, 162 women, and 39 children under sixteen.

A model in wood of the Egyptian Obelisk, which is about to be brought to this country, has been erected opposite the Houses of Parliament, between the statues of Lord Palmerston and Lord Derby, but further back, and in the centre of the stone passage between the two little strips of green which are kept up outside New Palace-yard. The obelisk ends the vista of Victoria-street, Westminster, and has been erected to give some idea of the suitability of the site. Another skeleton model is to be put up, it is said, on the embankment.

At a meeting held in the Cannon-street Hotel on Wednesday, for the purpose of protesting against the course taken by the Court of Aldermen in regard to the recent election of Sir John Bennett as the representative of the Ward of Cheap, resolutions were passed to the effect that any infringement of the principle of popular election should be firmly resisted; and that the action taken by the Court of Aldermen was completely out of harmony with the spirit of the times and subversive of the freedom of civic franchise.

The Caxton Exhibition at South Kensington will remain open till the end of this month. Mr. Lewis, barrister, and secretary of the National Life-Boat Institution, suggests that this exhibition, considering how late in the season it was opened, might advantageously be kept open until the latter end of October, or even of November. The exhibition is, as many know, unique in every respect, and is not likely to be repeated during the next half century. Mr. Lewis further suggests, with the view of utilising the objects of the exhibition to the utmost extent, that arrangements might advantageously be made by master printers and others in the principal cities and towns in the United Kingdom for the most intelligent and active amongst those in their employment to see the very instructive contents of the Caxton Exhibition.

The Company of Shipwrights held their annual court dinner at the Ship Hotel, Greenwich, on Wednesday, under the presidency of Mr. W. Broomham. Among the guests was Lord John Manners, M.P., who said, with reference to the Eastern policy of the Government, "I will only say this, that as our efforts in the past have been directed to the maintenance of this country in peace, with a due regard to the direct interests and the pledged honour of this country, so our efforts will be directed to that end in the future."

The prizes awarded by the juries in the various classes of the Royal Aquarium Maritime and Piscatorial Exhibition were distributed on Wednesday to the successful competitors. The gold medals in the various sections were awarded to the Prince of Wales for exhibits of stuffed fish; to Mr. Frank Buckland, for general collection of coloured casts of fish; to Mr. J. Banting Rogers, for models of life-boats and life-saving apparatus at sea; and to Mr. H. L. Rolfe, for a collection of paintings illustrative of fish, &c. Besides these a number of silver and bronze medals and certificates were awarded.

The Company of Goldsmiths have granted £100 in aid of the funds of the University College Hospital; a donation of £50 for the funds of the Artisans' Institute, in St. Martin's-lane; and a grant of £25 to Princess Louise's Home. Ten guineas for this Home has also been received from the Company of Mercers. The Company of Grocers have given £50, and the Company of Clothworkers an annual subscription of £10 10s., to the funds of the London Diocesan Home Mission. The City Corporation has granted fifty guineas to the London Aged Christian Society, in commemoration of its jubilee anniversary.

A fine ship, called the Niigata Maru, Captain Walker, has arrived in the Thames from Japan. This is the first vessel bearing the Japanese flag which has entered the port of London. Though built as a steamer, she has made this long passage round the Cape under sail, occupying 141 days. The crew consists of thirty-four men, all of whom, with three or four exceptions, are Japanese. The Niigata Maru brings a cargo of about 1600 tons, chiefly rice, and is likely to be the first of a series of regular traders. Captain Walker reports that the Japanese sailors behaved admirably. The Niigata Maru is to be refitted with boilers and machinery, and will then return with the same crew to Japan.

Viscountess Strangford left England last Saturday to begin her labours in Turkey in establishing hospitals for the wounded. Lady Strangford works in harmony with the National Aid Society and the Stafford House Committee.—The Stafford House Fund Committee have received a telegram from Adrianople, dated Aug. 3. They are informed that 1500 wounded have been already brought in. After Rious and Sulciman's engagements with the Russians, the hospitals are stated to be crowded, and assistance "in every shape" is urgently needed. This call comes from one point alone, but the same necessities must be pressing at Plevna, and will soon make themselves felt at other places.

The shareholders of the Artisans' Dwellings Company met yesterday week to consider the report of their committee of investigation, an abstract of which had previously been published. The chairman, Mr. Evelyn Ashley, went through the principal features of what had taken place since the inquiry was instituted, and expressed his thanks to the Government for having undertaken the prosecution now pending. Mr. Morley concurred in this, and described the past conduct of the company's affairs as one of the greatest of modern scandals. Dr. Baxter Langley spoke in defence of his conduct as a director of the company. The meeting was adjourned to the 15th inst. for the election of directors.

Sir Sidney Waterlow, M.P., presided on Wednesday at the twenty-eighth half-yearly meeting, held at the Mansion House, of the Improved Industrial Dwellings Company. The report, which was adopted, recommended a dividend of 5 per cent. It was stated that the total amount expended by the company upon their estates was £455,673, of which £69,998 had been laid out during the half year just ending, the rents, &c., received by them in the same period being £19,865. The payments out of the last-mentioned amount were £11,788, leaving £8077, together with a balance of £284 from the previous half year, available for dividend. It was resolved that £1500 should be added to the reserve fund, which amounts to £26,500, and that £256 should be carried forward as a balance. The total number of dwellings (exclusive of 688 in course of erection) belonging to the company is 2225, and they afford accommodation to about 11,000 persons. The chairman and other speakers addressed the meeting in congratulation of the success which had attended the company.

The Registrar-General's return of births and deaths for the week ending Saturday shows that during last week 5642 births and 3263 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The natural increase of population was 2379. In London 2408 births and 1439 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 55, whereas the deaths were 203 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 22 from smallpox, 51 from measles, 15 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 21 from whooping-cough, 22 from different forms of fever, and 176 from diarrhoea; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 315 deaths were referred, against 332 and 338 in the two preceding weeks. These deaths were 213 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths referred to diarrhoea, which in the nine previous weeks had steadily increased from 13 to 184, were 176 last week, and were 176 below the corrected average weekly number; 130 were of infants under one year of age, and 30 of children aged between one and five years. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, last week the mean temperature was 63 deg., or one above the average. The mean showed an excess on the first three, and a deficiency on each of the other days. The duration of registered sunshine in the week ending last Saturday was 46.6 hours, the sun being above the horizon 107.4 hours.

The council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—To Mr. Peake, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's Inn; to Mr. Simpson, the prize of the Honourable Society of New Inn; to Mr. Sparshatt, Mr. Munk, Mr. Mills, and Mr. Parkes, and Mr. Baker, prizes of the Incorporated Law Society. The examiners have further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to honorary distinction if they had not been above the age of twenty-six:—George Jenkins Morgan (who would have been entitled to a prize); William Dust and Samuel George Gilbert (who would have been entitled to certificates of merit). The number of candidates examined in this Term was 254; of these 221 passed and 33 were postponed.

The usual meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works was held yesterday week at the office in Spring-gardens—Colonel Sir J. M. M'Garel Hogg, M.P., in the chair. The Works and General Purposes Committee presented a report stating that the committee had before them the resolution of the board of July 20, 1877, referring it to the committee to carry out the provisions of the Metropolitan Toll Bridges Act, 1877, and that they had decided to serve notice, under the Act, on the Lambeth Bridge Company in the month of September next, and to consider immediately after the recess as to serving the notices upon the Waterloo Bridge Company and in respect of the foot-bridges at Charing-cross and Cannon-street. The report was received and adopted. On the recommendation of the Finance Committee, the following loans to vestries and district boards were granted:—To the Lewisham District Board, £1200, to enable them to complete the purchase of the land to be set apart as a recreation-ground for Sydenham and Forest-hill; to the Vestry of Chelsea, £8000, for sewerage works; to the Vestry of St. Pancras, £10,200, for asphalt and wool paving works; to the Greenwich District Board, £1150, to purchase a freehold wharf at Deptford; to the Lewisham District Board, £3375 for paving works; to the Vestry of St. Marylebone, £11,000, for sewerage works; to the Fulham District Board, £4125, for sewerage works; to the Managers of the Metropolitan Asylums District a further loan of £46,575; to the Guardians of the Strand Union, £32,000, to pay off old loans; to the Burial Board of Lee, £2200, to pay off an old loan, subject to the approval of the Local Government Board.

The number of persons who made holiday on Monday was immense. The railways and steamers were thronged, and the number who went to the seaside and other places at a distance from town was unusually large. The South-Eastern Railway alone took out 53,400 passengers in the morning, most of whom returned at night; the Great Eastern Railway conveyed about 41,000 to various places on its lines; about 58,000 people went to Kew Gardens; and the steamers plying both up and down the river were loaded all day. At the Swan Pier, near London Bridge, the gates had to be closed two or three times during the afternoon to keep out the throngs of persons for whom there was no room on the steamers. Nearly 40,000 persons visited the Crystal Palace; the numbers at the Alexandra Palace are roughly estimated at 50,000; and 13,840 persons entered the Brighton Aquarium during the day. How small, comparatively, were the numbers of those who stayed in town is shown by a comparison with the numbers of Whitsun Monday. The National Gallery was visited on Monday by 9900 people; on Whitsun Monday by 25,527. Monday was the last day of the season and a sixpenny day at the Royal Academy, but only about as many people (6000) entered its doors as on Whitsun Monday. The British Museum was visited on Whitsun Monday by 11,933 people; last Monday by only 6596 persons. At the Royal Aquarium, Westminster, there were about 2000 visitors, against 25,000 on Whitsun Monday. The number of visitors to the Tower was 2467. About 700 working men left King's-cross station early in the morning and proceeded to Panshanger Park, the seat of Earl Cowper, where they spent the bank holiday. The excursion was under the auspices of the Working-Men's Club and Institute Union, and the party represented nearly forty metropolitan clubs. A pleasant day was spent, the gardens as well as the park being thrown open.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

Last Saturday the first detachment of volunteers returned from their eight day's sojourn at Aldershot, where they have given great satisfaction to their superiors, their places being taken by other battalions, amongst them being detachments from the 2nd London, the 5th Essex, the 39th Middlesex, and 10th and 19th Surrey Rifles. These will be relieved to-day.

The annual prize meeting of the London Rifle Brigade was begun last Saturday at the Rainham range, the contest for decision being the first day's shooting in the grand aggregate series, value about £120, and including donations from the Merchant Taylors', the Mercers', the Drapers', the Fishmongers', the Butchers', and the Sadlers' Companies. This competition closed on Tuesday, but the meeting, for which the total amount of prizes is above £300, did not conclude until Friday, when the contest for the champion gold medal took place.

The annual prize meeting of the H company of the 2nd London was held at Rainham last week, when the following were successful:—First series: Colour-Sergeant Millard, Private Reeves, Sergeant Green, and Private Duvineal. Second series: Colour-Sergeant Millard and Private Duvineal. Challenge cups: Colour-Sergeant Millard and Sergeant Millard. Aggregate prize: Colour-Sergeant Millard. Consolation prizes: Sergeant Mason, Corporal Hall, and Private Bennett.

The monthly jewel competition of the South London Club took place at Nunhead on Thursday week, when Private C. F. Lowe, of the Queen's (Westminsters), won the gold jewel; the silver and bronze jewels being taken by Private Hollis, 3rd Kent, and Captain Bearne, 46th Middlesex. Range prizes were won by Mr. Brown, S.L.R. Club, and Captain Bearne.

The Angus and Mearns Rifle Association prize meeting was held at Montrose on Friday and Saturday last week. The National Rifle Association bronze medal was secured by Private G. Robertson, of the Dundee Highlanders.

The annual contest of the Volunteer Artillery of England and Scotland has been held this week at Shoeburyness, according to the programme given in our last issue. The winners in Monday's competition were declared on Tuesday. The first detachment of the 3rd Forfar took the first prize; the third detachment 1st Lancashire, the second; the first detachment 4th Lancashire, the third; and the first detachment 1st Forfar, the fourth. The following detachments were declared the winners of prizes in the Repository competition: First prize, first and second detachments 1st Lancashire, 5 min. 25 sec.; second prize, first and second detachments 3rd Essex, 6 min. 12 sec.; third prize, third and fourth detachments 15th Lancashire, 7 min. 2 sec. The following were the winning detachments in Tuesday's competition with the 40-pounder Armstrong: First prize (Lords and Commons Prize), ten silver cups (£50), 3rd Essex, first detachment, 5 min. 57 sec.; second prize (3rd Middlesex Artillery Prize), £10 and £5 added by Major Ray, 2nd Durham, second detachment, 6 min. 56 sec.; third prize (Marquis of Exeter's Prize) 1st Cinque ports, second detachment, 6 min. 58 sec. Each of the above made twelve points. The third day's firing began with the 40-pounder Armstrong, but the strong breeze which blew all day interfered a good deal with the direction of the shot.

Physician, Dr. Barr Meadows, 47, Victoria-street, S. W.
Free to the necessitous. Payment required from other applicants.

THE LATE MR. SAMUEL WARREN.

The death of this gentleman, long since known as the author of successful works of fiction, and as a lawyer of some repute and a member of Parliament, was announced last week. He was eldest son of the late Rev. Dr. Warren, was born in Denbighshire, in 1807, was educated at Edinburgh University, and, after studying for the medical profession, changed his plans and became a barrister. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1837, was made a Q.C. in 1851, and was appointed Recorder of Hull in 1852. While studying for the Bar he contributed to Blackwood's Magazine a series of sketches entitled "Passages from the Diary of a Late Physician." These were afterwards reprinted in a separate form, and obtained a wide circulation. In 1841 Mr. Warren published a novel, "Ten Thousand a Year," which also became very popular. This was followed by another novel, "Now and Then," in 1847, and an unrhymed poem, "The Lily and the Bee," in 1851. Mr. Warren also published several legal works. In 1853 the honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred on him by the University of Oxford. In February, 1856, he was returned to the House of Commons as member for Midhurst, and he held that seat till February, 1859, when he was appointed by Lord Chelmsford a Master in Lunacy, with a salary of £2000 a year. Mr. Warren resigned the Recordership of Hull in 1874.

The portrait is from a photograph by the late Mr. John Watkins, of Parliament-street.

THE LATE MR. SAMUEL WARREN, Q.C.

THE KAFLAN KOH.

Azerbaijan, the north-western province of Persia, is situated between the Caspian Sea, to the east, the territories of Kurdistan and Armenia, belonging to Turkey, which lie westward of this province, and the Russian dominions of Georgia and Transcaucasia, north of the Araxes, which is here their frontier river. It is a country somewhat larger than Scotland, and very mountainous; being intersected by lofty and rugged branches of the main Elburz range, which is a continuation of the Caucasus into the Asiatic continent. In the centre of Azerbaijan, near Tabreez, its chief town, are the mountains of Sahend, rising as an isolated group, to the height of 9000 ft., from the shore of the salt Lake Urumiyeh. The Sevilan group, which rises eastward, between Tabreez and the Caspian Sea, attains an elevation of nearly 13,000 ft. To the south, where this province adjoins that of Irak, the Kaflan Koh range, which is the subject of our illustration, overlooks the broken table-land, and the valley of the Kizil-Uzen, as far as the town of Mianna. Here the Kizil-Uzen is joined by another river from the Sahend mountains, and suddenly changes its course from a northerly to an easterly direction. Forcing its way through a tremendous chasm in the mountain rampart, it receives additional confluent from the sides of the Elburz, and becomes a stream of huge force and volume, taking the name of Sefed Rud, or the White River, from the foaming surface of its rushing waters along the Pushti-Koh. It finally enters the Caspian near the town of Resht, in the province of Ghilan. The inhabitants of these highland districts of Azerbaijan are a mixed race of wild fragmentary tribes, mostly fugitives of ancient date from the Mohammedan conquest of Armenia and Persia, and professing some degraded form of the Christian religion, under the rule of an hereditary prelate, who is also their political chief, but paying tribute to the Persian or Turkish governors, and blackmail also to the Kurds. The more fertile valleys and lowlands are well cultivated, and constitute not the least important part of the Shah's dominions. The city of Tabreez has a population of 30,000, with a considerable amount of trade. Maragha, Khoi, and Urumiyeh, situated around the basin of the lake above named, though not actually on its shores, are towns of some value; and so is Ardebil, on the road to the Caspian Sea. It has been suspected that the Government of the Russian Empire would seek an enlargement in this direction, simultaneously with its attempted conquests in Asiatic Turkey.

The office of Master in Lunacy, vacant by the death of Mr. Samuel Warren, has been filled up by the appointment of Mr. W. Norris Nicholson, who has for the last sixteen years been the Lord Chancellor's legal Visitor of Lunatics and chairman of the Board of Visitors. Mr. Nicholson is succeeded by Mr. Edward Ross, Secretary of Commissions.

THE MAGAZINES.

The gem of the Cornhill is a very beautiful descriptive paper, by Mr. J. A. Symonds, on Amalfi, Paestum, and Capri. The accustomed exuberance of the writer's style is here toned down, while the general effect is still exceedingly rich, abounding in passages of the loveliest colour, and, on the whole, as good a specimen as could well be adduced of the somewhat doubtful species of composition that hovers between the limits of poetry and prose. Another remarkable article is one on François Villon, the most disreputable and repulsive of all men of genius, but a man of genius still, and sure to live, not merely in virtue of his great literary gifts, but also of his striking truth to human nature, even in a debased phase. The criticism of the paper is sound, and the style admirable. "Royal and Noble Gossip" is a bundle of anecdotes about royalty, in the free and easy aspect in which the greatest Sovereigns occasionally condescend to present themselves, and in which some of the very greatest, such as Henry IV. and Catherine II. appear to especial advantage. "Carità" is concluded, rather to our relief than otherwise. "Erera" pursues its erratic course—brilliant, but not over natural.

Macmillan has several interesting papers, though none of extraordinary importance. Professor Goldwin Smith comments forcibly on the tendency of politics to degenerate into mere self-seeking in the absence of any strong dividing line between political parties. Mr. Brassey's suggestions respecting naval shipbuilding are rather tentative than decisive. Mr. Nisbet's proposed antidote to pessimism is a sound one, but one that pessimism has rejected in advance. "How Pommer was Married" is a pretty sketch of the precedents and concomitants of a French wedding. The late Thomas Davidson appears entitled to his biographer's epithet of "A Scotch Elia" on the ground of the gentle yet manly humour of his temperament, but assuredly not on that of his literary merits.

"Mine is Thine" is decidedly Blackwood's pièce de résistance, and promises to rank high among those humorous pictures of Scotch life for which this magazine is already so distinguished. "Pauline" also is very good. A critique on the second series of Victor Hugo's "Légende des Siècles," if not remarkably profound or original, is eminently just and fair. "Past and Present" is a defence, in which we entirely concur, of Lord Lytton's reversal of the policy of "Masterly Inactivity" on the Indian frontier, especially as regards the principality of Khelat. "The Storm in the East" abounds with instances of the danger of criticising military operations at a distance.

The readers of the Nineteenth Century enjoy the advantage of having both sides of an important question set before them with distinguished ability in the same number—Mr. Gladstone, commenting upon the proof sheets of Mr. Dicey's article advocating the English annexation of Egypt. Mr. Gladstone's habit, we must say, of ventilating as an outsider subjects which he might subsequently have to consider as a Minister is one singularly calculated to hamper and embarrass him in the event of his return to office. Nor do we think that he will gain in repute by the disinclination to anything in the shape of a bold imperial policy which evidently, far more than the objections of detail he urges, lies at the root of his objections to interference in Egypt. The weakness of Mr. Dicey's case lies in the fact that several of his assertions—as, for instance, that of the Sultan's willingness to cede his suzerain rights—are at present mere assumptions. Next in importance comes Mr. Tennyson's spirited, picturesque, and musical, though perhaps a trifle academic, version of "Achilles over the Trench," from the eighteenth book of the Iliad. Mr. Holyoake's quaintly worded essay on "impatience in politics" is instructive as a study of the feelings of a working-class leader of the old school, whose character was formed when the aims of such men were more ideal and disinterested than at present. Another distinguished leader, Mr. George Dawson, is the subject of an appreciative tribute by Mr. R. W. Dale, deficient, however, in the thorough grasp that only comes of intimate personal contact. This should not have been wanting to Mr. Greg's sketch of Harriet Martineau; yet he tells little we did not know. Sir T. Bazley contributes a vindication of Owens College's claims to University rank, and Professor Morley a valuable survey of recent literature.

The most important contribution to a not very diversified number of Fraser is a letter from the Transvaal settlement narrating the circumstances of the late annexation in a highly graphic style. The writer takes a favourable view of the operation, but considers that it must be vigorously followed up, and that it will not do to be sparing of money. "Sexagenarian Mountaineering" is a lively picture of the manner in which a veteran can make the best of an Alpine holiday. "The Purple Head" is a fanciful story, founded on an anecdote in the Augustan History. Professor Newman states some of the considerations which militate against too precipitate "disestablishment and disendowment;" and the writer of the valuable series of articles on British trade discusses our commercial relations with the South American Republics.

The Fortnightly Review, like Fraser, has one very decidedly leading article, Mr. Mackenzie Wallace's essay on "Secret Societies in Russia." We do not perceive that Mr. Wallace makes any important addition to what has been already written on this subject, but it is satisfactory to find previous impressions corroborated by so weighty an authority. He lays, on the whole, little stress on the Socialistic movement in Russia, and this view probably holds good at present; but no man can predict the effect of the financial catastrophe which, however military operations may result, will probably be the issue of the present war. Mr. Morley, with his accustomed vigour, discusses that manual of Materialism, Baron D'Holbach's "Système de la Nature." The other papers are generally of practical interest, and include Mr. Grant Duff's proposals for improved methods of upper-class education, and Dr. Burney Yeo's inquiry into the comparative advantages of sea and mountain air.

The most readable paper in the Contemporary Review is Mrs. Pattison's Chapter on the French Renaissance, slightly affected in style but glowing in colour, and informed by a truly critical spirit in artistic matters. It is, we understand, an instalment of a forthcoming work on Rabelais. Mr. A. M. Gray, also, at the cost of some flippancy, makes his discourse on "neglected aspects of the drink question" very lively, and shows most unanswerably the enormous mischief that might be effected by legislation in a spirit of mere philanthropy, regardless of public convenience or natural right. Mr. L. H. Curzon directs attention to the colossal development of gambling on the turf; and Mr. A. T. Innes points out the illegality of the trial of Christ as a mere matter of Jewish law. Mr. Freeman's rhapsody on "the relation of the English people to the war" is the scarcely articulate outcry of one utterly beside himself with political passion.

"Miss Misanthrope," the mainstay of the Gentleman's Magazine, continues its steady progress towards a climax of interest. The humours of a contested election afford a theme eminently congenial to a writer of Mr. Justin McCarthy's political experience, and are skilfully introduced so as to bring the plot itself to a crisis. Mr. Saint Paul, the nonchalant aristocratic candidate, is a spirited sketch, and the characters of the two ridiculous lovers among Minola's trio are masterpieces of humorous analysis. Another remarkable contribution is a paper on the well-worn subject of the abuses of the Royal Academy, the special value of which consists in the perfect fearlessness of the writer, and his adducing individual instances of petty cliquism and petty malice, instead of dealing in vague generalities. Mr. T. A. Trollope describes the reign of organised brigandage and agrarian terror which has so long enthralled Sicily; and Mr. F. A. Edwards contributes an interesting account of Colonel Gordon's progress thus far in opening up Equatorial Africa.

In Belgravia we have chiefly to notice the continuation of Mr. James Payn's highly amusing Chinese story, and a good criticism on the Russian novelist, Turgeneff. "Proud Maisie," where the threads of the story are being skilfully gathered up, continues the leading attraction of London Society. We may also mention with praise a graphic sketch of the Sussex Downs.

The Dublin University continues to display symptoms of returning vitality. Professor Huxley and Miss Betham Edwards are among the contributors. The most noticeable paper, however, is a biography of Mr. Tom Taylor, by an old friend, illustrated by an admirable photographic likeness. An essay on the fairy mythology of Ireland contains some very striking stories.

The principal article in the Atlantic Monthly is a very excellent one on the influence of the German literature upon the English, by T. S. Perry. "King Cotton and his Gin" gives an interesting account of Whitney's great invention, and a painful one of the ingratitude experienced by the inventor. The Month has some pungent remarks on the "Anglican Confessional," which is treated as a very poor imitation of the Roman Catholic original. The narrative of George Ossolinski, Polish Envoy to England in the time of James I., offers many points of interest.

We have also received Tinsley's Magazine, the Argosy, the Argonaut, Good Words, Cassell's Magazine, All the Year Round, the New Monthly Magazine, the Churchman's Shilling Magazine, Science Gossip, the Ladies' Treasury, Industrial Art, the Garden, and the Charing-cross Magazine.

MR. GLADSTONE ON SANITARY MATTERS.

The members of the Bolton Liberal Association and their friends, about 1400 in number, on Saturday visited Hawarden Castle, and were allowed to witness the felling of a huge ash-tree by Mr. W. E. Gladstone and his son.

In acknowledging a vote of thanks for allowing the use of the park, Mr. Gladstone said:—"I hope some of you will live to see the time when there will not be such a complete contrast between manufacturing towns and the country as there is now. There must always be a great contrast in many respects between places where vast numbers of people are gathered together and places where there are but few. As a rule, there are three disagreeable things in large towns: one is noxious smells, one is the want of pure water, and the third is the enormous abundance of smoke. It appears to me that God never ordained any of these things; I do not think it was his intention or permanent law that those things should subsist wherever people are gathered together in large numbers; and I cannot help hoping that some of you will live to see a great improvement made in some of these respects. I mean with regard to noxious and foul smells, with regard to the pollution of water, and with regard to the quantity of smoke in our large towns. Now, don't think that this is hopeless; but it requires that people should think of it a great deal, for there is always somebody or other who thinks he is interested in maintaining the present state of things. Some manufacturers complain bitterly if they are not allowed to throw the whole of their filth and refuse into the water from which the people have to take their drinking supply." The right hon. gentleman illustrated the foolishness of this policy by the instance of a firm of paper-makers who made a profit of £3000 a year by the utilisation of refuse which, previous to the Pollution of Rivers Bill, was thrown into a stream and wasted. "Then," he continued, "there is London, with its four millions of people. I have lived in the west end of London for six-and-forty or five-and-forty years, but although there are a greater number of people there, when you open a window the air is purer and fresher, and fewer 'blacks' come in than was the case forty years ago. The reason of that is that Acts of Parliament have been passed to prevent people from wantonly and wilfully making smoke, and to make them consume it. This is now done to a great extent—not quite so much as it ought to be—but still a great improvement has been effected. I recommend you to think over these matters, because you have a great deal of power in your hands, which you may employ usefully in getting these nuisances abated. God made this world to be pleasant to dwell in. I don't mean to say He made our natural and physical condition to be pleasant. The air, the sun, the skies, the trees, the grass and the rivers—they are all pleasant things; and we go about spoiling, defacing, and deforming them; and we ought all to do what we can to prevent their being so much defaced and deformed in the future as they have been in the past. Take that as the moral of this little speech."

Mr. David Ward, edge-tool manufacturer, Sheffield, was on Monday elected Master for the ensuing year of the Sheffield Cutlery Company. The Cutlery Feast is fixed for the first week in September.

The Commissioner of the Dublin Metropolitan Police issues every year a report and series of statistics showing the criminal state of Dublin. That for 1876 shows a slight but satisfactory decrease in crime. The total number of persons apprehended on charges was 27,120. There is a decrease of 644 in the number of charges for drunkenness.—At the Dublin Commission Court a man named Brady, alias Farrell, was sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude for burglaries. He had been a week out of prison, after undergoing three years for burglary.

The Manchester City News announces that Lord Francis Cecil, second son of the Marquis of Exeter, to whom Mr. Cunliffe Brooks's second daughter, Miss Edith Brooks, was married in 1874, has been introduced as a partner in the banking firm of Cunliffe Brooks and Co., of Manchester, Blackburn, and Altrincham, the head and hitherto sole member of which is Mr. William Cunliffe Brooks, M.P. for East Cheshire. Lord Francis Cecil, who is in his twenty-eighth year, will, it is understood, take an active share in the management of the bank.

The inquiry into the circumstances of the running down of the Tongue light-ship on the 12th ult. has resulted in the suspension for six months of the certificate of the second officer, who had charge of the Rhine while the captain was issuing tickets to the passengers, and when the collision occurred. Mr. Rothery, who presided, said it would have been better if the captain had not left the bridge until the chief officer had taken charge; but this was not such a fault as would justify the suspension of his certificate.

SHUMLA.

The following description of the important Turkish fortress, entrenched camp, and town of Shumla was given by the Daily News Correspondent in a letter written about two months ago, but will now be read with additional interest when it is borrowed for this week to accompany the view of Shumla furnished by our Special Artist:—

"The head-quarters of the Army of the Danube have been established at Shumla since the outbreak of the present war, and a large force of the best troops in the Turkish army is concentrated within the lines. The train (there is only one daily) leaves Rustchuk at eight in the morning and arrives at the Shumla-road station at three in the afternoon. In order properly to understand the importance of Shumla as a military position, it will be necessary to study the physical characteristics of the country in its immediate neighbourhood. About thirty miles to the northward of the main chain of the Balkans lies the isolated plateau at the eastern base of which is situated the town of Shumla. This plateau is perfectly level, and is elevated from 600 ft. to 800 ft. above the adjoining plain. It possesses the remarkable characteristics which distinguish the high lands of this part of the country. Rising at first with a gentle slope from the plain, the ascent becomes more and more steep till it ends at the base of perpendicular precipices of rock, which surround the whole summit, and are accessible only in a few places. These peculiar rock-walled summits are of frequent occurrence in the Balkan region, especially in the beautiful Pravady valley. It is difficult to believe that some of the hills are not actually crowned by walls built by the hand of man, so straight and regular are the precipices.

"Towards the east the plateau of Shumla throws out two branches, of which the southern is short, steep, and abrupt, while the northern ridge is lower and longer, and sinks into the plain with a gentler slope. Beneath the crest of the northern ridge lies the hamlet of Strandscha, and at the foot of the bolder heights of the southern arm is the village of Tschengel. Between these two branches or arms of the plateau is a deep, sloping valley, extending from the foot of the rock-walled summit to the plain. In this valley, which has the form of a horse-shoe, lies the town of Shumla. Its houses look as if they had been shot down the hillside at random out of some gigantic dice-box. It is a torrent of houses. Above the town and valley rises a curious hump-backed hill. So regular and symmetrical does this valley appear from a short distance that it gives one the impression of an immense extinct crater. The general aspect of the whole plateau is strongly suggestive of the mountain scenery of Auvergne. Two little brooks which rise at the very summit of the plateau on either side of the central hill flow down through the valley and the town, and unite inside its limits to form the river Bakludscha, which, after turning several water-mills in its rapid course, issues from the town, turns off to the southward across the plain, and falls into the Kamtschik. From the northern arm of the plateau another brook, the Strandscha, descends to the plain, flows across the face of the town parallel with the Bakludscha, and like it joins the Kamtschik. Both these streams flow through the plain in deep ravines, and are important features of the whole position in a military point of view.

"To the east of the plateau of Shumla, and spreading out like a fan from the sloping valley in which the town lies, extends, far and wide, the undulating plain of which I have already spoken. The plain is partly cultivated, and some magnificent crops of barley, in a very forward state for the season, line the road for a considerable distance. The plain is dotted with the innumerable tumuli so common in Bulgaria and Bessarabia, the origin of which is, I believe, unknown. Just now these interesting remains of a forgotten age do duty as watch towers, and the erect form of the Ottoman sentry stands, eager and vigilant, over the mouldering bones of the Scythian or Dacian warrior who perished, perhaps in some great battle on this very plain, centuries ago. Shumla has an imposing and picturesque appearance from the plain. The houses rise one above another up the slope, the horizontal lines of their roofs broken by the domes and minarets of the mosques. On the left, high up the valley, are the great square masses of the infantry barracks and the Kouak or Government House; on the opposite side are the cavalry barracks and arsenal, and further up the hillside the new hospital. But, as is the case with most Turkish towns, the beauties of Shumla are more apparent from a distant than a close point of view, although many of the streets, narrow, winding, and steep, are very picturesque. The valley abounds in springs of delicious water which flow into troughs through square pedestals of dressed masonry, some of which are of simple, but elegant, and even classical, design. The situation of Shumla at the junction of several important roads makes it a town of considerable commercial importance. The high roads from the towns of Rustchuk and Silistria to the eastern Balkan passes unite at Shumla, which is connected with the former place and with the Black Sea port of Varna by railroad. In peaceful times, therefore, the industries of Shumla, the manufacture of silk and leather and brasswork, are in a flourishing condition. Within twenty years the town has much increased in size and importance, and now boasts an 'Hotel' and several cafes and restaurants.

"When, in 1828, the Russian army advanced upon the even then impregnable position of Shumla, they committed, as Moltke has pointed out, a fatal error. The impossibility of carrying it by assault with the forces at their disposal must have been evident to them when they looked upon it from the heights of Bulanik. They could see the famous lines stretching across the front of the town from either extremity of the arms of the plateau. On the summit of either ridge overlooking the plain was a powerful fort; outside the lines, and extending in a semi-circle from Strandscha to Tschengel, lay the advanced works which formed the first line of defence. While beyond them again the ravines of the two brooks above mentioned, the Bakludscha and the Strandscha, formed natural obstacles to an attacking force. Immediately in the rear of and dominating the whole position towered the plateau, covered with dense undergrowth, and accessible only at certain points by a few difficult roads leading from villages lying at the base of the plateau, over the heights, to the town. Unless the whole plateau, which is twenty miles in circumference, were closely invested, the Turks could receive by all these roads reinforcements and provisions from the districts not occupied by the enemy. Of the perfect defence for the rear of the position which the plateau affords, Moltke says:—'The Turks had no attack to fear from that quarter, the plateau being covered with woods and undergrowth so dense that it is impossible for a horseman to advance except along the roads, which are very narrow. Even active sharpshooters would have difficulty. These roads, in fact, form a network of defiles several miles in length, in which horse, foot, and artillery acting together could neither deploy nor mutually sustain each other.' In Moltke's day, when neither cannon nor small arms were rifled, and warfare was conducted at close quarters, the Russian army were able to sit down before Shumla at a distance from the lines which would of course now be out of the question. The redoubts of the besiegers, by which they hemmed in the army of the Grand Vizier, extended in a semicircle across the plain; the distance from the most advanced work of the Russians to the farthest outlying fortification of the Turks was not more than a thousand paces, and the besiegers were within the ravines of the Strandscha and Bakludscha rivers. The case would be quite different at the present day. The advanced works of the Turkish position, of course, lie far outside even the Russian lines of 1828-9, and probably the plateau beyond the Bulank hill would be the nearest position which an army of investment could hold facing the town. Shumla is the Metz of Turkey, and, if the Russians are bold enough to cross the Danube, its investment will be the most formidable problem which the invaders will have to solve. The words of Moltke upon the possibility of investing and blockading this wonderful stronghold in 1828 are as true now as when they were written. He says: 'It was possible to invest the Turkish camp; but it is with Shumla as with a fortress on the sea-shore—it can well be besieged from one side, but on the opposite side the enemy must be content to blockade it at a certain distance. The elevated plateau, at the foot of which the town is situated, has a circumference of about twenty miles; and as it is not possible even to gain a footing on this height, the attack is obliged to form a cordon of still greater circumference in order to observe the principal exits. The investment, to be effective, demands numerous and strong detachments, because the enemy in this wooded and hilly region can approach them unawares and surprise them with superior forces. Besides, the Russians were compelled to concentrate in the plain a body sufficiently large to repel a general offensive movement in that direction. The attack on Shumla seems to have been at first sight a bold attempt to conquer the enemy at his strongest point; this resolve was a strategic fault so great that it necessarily hindered the success of the campaign. Forty thousand Turks, abundantly provided with all the necessaries of life, were entrenched in a central and almost unassailable position; before them was a Russian army half their strength on the circumference of a circle which the enemy could cut at any moment by a rapid and secret march.'

'Taking into consideration the changed conditions of modern warfare, it is certain that an immense army would be necessary at the present day for the effective blockade of Shumla. The Russian force which attempted it fifty years ago was decimated by battle and disease on the plain, and withdrew baffled, having accomplished nothing. The Turks, without organisation or discipline, were able not only to hold their own, but were growing stronger and stronger every day within their impregnable lines. With exulting scorn they gave their town the epithets of the 'Grave of the Giaour,' and although the Russians in the wonderful campaign of 1829 captured Silistria and Varna, passed the Balkans, and pushed their advanced guard to the shores of the Aegean, the mountain fortress was never trodden by Russian foot. Once again in its history it is the stronghold of the Ottoman Empire, and the Sultan's hosts are gathered within its lines awaiting the attack of his ancient foe.'

BAYAZID.

This remote town and fortress of Turkish Armenia, near the frontier of the Russian province of Georgia, was captured by the Russians at the beginning of their Asiatic campaign. They have since been compelled to relinquish Bayazid; but the Russian garrison, after standing a close siege, was enabled to withdraw from the place without a formal surrender. The history of the affair is thus briefly told. On June 14 the Turks came from Van to try to recapture Bayazid. They occupied not only the town of Bayazid and its environs, but also the whole of the Russian frontier of Erivan, having hopes of taking also the town of Erivan. In the citadel of Bayazid there was only one battalion of Russians, who were blockaded by the Turks since June 17. General Tergukasoff, when he was relieved from the Turks who surrounded him by the expedition of General Loris Melikoff, returned to Bayazid. His first object was to relieve the garrison. The way in which he did this is described in a telegram sent to the Grand Duke Michael, of which the substance is as follows:—

On July 10, at eight a.m., the troops of General Tergukasoff, consisting of eight battalions of infantry, twenty-four cannon, fifteen sotnias of Cossacks, and four squadrons of dragoons, attacked the Turkish army of 13,000. After eight hours of cannonade and attack, the Russians took by storm the heights which command the town of Bayazid. They defeated and scattered the Turkish army, who left many dead and wounded on the field. They also took four cannon and twenty-four prisoners, with much ammunition and provisions. The garrison was delivered, and rejoined the detachment of Tergukasoff with the wounded and sick of the citadel. The whole of Bayazid is ruined to its foundations by the cannonade of the last day. Our loss is not yet known, but is not great. The troops behaved heroically, and I congratulate your Imperial Highness on the bravery of the garrison, who sustained a siege of twenty-three days with the utmost privations.'

Bayazid is situated in the Pashalik of Erzeroum, in Armenia, about fifteen miles south-west of Mount Ararat. It has always suffered in wars between Russia and Turkey, the result of which has been that, while before 1830 it had a population of about 15,000 and a brisk trade, there are not now over 5000 people in the town, and these mostly Kurds, whose commerce does not figure largely in the returns of the Turkish Empire. It is built on the side of a rugged mountain—one of the angles of the Aladagh Range. In addition to its two churches and three mosques, it possesses a monastery, called Kara Killesea, renowned for its antiquity. On the summit of the mountain stand the ruins of a palace built by Mahmoud Pasha, whose tomb is in a neighbouring mosque. Standing, as Bayazid does, on the high road between Armenia and Azerbaijan, a province of Persia, it has always been a place of importance. In 1829 the Russians took it, and again in 1854, when, after a battle fought before its walls, they destroyed the fortifications and departed. These seem to have been rebuilt only, however, to share the fate of their predecessors.

The Manchester Examiner says:—"We have much pleasure in announcing that Mr. John Lilly, merchant, of 65, Back Piccadilly, whose failure was reported in August, 1873, with liabilities amounting to £32,622, and whose creditors accepted a composition of 9s. in the pound, has now paid all his creditors in full."

Cardinal Cullen has issued a pastoral to his clergy, in which he beseeches them to pray that this Empire may not have to share the miseries of the war. The Turks have, he says, always been the enemies of the Catholic Church, and have inflicted great evils on every country which they have occupied; while the Russians are the greatest and most perfidious enemies of the Catholics, and would, if they got possession of Constantinople and the Turkish territories in Europe, persecute the Catholics and establish a system of schism.

THE COUNTRY AROUND PLEVNA.

Our map is intended to illustrate the recent military operations around Plevna, and between that town and Lofcha, where the Russians have suffered a very serious defeat. On the 19th ult. General Schilder-Schulder arrived before Plevna with three regiments of infantry (the 17th, 18th, and 19th), five batteries of artillery, and a few Cossacks. His troops succeeded in entering the town, but, having neglected to occupy the bridge over the Vid, they were again driven out of it when Turkish reinforcements arrived from the west. The Turks, commanded by Osman Pasha, lost no time in fortifying the positions around the town. Early on the 31st ult. they held the villages Opanesh (Plishtya), Grivitz (on the road to Bulgareni), Radishovo, Tuchenitza, and Slatina. They were also in great force at Lofcha. The Russians early on the same day held the following positions:—General Krüdener, who had come from Nikopol, had his head-quarters at Karadach Bulgarski, which was held by three regiments of the Fifth Division. The two brigades of the Thirty-first Division—their right flank protected by Laskarof's brigade of cavalry—were in front, their objective being Grivitz. General Schakhovsky, who had marched by way of Bulgareni, Karadach, and Pordim, had his head-quarters at Plishat, which was occupied by one brigade of the Thirtieth Division; the other brigade of the same division was in front. General Skobelof, with two regiments of Cossacks, a battalion, and a battery, operated in the direction of Lofcha. The Russian forces thus included thirteen regiments of infantry (thirty-nine battalions), having a total strength of 32,000 men, with about five regiments of cavalry, and 160 guns. This force proved quite unequal to the task allotted to it. The villages of Grivitz and Radishovo were taken, and the Russians stormed two lines of intrenchments in the rear of the latter place; but their bravery proved of no avail, and the day's engagement ended in a disastrous retreat. The Turks, too, appear to have suffered, and the Russians, by the end of last week, had again returned to the vicinity of Plevna, their line extending from Tuchenitza, in the south, to Tirstenik, in the north; Pordim and Tirstenik were the head-quarters of Generals Schakhovsky and Krüdener yesterday week. Later movements are recorded in another page. It will be observed that the figures introduced into this map denote the varying elevation of the ground above the sea-level, measured in English feet.

The Alta (San Francisco) of July 17 publishes a statement of Captain Nisser, of the brig Potoma, recently arrived from the Marquesas Islands and Tahiti, that the tidal wave of May 10 was not felt at Tahiti at all; but at Nukahiva, one of the Marquesas group, and in the Bay of Taihoa, the water rose and fell all day, the greatest rise being fourteen feet, on Captain Hart's plantation. On the other side of the island the tide rose with great force, sweeping away houses and other property, and the inhabitants were compelled to flee for their lives. The most remarkable circumstance stated is that, although there had been no rain on the island for four years, a fall of rain occurred just preceding the tidal wave, and at the time of the Potoma's sailing it had been raining heavily for twelve days, washing away bridges, &c., and doing other damage.

By the Australian mail recently arrived intelligence from Perth, Western Australia, has been received of a series of disasters to vessels in search of guano off the coast of the Western Colony, and the extraordinary disappearance of two islands—the Barker Islands—and their inhabitants. During Mr. Weld's administration, Captain Fisher, a Tasmanian capitalist, purchased from the West Australian Government the right to remove guano from two islands on the coast, described on the chart and known as the Barker Islands, and situated in lat. 14 S., long. 125 E. Captain Fisher dispatched three vessels in April with labourers and appliances for shipping guano, but when the vessels arrived at the place where the islands were known to have been there was nothing to be seen but "a wild waste of water." The islands had disappeared entirely, how and when are at present a mystery.

The competition for the American Centennial Trophy and the championship of the world will take place at Creedmoor, near New York, early in September next. The National Rifle Association of England has accepted the American invitation to send a British team; and it is thought desirable that a fund should be raised to defray the general expenses of the team, rather than it should be composed only of such gentlemen as can afford to pay their own expenses. By this means the captain of the team, instead of having to choose solely from the more wealthy, will be enabled to select the best rifle shots, among whom will, undoubtedly, be found several gentlemen who could not well afford to pay the heavy expense of a journey across the Atlantic, as well as sacrificing their time, to uphold the credit of the country. A sub-committee, consisting of Captain Pixley, Victoria Rifles; Mr. Martin Ridley Smith; and Major Charles B. Waller, St. George's Rifles, have therefore been appointed to collect subscriptions; which may also be paid to the credit of the International American Rifle-Match to Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co., 1, Lombard-street; to Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., Pall-mall; or to Captain Mildmay, Secretary N.R.A., 12, Pall-mall East. The team will sail from Liverpool in the City of Richmond next week.

MUSIC.

There is now scarcely any musical interregnum in London during the whole year. We have but just recorded the close of the Italian Opera season, and have now to notice the commencement of a series of performances of operas in English at the Crystal Palace—a locality which may be almost considered as metropolitan, from the facilities of access provided for London visitors. Apart from these, however, there is now a large resident population immediately around the Sydenham building to whom these performances should be especially welcome, from their being given in the afternoon and under agreeable atmospheric conditions such as are seldom found, on summer nights, in London theatres. Ten operas were announced in the Sydenham programme, first on the list having been Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," an English version of which was very efficiently given on Saturday by the "Rose Hérès Opera Company." Madame Hérès sustained the character of the Countess, in which she acted and sang with great effect, her bright quality of voice and cultivated style having been especially manifested in her delivery of the cavatina "Porgi amor," the aria "Dove sono" and the Countess's share of the duet with Susanna, "Sull' aria," in which Madame Hérès was well seconded by Madame Cave Ashton, who made a highly favourable impression by her performance generally, and was much applauded in her delivery of the air "Venite," and the still more important solo "Deh vieni." Miss Florence St. John made a successful first appearance here as Cherubino, and was encored in the canzone "Voi che sapete." Signor Campobello was an efficient Count Almaviva, the duet with Susanna, "Crudel! perché finora," having been one of the features of the day. Mr. Richard Temple gave the music of Figaro with good effect, and minor characters were filled by Miss Kate Villiers (Barbarina), Mrs. Dixon (Marcellina), Mr. Marler (Dr. Bartolo), Mr. De Solla (Don Basilio), and Mr. Arthur Howell (Antonio). The overture and the important accompaniments throughout the opera were finely played by the Crystal Palace band, Mr. Sidney Naylor having conducted with great efficiency.

On Tuesday "Maritana" was given, "Il Trovatore" was announced for Thursday, and "Don Giovanni" for to-day.

This (Saturday) evening the promenade concerts at Covent Garden begin, again under the direction of Messrs. Gatti, and with Signor Arditi as conductor. The programme of the opening night comprises an orchestral adaptation, by Signor Arditi, of themes from M. Gounod's new opera, "Cinq Mars," and a new polka (composed by Signor Arditi), in which all the drummer-boys of the Coldstream Guards will co-operate.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Chappell and Co. have recently issued some very pleasing vocal music, which will doubtless find wide acceptance among drawing-room singers. "The Men of Wales," by Mr. Brinley Richards, has a vigorous national tone and rhythm; "The skylark free" and "The captive skylark" both by Signor Pinuti, have much light grace of character. "The day my love went maying," by Louisa Gray, is a ballad with a taking melody, simple as it is. "I'll sing the songs of Araby," by Frederic Clay, is one of several effective movements in that gentleman's cantata "Lalla Rookh." "Lowly born" is a specimen of the versatile talents of the late Hon. Mrs. Norton, the words and music being both by that accomplished lady. "Our Boys" is a good specimen of a declamatory patriotic song, the words by Mr. H. J. Byron, the music by Herr Meyer Lutz. "Not far away," by Mr. Berthold Tours, is a song of a very graceful character, both in its vocal melody and its piano-forte accompaniment. "L'Albani, valse chantante," is a brilliant vocal bravura by Signor Arditi, based on themes from "Les Belles Viennoises" waltzes.

From Messrs. Metzler and Co. we have two very pleasing vocal pieces by Mr. Henry Smart—"The Parting Smile," ballad, and "The Fay of the Woods," duet. Each is flowing and melodious in character, and devoid of difficulty. Messrs. Metzler have also issued an harmonium tutor and an instruction book for the American organ, both containing copious and valuable information for students of the respective instruments, and each published at a remarkably small price. The first-named work is compiled by Herr Engel, the well-known professor of the harmonium, and is supplemented by a series of pieces, sacred and secular, arranged by Mr. J. Munro Coward. The other tutor referred to is the work of the late Dr. Rimbault, and likewise contains a selection of movements, in addition to a description of the instrument and instructions for its use.

The second book of Messrs. Metzler and Co.'s "Sacred Melodies, Ancient and Modern, arranged expressly for the American Organ," contains twenty-three pieces, adapted from the works of various composers by Mr. R. Redhead, and is published at the price of one shilling.

Messrs. Metzler's recent publications of vocal music include an effective part-song, "The Ant and the Grasshopper," for alto, two tenors, and bass, by M. Gounod; "The Chorister" and "My Love beyond the Sea," two expressive songs by Mr. Arthur Sullivan; "The Clang of the Wooden Shoon," a characteristic setting by Mr. J. L. Molloy of his own lines; and "The Knight's Wish," an effective song by Mr. Berthold Tours.

"Trio (in A major) for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello," composed by M. W. Balfe (Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.). This is a posthumous work by the composer of so many popular operas; and, apart from its intrinsic merit, it possesses an interest as being one of his latest productions; belonging to a class on which his attention had not hitherto been bestowed; and one in which he might have achieved considerable success, judging from the specimen now referred to, which is well written for each of the concertante instruments, and abounds in bright and melodious passages. It is in the orthodox form of four movements—allegro, adagio, scherzo (with trio), and finale (allegro). The work has already been spoken of by us, in reference to its first public performance, at one of the Saturday Popular Concerts of the past season, when the executants were Mlle. Marie Krebs, Herr Joachim, and Signor Piatti. The trio pleased greatly on that occasion, and the scherzo was encored.

Messrs. R. Cocks and Co. have recently issued a third edition of the valuable and comprehensive work on "The Organ, its History and Construction," compiled by Mr. E. J. Hopkins, organist of the Temple church, and the late Dr. Rimbault. The work treats copiously of the origin and structure of the instrument, with details of the progressive improvements made therein, with explanations of the mode of tuning and of remedying occasional mechanical defects, besides much information respecting foreign and British organs and eminent organ-builders, and many other matters of interest to the professional and amateur reader. This last edition of the book has undergone some valuable revision and received many important additions, Dr. Rimbault having completed his portion thereof shortly before his lamented decease. The book stands alone of its kind, and cannot fail to meet with an increasing demand.

Among Messrs. R. Cocks and Co.'s recent publications are "My Boyhood's Home," a very telling ballad, by Mr. J. L. Hatton, "Ay or No," a pleasing barcarolle; and "Steering," an effective song, both by Mr. F. H. Cowen; and "Far away," "Thy voice is near," two transcriptions of well-known vocal pieces for pianoforte solo, by Frederic Lemoine, the first from Miss Lindsay's song, the other from Mr. Wrighton's.

"Passion Flowers, Legend," by Odoardo Barri, is a sequel to his "Shadow of the Cross," the words by Mr. H. Farnie; the Italian version by Signor Zaffira. These very effective pieces of vocal declamation were composed expressly for Madame Trebelli. Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. are the publishers, as also of "Who will go a-maying?" a pleasing song in the pastoral style, by Mr. J. L. Roedel; another graceful song, by the same composer, being "Still Hope on!" "We meet again," song, by C. H. R. Marriott, is an expressive setting of some sentimental lines. "Easting," a song, by Robert Stanley, with some effective changes of tempo—is also published by Messrs. Cramer and Co., as are the following:—"Through distant lands I roam," an edition of Taubert's charming lied, "In der Fremde," with the original German words, and an English adaptation thereof, by C. H. P.; "The day when you'll forget me," ballad, by J. R. Thomas, which has much sentimental expression in its vocal melody; and "Les Leçons d'Anglais," by F. Chassaigne, a chansonnette in the piquante French style, that has been sung with success by Mlle. Chaumont.

The "Organist's Quarterly Journal" of original compositions (Novello, Ewer, and Co.). The thirty-fifth part, forming a portion of the fifth volume of this musical serial, opens with a graceful "Minuet," followed by a characteristic "Gavotte," composed by the editor, Dr. Sparks, organist of the Leeds Townhall. Other pieces in the number are:—an introduction and well-wrought fugue, by Mr. J. Wrigley, of Manchester; an effective march, by J. Whitaker, of London; and a cleverly-written "Allegro Maestoso," being the first movement of a sonata, by Mr. C. T. Speer.

"Franz Listz, a Sketch of his Life and Works, by Carlo Tieset," is an interesting biography of the pianist-composer, in pamphlet form, published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.

VOLCANOES.

Mr. Henry Humphries, writing from Bay Cottage, Wandsworth, sends the Times an extract from a letter he has received from Ecuador:—"Guayaquil, June 30, 1877.—We are all well again here, although we have had fearful times of late since you left, with terrible sickness and rains. Now all this is over, another plague has settled down on Ecuador. The volcano Sangai, about 125 miles from here, has taken it into its crater to give us an eruption, and has been cannonading away so fearfully that we have heard it plainly here for days, and everyone at first mistook it for cannon firing off at the fort just outside the town. Fine ashes have been blowing right over and fallen down like rain on the town, getting into one's eyes and nose while walking about, and rendering the day quite misty. In Bodegas they say it has been far worse, and we are every day expecting to receive bad news from the interior. As I write, even, the news comes in. It is not only Sangai which has burst out, but Cotopaxi, which is far worse when it does commence. They say that it was accompanied by an earthquake, which has destroyed many parts of the town, and that Quito and the adjacent towns were in darkness for two days."

Some particulars of the volcanic eruption of Cotopaxi are derived from another source. The Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamer Cotopaxi (Captain Hamilton), which has arrived in the Mersey, brings intelligence of a volcanic eruption which took place in Ecuador on June 25 and 26. On the days named, and for several days after, the volcanic ashes fell in showers along the whole coast of Ecuador to the estimated amount of 310 kilograms per square kilometre. Slight shocks were felt on the 25th and 26th; but on the morning of the 26th, between nine and eleven o'clock, a fearful explosion took place in the interior, the volcano in action being that of Cotopaxi, which for centuries has had an eruption every ten or twenty years. The ashes which fell on the coast were composed of fine particles of lodestone, vitreous feldspar, hornblende, and amorphous substance. The steamer Islay, on her way from Panama to Guayaquil, first noticed the fall of ashes at Marta, and continued to receive them until she arrived at Guayaquil, from which it is inferred that the winds from the high latitudes have carried them, as on former occasions, two hundred leagues from the volcano. An official announcement from Quito, dated June 29, reports the total destruction of the beautiful and fertile valleys of Chilo and Tambuco. On the same day great quantities of ashes fell at Quito, completely darkening the atmosphere for several hours. Intelligence from the city of Latacunga states that on June 26 a flood, taking the course of the rivers Catuchi, San Felipe, and Zanazuco, had swept through the city and over the adjacent country. The city suffered very much; men, women, and children were drowned in large numbers. Haciendas were swept away and destroyed; in fact, the destruction was terrible and complete.

The estate of Colston Bassett, Nottingham, lately offered by auction, but not sold, has been purchased by private treaty by Mr. R. Millinton Knowles, now residing at Bosworth Park, Leicestershire. The estate consists of the mansion called Colston Bassett Park and 1600 acres of land, and the price is £120,000.

An addition to Locke Park, Barnsley, of land nearly twenty acres in extent, given by Miss McReary, sister-in-law of the late Joseph Locke, the eminent civil engineer, was opened by Lord Halifax on Tuesday. The town was decorated with arches and banners, and was illuminated in the evening. A general holiday was observed throughout the district, and about 40,000 people were present at the opening ceremony.

In a speech recently made at Melbourne, Sir Charles Gavan Duffy defended the part he had taken in Victoria as a protectionist, though he had started in the colony as a free-trader, by stating that when in London some years ago he consulted Mr. Bright, Mr. Mill, and Mr. Carlyle on the subject, and that he had followed the advice they gave him. Mr. Bright, he said, had declared himself in favour of bonuses to promote certain industries, and of protecting a certain number of articles for a time. Mr. Bright now writes to Mr. T. B. Potter, M.P., to contradict this statement. He has no recollection of the conversation, but if any such took place, his views, he is confident, have been misrepresented. A Government might vote a sum of money to support a new enterprise which was deemed of great service to the country, or to introduce a new culture, such as the grape or tea, but to impose heavy duties on important articles of import would be so unsound and injurious a policy that he is greatly surprised that anyone in the least acquainted with him should have supposed it possible he could give it his support.

The Extra Supplement.

THE LATE MR. WARD HUNT.

Our Extra Supplement this week consists of the Portrait of the late Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty, whose death at Homburg on the 29th ult. was recorded in our last week's Obituary. This respected public man was the only son of the late Rev. George Hunt, of Wadenhoe, Northamptonshire, his mother being Emma, daughter of the late Mr. Samuel Gardiner, of Combe Lodge, near Goring, Oxfordshire. He was born in the year 1825. He was educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took the usual degrees, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1851, joining the Oxford Circuit; but, preferring politics to the legal profession, he entered Parliament at the general election of 1857 as one of the members for the Northern Division of Northamptonshire, which he has represented twenty years. He acted as Financial Secretary to the Treasury under Lord Derby in 1866-7, and in the following year, when Mr. Disraeli became Premier, succeeded to the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer; but his career in this position was brief, as he was obliged to retire with his colleagues in December, 1868. On the return of the Conservatives to power, in February, 1874, he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty. Apart from his official position and duties, Mr. Hunt had an intimate knowledge of all subjects relating to county administration. He took great interest in all questions relating to agriculture. In 1866 he introduced a bill dealing with the cattle plague, and was prominent in the somewhat exciting debates on that question. In 1875, again, he was equally at home on a kindred subject, and was, after the Prime Minister, the member of the Cabinet chiefly charged with supporting and explaining the difficult provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Bill. Mr. Hunt was a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Northamptonshire, and for some years acted as chairman for the Quarter Sessions for that county. He was also a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and was created an honorary D.O.L. of Oxford at the Commemoration of 1870. In 1857 he married Alice, third daughter of the Right Rev. Dr. Robert Eden, Bishop of Moray and Ross, in the Episcopal Church of Scotland, by whom he has left a family. The funeral took place in the English Cemetery at Homburg, in a private manner.

The Portrait is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.

The quinquennial gathering of the Sheffield Sunday School Union was held on Monday in Norfolk Park. Upwards of 20,000 scholars and 2500 teachers were present. From 80,000 to 100,000 spectators were, it was calculated, upon the ground.

Three new board schools, erected at the cost of £20,000, and affording accommodation for 1400 children, have been opened at Leeds. The Leeds Board has now twenty-two schools in operation, and four others are in course of erection.—The Birmingham School Board has received unfavourably an application from the London School Board to take part in presenting to the Education Department a memorial on the subject of spelling reform, although the Board had previously approved the action of the London School Board in the matter. Mr. R. W. Dale said, though the Education Department should instruct their inspectors on certain words spelt two or three ways, so that children might not fail in examinations, he thought the proposed reconstruction of English spelling should be left to the intellectual life of the country.

The Foresters' High Court Meeting for the transaction of the business of the order began on Monday at Greenwich. Mr. Wood, the Chief Ranger, in his opening remarks, said the misapprehensions as to the working of the Friendly Societies Act had been, to a great extent, removed, and now there were no fewer than 1722 courts registered, with a membership of 214,281.—On Tuesday the question of registration was discussed, and the principle of registration was affirmed by a large majority.—The annual Legislative Council of the British United Order of Odd Fellows met at Rotherham on the same day, Mr. George Mayne, Grand Master, Newcastle, presiding. Delegates were present from London, Leeds, Newcastle, Sheffield, Sunderland, and other towns. The total number of members is 10,928, being an increase of 209 during the past year.—The journeymen coopers of the United Kingdom, whose trade societies have hitherto remained independent of each other, have resolved upon a national federation of the entire trade. A conference of delegates from all parts of the country has been held at Burton-on-Trent, where the federation scheme was discussed and adopted. There are about 20,000 operative coopers in the United Kingdom, and their aggregate funds represent upwards of £30,000 sterling.

With the view of diminishing the loss of life which annually occurs from drowning, and which, according to recent returns of the Registrar-General, has increased between thirty and forty per cent during the past year, as compared with corresponding periods of the previous year, the Royal Humane Society has issued the following advice to bathers:—"Avoid bathing within two hours after a meal, or when exhausted by fatigue or from any other cause, or when the body is cooling after perspiration, and avoid bathing altogether in the open air if, after being a short time in the water, there is a sense of chilliness with numbness of the hands and feet, but bathe when the body is warm, provided no time is lost in getting into the water. Avoid chilling the body by sitting or standing undressed on the banks or in boats after having been in the water, or remaining too long in the water, but leave the water immediately there is the slightest feeling of chilliness. The vigorous and strong may bathe early in the morning on an empty stomach; but the young and those who are weak had better bathe two or three hours after a meal—the best time for such is from two to three hours after breakfast. Those who are subject to attacks of giddiness or faintness, and who suffer from palpitation and other sense of discomfort at the heart, should not bathe without first consulting their medical advisers."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

J G F (Barnageat).—In the position No. 8 can you not remove the Pawns from the Q B file and place the W B at Q Kt 5th? This alteration, if it is possible to effect it, would greatly improve the problem.

P J K (Donaghy).—You have overlooked the best defence in Problems Nos. 1743 and 1744. The true solution of the latter is given below.

G A B (Edinburgh).—It is not necessary to set forth the analyses of solutions in full, but it should be more satisfactory to yourself to do so.

P D A L (Clapham).—In the position referred to White can play either Q to B 7th or Kt to Q 6th with a like result.

T E H (Lincoln).—The problem is too simple, and is therefore declined with thanks. We fear your suggestion for a correspondence tourney between our contributors would, if adopted, occupy too much of the space at our disposal.

M G L A S (Kilkeel).—Your solution of No. 1742 is correct, but you are wrong in respect of Nos. 1743 and 1744.

J B (Mosley).—In Problem No. 1742 Black's best reply to 1. Kt to B 7th is 1. Kt to K 6th, after which he cannot be mated in two more moves.

S W C (Temple).—The corrected position is accepted, and you shall have an early report upon the others.

W G T (Calcutta).—We are obliged for the packet of games. There is no English translation of the German "Handbuch," but the arrangement of the book is so clear that it can be used by anyone acquainted with the German chess notation. Walker's "Chess Studies" are out of print.

J E A (Weymouth).—Many thanks for the problem, which, if correct, is a very good one.

T B O (Quebec).—The book of the Centennial Congress was published in Philadelphia. You should be able to procure it through any bookseller. The game is too weakly played by the attack to present any points of interest.

If White had attempted to win the piece by 15. P to Q 5th, Black would have obtained a very embarrassing position, if not winning, attack by 15. B takes K P.		35. P takes P	B takes P
16. B to B 2nd	P to Q Kt 4th	Down to this point the game has been played carefully on both sides, but here the Black allies should have played B to Q 3rd. This sacrifice is plainly unadvised.

This was a necessary precaution to prevent the adverse Kt advancing to K R 5th.		38. K to K 2nd	and Black resigned.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The annual meeting of the Counties Chess Association was brought to a conclusion at Birmingham, on Saturday, the 4th inst. The entries for the principal tourney, the winner in which becomes the champion of the association for the ensuing year, comprised twelve of the best-known provincial amateurs—viz. the Rev. Professor Wayte, C. E. Ranken, A. B. Skipworth, T. C. Yarranton, J. Coker, and C. Pierpoint, Colonel Minchin, Major Martin, and Messrs. Jenkin, Thorold, Halford, and Fisher. This contest resulted in Mr. J. Jenkin, of Glasgow, bearing off the chief honours, the second and third prizes falling to the Rev. Professor Wayte and Mr. E. Thorold respectively. In the second-class tourney there were eleven competitors for the three prizes provided by the association, and these, on the conclusion of the play, were awarded to Messrs. Ryder, Wallbank, and Newham, in the order named. There were but seven entries, all Birmingham amateurs, for the third-class tourney, which resulted in an easy victory for Mr. A. H. Griffiths, who defeated all his competitors. Mr. Michael ranking next, with the loss of one game only. In the handicap tourney there were sixteen players engaged, including many of the first class. The Rev. C. E. Ranken won the first and the Rev. C. Pierpoint the second prize. A general meeting for the transaction of business was held on Friday, the 3rd inst.—the Rev. Professor Wayte presiding—when Mr. John Cochrane was elected president of the association, an office that has been vacant since the death of the late Lord Lyttelton; and the Rev. C. E. Ranken accepted the office of honorary secretary and treasurer for the year. The next meeting of the association will be held in London during the first week of August, 1878.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and codicil (both dated April 18, 1877) of Mr. Augustus Henry Hunt, late of Birtley House, near Chester-le-Street, Durham, who died on May 12 last, were proved on the 24th ult. by Colonel Francis Faulkner Sheppee, David Pitcairn, and Henry George Haynes, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves Birtley House, with the furniture and effects and £1000 per annum, to his two sisters, Miss Elizabeth Hunt and Miss Mary Ann Perry Hunt, for life, with benefit of survivorship; £2000 each to his nephews, John George Pitcairn, David Pitcairn, and Henry George Haynes; legacies to his servants; and the residue of his personal property, including his share in the Birtley Iron Company, and all his real estate in England, to his said nephew, Colonel Sheppee. The testator's Scotch estates are left to his nephew, Henry Hunt Pitcairn, by a separate deed.

The will (dated Jan. 21, 1875) of Mr. Ippolito Leonino, late of No. 24, Great Winchester-street, City, merchant, who died on June 12 last, at No. 4, Via Alessandro Manzoni, Milan, was proved on the 20th ult. by Charles Emanuel Leonino and Arthur David Leonino, the sons of the deceased, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Hannah Leonino, his freehold residence at Hove, with the furniture and effects, absolutely, and an annuity of £700 during widowhood; and, subject to some bequests in favour of his four sons, he leaves the residue of his property equally between all his children, except his daughter Lucy, who has been already sufficiently provided for.

The will (dated Sept. 28, 1875) of Major-General Edward Charles Fletcher, late of Kennard Yalding, Kent, who died on June 5 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by Colonel Henry Charles Fletcher and Lionel John Fletcher, the sons, and James Fletcher, the brother, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000.

The will (dated May 28, 1875) of Mr. George Goodwin Buckston, late of No. 4, Queensborough-terrace, Paddington, and of No. 8, Whitehall-place, who died on June 6 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by Thomas Jennings White and William Wise, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator leaves to his wife his furniture, plate, pictures, and effects, horses and carriages, excepting what are at Callow House, Mappleton, Derbyshire, a pecuniary legacy of £100, £600 per annum out of his personal estate, and the rents of his real estate for life. There are a few other legacies, and the residue of his property he gives to his brother Henry.

The will and codicil (dated Feb. 27 and Dec. 2, 1876) of General Sir Watkin Lewis Griffies Williams, Bart., late of No. 38, Elgin-road, Notting-hill, who died on May 23 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Richard Haynes and Edmund Watkin Kent, the nephews, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £4000.

The will (dated July 15, 1870, of the Hon. and Right Rev. Horatio Powys, D.D., Bishop of Sodor and Man, late of Bournemouth, who died on May 31 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by the Rev. William Percy Powys, the son, the acting executor.

[We are requested to state with reference to the will of the late Captain Robert Jacob Hansler, which was noticed in our last week's number, that the testator assigned as his reason for not bequeathing to his widow a larger interest under his will that she had a large fortune of her own].

DISTRIBUTION OF REWARDS TO THE TYNEWYDD MINERS.

On the summit of a mountain commanding a view of the Rhondda Valley the distribution of the various rewards was made last Saturday to the Tynewydd miners at Pontypridd, by the Lord Mayor of London, in presence of an assemblage of 30,000 people. Mr. Talbot, M.P., Lord Lieutenant of the county, presided. The Daily Telegraph cups were handed by Mr. Talbot; the medals and order of St. John of Jerusalem by Major Duncan, of the Royal Artillery; and the watches and chains presented by the House of Commons by Mr. Vivian. The Lord Mayor next distributed the awards from the Mansion House Fund, amounting to about £4000. Finally, Lord Aberdare, by command of the Queen, bestowed the Albert Medal upon certain of those who had rescued their fellow-workmen from the flooded colliery. After singing the National Anthem and giving shouts for the Queen, the assembly dispersed. After the distribution, Lord Aberdare, Mr. Talbot, M.P., the Lord Mayor, the Rev. D. The second "Illustrated Supplement" given with The Colonies and India accompanies last Saturday's publication of that useful journal, which belongs to Messrs. S. W. Silver and Co., of Cornhill. The present supplement, like that which we lately noticed, consists of a sheet of MS., to all appearance, clearly and fairly written by hand, with a score of clever pen-and-ink sketches or vignettes. They represent the scenery, inhabitants, condition, and manners of our South African colonies, more especially the neighbourhood of Cape Town. The author, Mr. G. F. Angas, whose initials are appended, has an intimate acquaintance with this subject, and a pleasant way of showing it.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1877.

The Parliamentary Session closed by Commission on Tuesday last will, of course, be differently characterised by different political parties; but none of them, we suspect, will claim for it the praise of having been productive. To some it will seem to have earned the adoption of the title of one of Shakspeare's comedies, "Much Ado About Nothing." Some will prefer to apply to it, as descriptive of its character, one of our old but not most elegant proverbs, "Much cry and little wool." There is a sense, unquestionably, in which the proceedings of the late Session may be thus unceremoniously and even rudely represented. But, after all, like many other slap-dash descriptions, these are more forcible than true. The Parliamentary Session of 1877 has certainly been comparatively barren of legislative fruits; but it has, nevertheless, in several ways, answered an important purpose. It has passed some few measures of secondary social importance. It has indicated two or three other measures of greater moment, which, if Parliament should run out its natural course, will hereafter be passed. It has encountered obstructions which, no doubt, will, at no distant future, be put down; and it has gradually shaped a foreign policy, not very defined, perhaps, but fairly understood, which no constitutional Government will think of attempting to reverse. The country is better assured at the close of the Session of what the Government will do, or not do, in relation to the Eastern Question, than it was at its commencement; and, on the whole, both the great political parties are found to be nearer together with regard to this momentous subject than it was imagined they were six months ago.

It is not often that the guidance of Foreign Affairs is the one absorbing care of Parliament throughout a Session, especially of the House of Commons. Nor has it been so during the late Session, measured by the time spent in actual discussion, by the weight of its debates, or by the definite conclusions arrived at. What has taken place in this direction would rather seem to have been of the nature of reconnaissance to ascertain the exact position occupied by the Government, than decisive actions to reverse its course. On the very first night of the Session, in response to the Speech from the Throne, it came out that the Opposition were by no means of one mind as to the practical steps that should be taken to give expression to the popular judgment, and in the attempt afterwards made by Mr. Gladstone to force the hands of the Ministers nothing but a compromise effected between himself and a large number of his former supporters saved the Liberals from a disastrous and, perhaps, a permanent schism. Nevertheless, by one means or another, the will of the people of the United Kingdom in regard to the conflict between the two Empires of Russia and Turkey has been sufficiently displayed to impress itself upon the policy of the Government. Thus far the people agree with her Majesty's Ministers, that they will not sanction any departure from the line of strict neutrality. They certainly will not support the Turks, they are wellnigh as averse from joining hands with Russia in coercive measures against the Turks. Let what will happen to the one Empire or to the other, they are content to see to it that their own Imperial interests are left unaffected, and what those interests are have been pretty accurately defined. There may be still a leaning on the part of the Government towards the ancient and traditional policy of England in the East of Europe, but it is counterpoised by the unwavering resolution of the people at large.

The achievements of Parliament in respect of domestic matters have been even fewer than had been anticipated. The Session has, undoubtedly, been a laborious one, but has not turned out any great amount of work. Nor, indeed, has the little which it has completed excited much interest in the public mind. The Prisons Bill of Mr. Cross, the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Bill, the Irish Judicature Bill, and one or two minor measures, are all that her Majesty's Message was able to point to in the way of successful legislation. The Budget, as we all know, left the financial position of the country wholly unchanged. True, a bill to enable the Provinces of South Africa to federate themselves, if they should be so minded, has been passed; but beyond these home and colonial measures scarcely anything has been done. There would seem to have been some lack either of sagacity or of firmness in the arrangement of the business put before the House of Commons. To whom this is to be attributed it is scarcely worth our while to inquire. The new Leader of the House of Commons, Sir Stafford Northcote, has won general commendation for his courtesy, candour, and good humour. He has made some mistakes, it must be admitted; but we are not sure that the cause of them lay in himself. On the whole, he has acquitted himself in a position of no little difficulty with more credit than was expected of him, and he has certainly had to encounter a kind of opposition to which Leaders of the House of Commons have rarely been subjected.

Two or three incidents of the Session are worth advertising to. The most remarkable of them occurred in the House of Lords, whose treatment of the Burials Bill, introduced by the Government, took almost everybody by surprise. The obstructive tactics resorted to by some half dozen Irish members in the House of Commons, the sittings of that body for twenty-six hours successively with a view to frustrate those tactics; the censure passed upon Lord Beaconsfield upon some matter of patronage, and, subsequently, when the House was better informed, unanimously cancelled; and the party manœuvring which preceded Mr. Gladstone's great speech on the Eastern Question, will not soon be forgotten within the precincts of the Lower House. At any rate, they did something to redeem its proceedings from unvarying and utter dullness. They did so, however, at a cost which cannot be contemplated with pleasure. Such things may occur now and then; they cannot be often repeated without lowering the dignity of representative government in this country. They are abnormal; we trust that they will always remain so. The excitement which accompanies them is of an unhealthy kind. The habits to which they conduce are low, and much to be deplored. The noise which they make in the country is far greater than they deserve, and the effect of them abroad sadly disparages the real and solid worth of representative institutions. Should the House of Commons ever cease to conduct its business in the spirit of gentlemen, or become forgetful of that self-respect which is the best claim to the respect of others, it will degenerate into what it has never yet been—a mere theatre for the display of the vulgar passions of our nature.

Indian affairs have not received much more attention during the late Session than is, unhappily, usual. The Queen's Message shows that this inattention to the well-being of that populous Dependency is not due to the unimportant character of the events which have befallen it. "The apprehension of a serious famine in Southern India," says her Majesty, "which I communicated to you at the opening of the Session, have, I grieve to say, been fully verified. The visitation which has fallen upon my subjects in Madras and Bombay, and upon the people of Mysore, has been of extreme severity, and its duration is likely to be prolonged." How far the authority of the Empress of India can avail to mitigate that awful calamity experience will show. But, at any rate, it would become the Imperial Parliament of the United Kingdom to evince a deeper interest than it has yet done in questions vitally affecting the safety and progress of that splendid possession of the British Crown.

One of the most interesting parts of the day's proceedings was that in which the Prince fired all the four guns at the same moment by means of electricity. The vessel was not sensibly affected by the concussion. After four o'clock the Thunderer returned to her moorings at Cowes, and as she passed down the roads she steamed at the rate of about fourteen knots an hour. When she had picked up her moorings, the Prince returned in the Osborne steam-launch to the Royal yacht. It appears from the report of the Queen's University in Ireland for the year 1876-7 that at the various examinations of members 684 candidates presented themselves, besides candidates who are not members of the University.

The report of the committee of inquiry into the circumstances of the death of William Arthur Gibbs, a scholar in Christ's Hospital, and into the general management of the hospital, has been published. The committee find that the allegations as to the conduct of the deceased boy have been substantially proved, and exonerate the authorities of the school and the monitor under whom Gibbs was placed. They find many serious causes of complaint in the general management of the school; but these, they say, are due not to the shortcomings of individuals, but to faults inherent in the system. The committee recommend the removal of the school. They say:—"If Christ's Hospital is to be retained as a great boarding-school, there seems to be no antecedent reason why it should be placed in London; and we are given to understand that the sum which might be realised by the sale of the present site would much more than provide for the cost of removal. Like the Schools Inquiry Commissioners, we feel a great unwillingness to aid in destroying the ancient traditions and venerable memories of the place. But these associations may be too dearly purchased; and, for a thorough reform in the management and discipline of the school, we think that its removal from London is indispensable."

The council of King's College, London, have established a Science course, including those subjects which, according to the new regulations, are required of candidates for the First and Second Bachelor of Science or the Preliminary Scientific Examinations of the University of London. Candidates for the Indian Civil Service, the Home Civil Service, and for other public examinations, will find in this course the scientific subjects which are required for those examinations. In addition to lectures and individual teaching in the several subjects, there will be included in the course demonstrations and practical work to be done by the students in the physical, the chemical, and the biological laboratories. The subjects for first-year students in this course will be mathematics, mechanics, physics, chemistry, zoology, and botany, with practical work in each of the three laboratories. When candidates have passed the first B.Sc. examination, they are recommended to a more advanced course of study, which includes other sciences required for the second Bachelor of Science Examination.

WAR SKETCHES, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTISTS.

RUSSIANS ATTACKING THE BATTERIES BETWEEN GABROVA AND THE SHIPKA PASS.

UPSETTING OF A BOAT WITH FUGITIVE BULGARIANS ON THE BLACK SEA COAST.

LANDING FROM THE STEAM-BOAT EVELINA TO FETCH OFF BULGARIAN FUGITIVES.

ON THE BULGARIAN SEACOAST.

Our Special Artist with the Russian Army in the Dobrudscha, Herr Schönberg, of Vienna, was at Kustendje, the railway terminus and seaport on the Black Sea coast, in the latter part of July. He then took part in an expedition down the coast for the purpose of relieving some distressed Bulgarian refugees in the neighbourhood of Cape Kartali. Two of his sketches, engraved for this Number of our Journal, are accompanied by the following account of this expedition:—

"Directly after the withdrawal of the Turkish garrison from Kustendje, the foreign Consuls there undertook to keep the peace in that town. But it is almost entirely due to the presence of H.M.S. Rapid, sloop-of-war, and to the prompt action of Commander Drummond, that the Bulgarian rabble was prevented from plundering and destroying the households of the Mussulman inhabitants, as had been done at Medjidieh and elsewhere. Seventy-five Englishmen of the Royal Marine Artillery and seamen, though without their arms, were a sufficient force, when brought ashore, to deter the Bulgarians from committing such outrages in this town. On the other hand, the miserable cowardice of that people was shown by the hasty flight of large numbers of the peasantry, in dread of Turkish cruelties, which were, in this district, merely fancied or expected. I willingly accepted an invitation to go on board the Evelina, a small propeller belonging to the English Railway Company, to make a short trip down the coast south of Kustendje, and to rescue a multitude of Bulgarian fugitives. We were told by a priest that they were some families who had escaped from Mangalia, and that they had got into a distressing position among the lakes and marshes near the seashore, from which they were unable to extricate themselves. I was accompanied by two colleagues, the correspondents respectively of the Leipziger Illustrirte Zeitung, and of the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung. On the 20th, at one in the afternoon, the little vessel put to sea, under the able command of Captain Macri, hoisting the English flag. We proceeded to the southward, and about ten o'clock at night we arrived off Cape Kaliakra, and there cast anchor for the night. In the morning we steamed back, in a northerly direction, as far as Cape Kartali, where two boats were lowered, and manned by seventeen armed sailors, to effect a landing. One boat was then ordered to remain close to the sea-beach, in order to secure the means of returning to the steamer, while the other boat was dragged over a narrow isthmus to be launched in a lake of fresh water, upon the marshy shores of which, as we were told, many Bulgarian families had sought refuge. We divided ourselves into two separate parties; I stayed with the Captain, to reconnoitre the shores of the lake, while my two colleagues went inland, towards Tarankula, to find the Bulgarians. These were found, to the number of a thousand, many of whom were armed; but on their way to the seashore, with the party who had come to relieve them, they were attacked by a troop of Circassians. The Greek sailors and the two German correspondents returned the enemy's fire, and the Circassians presently withdrew; but the Bulgarians all fled at the first shot that was fired. Having got them together again, when this danger was past, there were 750 Bulgarians collected on the seashore. A storm was coming on, and there was no time to be lost in getting all these people on board the steamer. I went on board first, while my two colleagues remained ashore, to superintend the embarkation of the fugitives. The third time a boat put off from shore, laden with seventy-five persons, we beheld a sad disaster. The boat, from some blunder in steering her, was swamped by the waves, and instantly sank. Three sailors and two of the Bulgarians, leaping out of the boat, swam a distance of three or four hundred yards and saved their lives. But all the others, seventy in number, were unhappily drowned; they were mostly women and children. Nothing could be done to save them, as the other boat was too distant. Having taken on board the remainder of the people, about two o'clock in the afternoon we steamed away from Kustendje. We were followed by three Turkish ships of war, but contrived to elude their pursuit, and arrived safely at Kustendje at ten o'clock the same night. On the next day, I went on board H.M.S. Rapid, and again put to sea, returning to the place of our yesterday's adventure. But we only found there some Bulgarians engaged in plundering the dead bodies that were cast ashore. The commander of the Rapid therefore decided to leave the place, and brought us back to Kustendje. I then took leave of him and the other English officers, to whom I am grateful for their kindness. The Rapid left Kustendje for Varna in the evening of that day. The Cossacks sent out from Kustendje soon afterwards drove away the Circassians from all those districts along the seacoast, and then joined the Bulgarians in attacking and despoiling the habitations of their Turkish neighbours."

ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON.

The regatta meeting of the Royal Yacht Squadron for this year at Cowes, and the first day's race for the Queen's Cup, won by the Prince of Wales's schooner yacht Hildegard, were described last week. Our Illustration, on another page of this Number, shows the Hildegard passing Ryde on the home stretch to Cowes Roads, which she reached ten minutes before the cutter Vol-au-Vent, the next to her in the race. The second prize, indeed, was taken by Colonel Stirling's yawl Raven, receiving the time allowance, as the smallest though all but the last, of seven competitors. The yachts nearest in size and power to that of his Royal Highness were the Duke of Bedford's Shark and Lord Gosford's Ayacanora, but they took the third and fourth places after rounding the Nab Light, and so in the run home. The entire distance, from Cowes to Hurst Castle, thence to the Nab, and from the Nab to Cowes, was fifty-two miles, which was performed within three hours and a half, with a fresh southerly wind, which carried away the Shark's foretopmast. The rain came down heavily, and drove away most of the spectators from Ryde Pier.

THE WAR.

The battle of Plevna, on the 31st ult., which is the subject of an Illustration supplied to this Journal by Herr Szathmari, of Bucharest, has obliged the Russian Commander-in-Chief to alter his plan of this year's campaign. Retiring from the attempted advance south of the Balkans, where the Russians have sustained great losses in the recent fighting at Eski Sagra, Kazanlik, and Kalofer, they now content themselves with holding the Shipka Pass, which is on the road from Tirnova and Gabrova, over the mountains, to Kazanlik and the Tundja valley. The whole main body of the Russians now seems to stand in a great triangle, with Gabrova for the apex and the Danube for the base, the left side facing Rasgrad and Osman Bazar, and the right side facing Lovatz and Plevna. Three new corps, besides a brigade of tirailleurs, are coming up, with artillery; they march to Sistova and cross the Danube at Simnitsa. Before the arrival of these troops there were already on the Russian side, without including the 14th and part of the 7th Corps, which are still in the Dobrudscha, no less than six complete Army Corps, besides smaller organised bodies, such as two brigades of tirailleurs, the Bulgarian Legion, and different irregular troops. Looking southwards from the Danube, there are in the left wing the 12th and 13th Corps, under the Csesarewitch, with the Eleventh Division of the 11th Corps facing Rasgrad and Osman Bazar. Their front is covered by the Twelfth and Eighth Cavalry Divisions and a brigade of the Eleventh Cavalry Division. The 8th Corps holds Tirnova and Selvi, besides helping to guard the Gabrova Pass. Opposite Plevna are the whole of the 4th and 9th Corps and a division of the 11th Corps; a division of Roumanians stands between Nicopolis and Plevna. The Russians have already 100,000 men between Plevna and Biela, but seem to be waiting for at least one other fresh corps before resuming the attack. A new bridge over the Danube has been constructed at Pyrgos, some fifteen miles above Rustchuk, for the Russian siege artillery.

The Turks occupy a position somewhat east of the road from Plevna to Lovatz, marked by the villages of Grivitz, Radisovo, Tuchenitza, and Setova. The advanced posts of the Turkish flank hold Verbitza and Brislan, north of Grivitz, Grivitz being twelve miles from Setova and ten miles from Brislan, the extension of the Turkish lines seems to indicate a powerful force. The Turks are believed to be preparing for an attack in front and rear. To co-operate with Osman Pasha in case of need, Mehemet Ali has advanced one of his corps further west; while Suleiman Pasha, who is crossing the Balkans, is expected at Bebrova, south-east of Tirnova and south-west of Osman Bazar.

According to official news from Constantinople, Mehemet Ali intends to convert Rasgrad into a fortified camp. Ahmed Eyyoub Pasha's forces concentrated in the neighbourhood of Rasgrad consist of forty-eight battalions of infantry, fifteen batteries, sixty-two squadrons of regular cavalry, twelve irregular squadrons, and eight squadrons of zaptiehs—altogether 40,000 men. Mehemet Ali regards Rasgrad and Plevna as two defensive wings, which will be supported by Suleiman Pasha, who is now crossing the Balkans with about 65,000 men. A great battle may therefore be expected within a few days. The van of the united forces of Ahmed Eyyoub and Mehemet Ali is stated to have penetrated to about twenty miles from Biela.

The last three corps of the Russian regular army being under mobilisation orders, the first class of the general levy has been called out. This class comprises all those able-bodied men between twenty and forty years of age who have served their time in the army, or who were not enlisted in the last four conscriptions. Part of this militia, which is now insufficiently officered, will be employed in occupying Poland, the garrison of which leaves for the seat of war. In consequence of these measures, about 150,000 Russian troops are set free for operations in Bulgaria. The Imperial Guards, hitherto stationed at and near St. Petersburg—about 40,000 men, 6000 horses, and 120 guns—go to the Danube, but will hardly be in line of battle before Sept. 15. The first cavalry regiment of the Guards left St. Petersburg this week, and the first infantry regiment sets forth on the 23rd inst.

Mr. E. Matthew Hale, our Special Artist with the advanced Russian force of General Gourko, in the Passes of the Balkans, furnishes several Illustrations of the storming of the Turkish batteries on the road from Gabrova over the Shipka Pass. It appears that General Gourko, on July 12, reached the summit of the Balkan range; his force consisting of seven battalions of infantry, four batteries, a brigade of Dragoons, under Prince Eugene Leuchtenberg, and a regiment of Hussars, under Prince Nicholas Leuchtenberg, with one or two Cossack regiments. They had quite a choice of passage over the hills—the Shipka Pass, by Gabrova, down to Kazanlik; the Travna Pass, by Travna, down to Maglis; and, if they liked, the Glena Pass, down to Hainkioi, all three in the valley of the Tundja and its affluents, and only separated by a ridge from the road down to Adrianople. The path chosen was that of Hainkioi, in which they met with no opposition. They came down to Yeni Sagra, not far from the branch railway at Yamboli, and soon occupied the more important towns of Eski Sagra, and Kazanlik, but only for a short time. The Shipka Pass, immediately above Kazanlik, was also taken possession of by the Russians. Since the advance of the Turkish army of Adrianople, under Suleiman Pasha, the Russians have been compelled to abandon all those towns and villages south of the Balkans. The most horrible massacres have been perpetrated by the Bashi-Bazouks and Circassians, wherever the unhappy Bulgarians were left at their mercy. The Times Correspondent, in a letter which appeared in that journal on Wednesday last, written at Bucharest, after his return from General Gourko's expedition, describes the fighting on the 29th ult. between Yeni Sagra and Eski Sagra. He adds that the Russians found the bodies of men, women, and children roasted alive in barns whence they were not suffered to escape; and a baby was found nailed through its tender little body against a wooden gate:—"You can bear no more to read, nor I to write, of such fiendish cruelty. Turn the page, and hear how Dr. Carrick, an English correspondent, forsook his note-book to tend the wounded under fire; and how Mr. Hale, the artist of the Illustrated London News, saved his last dreg of brandy, though sorely in need of it, saying, in public school phrase, 'Some poor devil might want it;' then, later, volunteered to fetch water from a distant well, because the road to it was so exposed to fire that the Russian soldiers there dared not go; but the English lad, for he looks little more, went and brought the water to the wounded."

We have mentioned the sketches we received last week from Captain Gambier, R.N., showing the horrible scenes he beheld at Yeni Sagra after the massacres of the 15th ult., of which he gave a full account in the Times of the 9th inst. As undeniable evidence of these Turkish atrocities, we shall prepare some engravings from his sketches for our next publication. The daily papers are now half-filled with sickening details of every conceivable sort of wickedness perpetrated by the irregular troops and lawless camp-followers of both the contending armies, in the most barbarous and inhuman war that has taken place on European soil for two or three centuries past.

The Russian Government, it is now quite clear, contemplate a protracted campaign. A contract has been concluded with a M. Paliakoff for the construction of a railway from Bender to Galatz. It is to be completed in three months, and must be meant for use, therefore, in the conveyance of men and supplies during the winter, in preparation for a spring campaign. In the Black Sea Admiral Popoff's armoured vessels have been engaged in conveying to the Kilia mouth of the Danube a small fleet of Russian war-vessels of very light draught, for use in that river. The expedition was intrusted to Admiral Tchickatsoff, and included steam transports with soldiers, floating batteries, and gun-boats, all of which reached the Kilia in safety, the Popoffka and two gun-boats, which escorted them, returning to Odessa at night. A Turkish frigate, three ironclads, and a gun-boat were off the Sulina mouth of the Danube, but the expedition was not perceived. The Russian vessels thus taken into the Danube will be of great service to the army during the remainder of the war.

Our front-page Engraving represents the engagement on the 27th ult., at Budshak, on the Danube, between Rassova and Silistria, where the Russian gun-boat Fulgurn, and the torpedo-boats Ruidnica and Zinzar, were opposed to the Turkish batteries on the right bank of the river. It took place about six miles below Silistria. The Russian boats had come up from Tchernavoda to make a reconnaissance. The cannonade on both sides went on briskly for some time, and one of the gun-boats had its screw-propeller damaged. A Turkish monitor, from Silistria, at length came down to join in the conflict. Its appearance in the distance, as shown in our Artist's Sketch, warned the Russian boats to a timely retreat, and they got back safely.

Some Illustrations of the campaign of Moukhtar Pasha in Armenia, and of the raising of the siege of Kars, will be found in this week's Number and Supplement, with an interesting letter from our Special Artist there.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Marshal MacMahon paid a visit last Saturday to the new Hôtel Dieu. The crowd collected outside received him with cries of "Vive la République!" The Marshal went all over the hospital, and spoke to some of the patients. The site and building have cost the Municipality 37,000,000f., or about 90,000f. per bed. The work was begun about the same time as the Opera, being regarded as a kind of set-off for the poor against the sum devoted to the gratification of the rich; but in 1872, in deference to the objections of the medical men, the plans were remodelled, in order to secure more light and air, and the number of beds was reduced from 600 to 450, allotted into eighteen wards. The chapel and some of the basement fittings will not be completed before another year. The old Hôtel Dieu, on the other side of the Square Notre Dame, will be demolished, and the site devoted to a public garden.

Marshal MacMahon started on his tour in the Western Departments last Thursday. The Duc de Broglie, President of the Council, accompanies the Marshal-President to Evreux and Caen. The municipality of St. Lô has, by 11 votes to 4, refused to vote money for the Marshal's reception.

At Evreux Marshal MacMahon was received by the civil and military authorities. In replying to a congratulatory address from the deputy Mayor, the Marshal said:—"You believe rightly that the Constitution is not threatened by him to whom its guardianship is intrusted. It is menaced solely by those whose doctrines disquiet all interests and endanger principles the maintenance of which is equally necessary to any form of Government. It is my wish to see an end to the present crisis, and it will end when the wisdom of the country, manifested in the choice of its new representatives, shall have re-established between the public Powers the harmony which was for a brief space interrupted." Replying to an address from the President of the Tribunal of Commerce, the Marshal said:—"I am already acquainted with the wants and aspirations of the Norman population. What they desire, in fact, is stability; and it is to secure it in the future that I preferred an inevitable but transitory crisis to the abasement of authority before excessive pretensions. A wise policy makes business prosperous, and trade will receive a durable impulse when my Government, instead of having to defend itself against incessant attacks, shall be able to devote all its efforts to promoting the real interests of the country."

M. de Fourtou, the Minister of the Interior, has left for the department of the Dordogne, and during his absence the Duc de Broglie will administer the affairs of the Home Office.

A note has been published in the Moniteur declaring that the Ministers have never proposed to proclaim a state of siege at the period of the elections. The subject has not even been discussed. It is also stated that Marshal MacMahon intends to make no changes in the present Cabinet until after the elections. The report that M. de Broglie and M. de Fourtou are at variance is contradicted.

The Prince de Joinville has gone to Geneva to join the Emperor and Empress of Brazil in an excursion to the Grand Chartreuse.

M. Thiers, Madame Thiers, and Mlle. Dosne left Paris on the morning of Thursday week for Dieppe, where the veteran ex-President will spend about a month. Dieppe put on a holiday aspect in honour of the visit of M. Thiers, who, on his arrival at the railway station, found a large crowd waiting to escort him to the Hôtel Bristol, with cries of "Vive Thiers! Vive la République!" No speech was delivered.

Wednesday being the anniversary of the Fête of Napoleon III., a mass was celebrated at the Church of St. Augustin in Paris, at which a large number of Bonapartists were present. Two or three persons were arrested outside for shouting "Vive l'Empereur." M. Rouher and other leading Bonapartists had left Paris for Chislehurst to attend the Napoleonic fête there on Wednesday. The Ordre, the organ of M. Rouher, publishes an article giving the programme of the Bonapartist party. In answer to the question as to what the Third Empire will be, the article says:—"The same as its two predecessors, without deviation from their principles, an organised democracy."

According to the calculations of the Committee of Republican Senators, the number of Republican Deputies returned at the approaching general election will be at least 372.

A short time since the manager of the Mot d'Ordre was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 4000f., for exciting citizens to hatred and contempt of the Government and for outraging public morality and religion. This sentence has now been reduced by the Court of Assizes, on appeal, to three months' imprisonment and a fine of 2000f. The Correctional Court of Appeal has reversed the judgment given in the case of MM. About and Sarcey, who were sentenced to imprisonment for having libelled a former magistrate of Provins. The Court has annulled the sentence of imprisonment and reduced the penalty to a fine. M. Ferry, senator, the founder of the Left Centre group in the Assembly of 1871, has been dismissed from the mayoralty of Esconnes for refusing to placard certain portions of the Bulletin des Communes. M. Menier, a late deputy, has been dismissed from his post as Mayor of Noisiel. A man was on Tuesday sentenced to two months' imprisonment for having shouted in a court of justice, "Vive l'Empereur!" "Vive Napoléon IV.!" The tribunal of St. Die has acquitted M. Buzard, a Frenchman, but a naturalised citizen of the United States, who was charged with insulting Marshal MacMahon at a table d'hôte.

A decree issued on Wednesday devotes 1,500,000 f. to prizes at next year's Exhibition, to be awarded by a jury of 300 Frenchmen and 350 foreigners, with 150 Frenchmen and 175 foreigners as assistant or deputy jurors.

The distribution of prizes to the exhibitors of the Salon of 1877, and the pupils of the School of the Fine Arts, took place on Saturday last, at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, Quai Malaquais, Paris. The Minister of Public Instruction ordinarily presides on the occasion, but as M. Brunet was obliged to leave Paris, he had delegated his functions to the Marquis Chennévières, who addressed the assembly in a speech which was warmly applauded. He then proceeded to the distribution of the awards, with the usual ceremonial. The names of M. Pavis de Chavannes and M. Paul Dubois were received with loud acclamations. The Marquis then announced that M. Pavis de Chavannes was promoted to the grade of Officer in the Legion of Honour, and that MM. Hector Leroux, de Beaumont, painters, and MM. Moreau, Vauthier, and Glaize, sculptors, were nominated Knights. The first medal for painted full-length figures was accorded to MM. Schommer, Bellanger, Doucet, Bettanier, and Bramtot. For lifesize modelled, to MM. Lefèvre, Paris, Michel, Guilbert, Dampé, and Hudelet. The prize founded by M. Caylus, for expression, was accorded, in painting, to M. Ziel, and in sculpture to M. Boucher. That for the torso (half figure), to M. Schommer; and that of anatomy, of the value of 600f., founded by Dr. Huguier, was accorded to M. Lacaille. Several others were given. The absence of M. Joseph Brunet, the Minister of Public Instruction, gave rise to much comment, and the proceedings were several times interrupted by loud cries of "The Minister," "Joseph," "He is coming," "He is not coming," and so forth.

EGYPT.

A telegram from Alexandria states that the new slave convention recently concluded between Great Britain and Egypt entirely prohibits the export or import of negro slaves into Egypt, as well as the mutilation of children, and all traffic in them. Egyptian slave-traders will be tried by court-martial, as assassins, and foreigners dealing in slaves will be handed over to the tribunals of the country to which they belong. English cruisers will be authorised to capture slave-ships sailing under the Egyptian flag, and Egyptian cruisers may act in a similar manner towards slavers hoisting the British flag within Egyptian waters. The Khedive further engages to abolish all private traffic in slaves within seven years from the present time, as far as regards Egypt proper, and within twelve years in the Soudan and frontier provinces.

AMERICA.

President Hayes, the Secretary for War, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General have gone to Bennington, Vermont, to attend the centennial celebration of the Battle of Bennington, on Thursday. President Hayes was enthusiastically welcomed on Wednesday evening by a crowd of 40,000 persons. He afterwards held a public reception.

A convention of free-traders has been called at Saratoga for Sept. 8, in order to urge Congress to sanction radical changes in the customs tariff.

The Maine Democrats have adopted resolutions denouncing the installation of President Hayes, although the party submit to it for the sake of peace. Congress is, however, urged to take measures to prevent any repetition of a similar irregularity. The resolutions applaud the restoration of self-government in the Southern States, and promise that no factious opposition shall be offered to the present Administration.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Times states that efforts are being made in various parts of the country to form a Working Men's Political Party, independent of either regular party. The working men last week carried Louisville by a large majority. Meetings preparatory to the formation of the party were held in Cincinnati, Columbus, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York. The movement attracts attention, the belief being that the party, under the impetus given by the recent railway troubles, will be formidable. The meetings which have been held have declared for working men's direct representation in Congress, State, and Municipal Legislatures, the repeal of all oppressive laws against labour, and the enactment of laws protecting labour.

The Governor of Texas, it was stated, would demand the surrender of the desperadoes who broke open the gaol in Rio Grande city, and the Government approved this course, which is in accordance with the Extradition Treaty.

A terrible calamity is reported by telegram from New York. Intelligence has reached that city from Panama that the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamer Eten was lost on July 15, seventy miles north of Valparaiso. It is estimated that 160 persons were on board, forty-three of whom had reached the shore up to July 18. Twenty others took refuge on a rock, and the British war-ship Amethyst went to their assistance, but the bad weather prevented the rescue from being accomplished. The survivors on the rock, after experiencing terrible suffering from exposure and want of food, threw themselves into the sea to end their misery. Only three of them were saved, and it is believed that altogether upwards of one hundred perished.

INDIA.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta sends a long telegram describing the proceedings at the meeting held at Madras on the 9th inst., under the presidency of the Duke of Buckingham, at which it was resolved to appeal to the Lord Mayor of London and the authorities of all the large cities and towns in the United Kingdom for help from England for the sufferers by the famine in the Madras Presidency. The Duke of Buckingham said that the wants of Madras were now beyond the means of the Presidency. Every aid that could be secured was needed to save the people, their families, and their children, for the future of the Empire. Surgeon-Major Cornish, sanitary commissioner, stated that there were now 1,500,000 people to be fed, and up to the end of July over 500,000 people had died. Another speaker, Mr. Jones, said that more people were found dead in one morning in Madras than had died in the whole of the Bengal famine. The Viceroy has determined to visit the famine-stricken country for the purpose of holding a personal conference with the Governors. He was to leave Simla on Thursday, and will probably return to Simla about the middle of November. During his absence Sir Edward Bayley will be President of the Council. The correspondent says that during last week there has been a slight and insufficient rain in portions of Madras and Mysore. It is now clear that famine will rage with increased intensity in these provinces for at least six months longer. The Bombay report is hopeful, but anxiety is felt for Guzerat and Scinde, which have hitherto not been included in the famine area, and also for Rajpootana, where prices are rising greatly. In the north-west rain is still wanted, and the writer says, "it may be said regarding the greater part of India that the situation is critical, and that great danger of almost universal famine exists."

A telegram from Calcutta on Monday says that the frontier is everywhere quiet.

The British Government has decided to break off all connection with native religious ceremonies at Baroda. Formerly political residents were expected to attend the Guicowar in the state processions got up in honour of the idol Gunputtee. This has now been stopped.

The votes recorded were:—For Sir John Bennett, 217; for Mr. Deputy Breffit, 99. His Lordship declared accordingly that the election had fallen on Sir John Bennett. The successful candidate, in addressing the large crowd assembled, said the issue of the contest was very satisfactory to him, as he would rather be the electors' alderman than the aldermen's alderman. He should do his best to exert a courtesy and a power of gentlemanly conciliation which would, he hoped, render him an agreeable colleague of the august body into which he meant to go and whence he had come.

A memorial from the Metropolitan and National Nursing Association for providing trained nurses to the sick poor has been presented to the Lord Chancellor, who has been directed by the Queen to frame rules for the future administration of the Royal Hospital of St. Katherine, by the Tower. Sir Charles Palmer, who presided, congratulated the members on their successful gathering, and stated that the association, which now numbers over 1000 members, is progressing favourably, thanks to the energy of their hon. secretary, Mr. Murphy, its funded capital amounting to upwards of £2000. With reference to the proposed "Cabmen's Home," he stated that an offer of a piece of land had been made for its erection, and towards the expenses the cabmen alone had subscribed over £200. In all, £1000 is required, and it is hoped that this sum will be subscribed by the public.

There were 2236 births and 1293 deaths registered in London last week. The fatal cases of smallpox, which had been 35, 27, and 22 in the three preceding weeks, further declined last week to 20. The Royal Botanic Society held its thirty-eighth anniversary meeting yesterday week—Lord Chesham in the chair. The reports from the council and officers stated that the society is enjoying a good share of the public favour, 129 new subscribers having been elected during the season. Special exhibitions have been held during the year of groups of allied plants, continuing for two or three weeks, which enabled those who delight in their own gardens to select the best varieties of particular classes much better than the usual flower shows of one or two days. The operations of the society, however, have been more directed to supply a great public want. Most schools now undertake to teach something of botany, and 550 free orders of admission were granted to applicants, of whom thirty-eight were artists; and 46,274 specimens of plants for study were issued during the season. A voluminous report by Mr. J. G. Symons was read, giving extracts of the meteorological observations made during the last six years, which will be valuable as a record of the weather of London for comparison with returns from other cities or neighbourhoods. The following Fellows of the society were elected to join the council for the year:—Earl Granville; Viscount Falmouth; Mr. John Walter, M.P.; Earl Annesley, the Earl of Derby, Sir William Hutt, Sir Richard Wallace, M.P., and Mr. R. Temple Frere. The Duke of Teck was re-elected president, and Mr. E. Marjoribanks treasurer.

The Lord Mayor, upon taking his seat at the Mansion House on Wednesday, said: Before proceeding to the business of the day, I desire to draw public attention to the dire famine which is now raging in Southern India, and especially in the Presidency of Madras. The subject, as you are aware, formed an impressive paragraph in her Majesty's speech in proroguing Parliament. I will now read a telegram I have received, dated Madras, Aug. 13, from the chairman of the Famine Relief Committee:—"The committee earnestly solicits your Lordship's powerful influence and support in an appeal for public assistance for the relief of the afflicted populations of Southern India. The position is extremely grave. There is very great increasing mortality from want, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the Government. The monsoon has again been deficient. The difficulties will certainly last till January. Cattle have perished in large numbers, and among all the labouring classes there is very great destitution. Property is being sold for food. The villages have been largely deserted, and the poor are wandering in search of sustenance. The resources of the lower middle class are exhausted, owing to famine prices. Prompt liberal assistance and sympathy may mitigate the suffering. Particulars forwarded to the Times a fortnight ago." This telegram speaks for itself, and I can only add to it the concluding words of a leading article in to-day's Times:—"Let not the appeal now at length made to us fall unheeded. Our countrymen at Madras call upon the municipalities at home, and their cry must be heard. We have hitherto been too little concerned with the awful trial that has befallen our fellow-subjects; let us redeem the past by keeping it before our eyes and in our minds and hearts, until all that we can do is done, in order that it may be overcome." I shall be delighted to receive at the Mansion House, and to remit to the Duke of Buckingham and the other public authorities in India, any sums which the generous public may feel inclined to intrust to me; and I sincerely hope that the urgent appeal which I now make for funds will be promptly and liberally responded to.

A Parliamentary return recently issued shows that the total quantity of dead meat imported into the United Kingdom in the three months ended June 30, 1877, was 456,717 cwt., of the value of £1,122,062. Of the total quantity, 371,408 cwt. came from the United States, 7175 cwt. being preserved meat and 32,104 cwt. of preserved meat came from Australia.

THE WAR: B
FROM A SKETCH BY HERR CHARLES SZATHMÁRI, OF B

BATTLE OF PLEVNA.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The concluding sittings of what has been a very light Session indeed for the Upper House have been chiefly taken up in reading the Royal Assent to the various bills that have been passed. If in a multitude of measures there be wisdom, then must the present Parliament be accredited with profound sagacity. But, on the other hand, if it is to be admitted that all the legislative business of real importance is mentioned in her Majesty's Speech, the Government have not much reason to plume themselves for any extraordinary activity. Lord Beaconsfield's advent has not by any means added thus far to the oratorical brilliancy of debate in their Lordships' House, and a dull Session has ended with fitting dullness. Viewed from the calmer light of this exalted place, the alteration made in the Metropolitan Street Improvements Bill to meet the views of the Marquis of Salisbury's agent appeared scarcely so unreasonable as Mr. Fawcett made out. Nevertheless, the Commons' reasons for disagreeing with the Lords' clause bearing on this point were sanctioned yesterday week, after a few explanations from Lord Hardinge and the Marquis of Salisbury. Lord Derby assured Lord Colchester the same day that there was no truth in the rumours that the policy of England was to wait and to take part in the partition of Turkey. The Appropriation Bill was read the first time on Saturday; and, the standing orders having been suspended for the purpose, this bill and a few other measures were on Monday pushed through the remaining stages, and passed. Then came a complaint from Lord Stratheden and Campbell, who made himself the advocate of the kinsmen of the Chief of Palitana; but the Secretary for India had no difficulty in showing that the complainants had no real cause for complaint. The Marquis of Salisbury, replying to Lord Shaftesbury, explained what steps were being taken to introduce into India a Factory Act for limiting the hours of labour for children. Lord Truro followed with a grievance against the police for not preventing certain of his chickens from being stolen at Shooter's-hill, and queried whether a system under which such thefts could be committed with impunity was perfect. This poultry question elicited a smart answer from the Lord Chancellor, who thought it was scarcely right to stigmatise a whole neighbourhood because a few goslings, cocks, and hens had been stolen or had strayed from Lord Truro's property.

Tuesday was the last day. Black Rod, in the stately person of General Sir William Knollys, having summoned the Speaker and the members of the Lower House to the bar, rather less than a hundred members, Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord John Manners among them, hied to the Upper House, heard the Royal Assent given to the last batch of bills, and had the satisfaction of hearing the Lord Chancellor (whose fellow Royal Commissioners were the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Harrowby, and Lord Skelmersdale) read the Queen's Speech, which we quote in another column. Finally, the Lord Chancellor declared Parliament prorogued to Tuesday, Oct. 30 next.

COMMONS.

The languor which stole over the House after the longest and most tedious sitting on record was scarcely relieved in the expiring days of the Session by the "suspension" of Mr. Whalley. A last flicker of excitement may have been anticipated yesterday week from the promise held forth in the notices of Mr. Whalley and of Mr. Sullivan. But these hopes, if entertained, were nipped in the bud. With an air of injured innocence, and with a meekness of voice which seemed to plead, "See how mild and gentle a spirit you have broken!" Mr. Whalley read a short speech, in which he endeavoured to show that he had no intention whatever to contravene any rules of the House. As for Mr. Sullivan (under whose protecting wing Mr. Parnell and Mr. Biggar sat most complacently), he was as nearly natural as it is possible for him to be when he read a letter from Sir James Elphinstone withdrawing "the word 'ruffians,'" and expressing his regret that he "should have applied it to members of the House." This epistle was accepted by Mr. Sullivan as a "frank and gentlemanlike apology;" and, the Chancellor of the Exchequer having read a second letter of apology from the hon. and gallant member for Portsmouth, the matter was disposed of in the quietest manner. Dissatisfied with Sir Stafford Northcote's assurance early in the evening that he felt it his duty to decline to answer a question as to whether the occupation by Russian troops of Constantinople would "disturb the relations of amity between England and Russia," Mr. Monk repeated his interrogation, and protested that, as Prince Gortschakoff had assured Lord Derby that "the acquisition of Constantinople was excluded from the views of the Czar," the temporary occupation of the Turkish Capital by a Russian Army ought not to be made a cause of war between this country and Russia. Once again Sir Henry Wolff threw his protecting shield over the Ministry. He suggested that the Government should follow the example of Lord Palmerston, who always refused to answer hypothetical questions. Sir George Bowyer having relieved himself of a few platitudes, Mr. Forster, as representing the Opposition in the absence of the Marquis of Hartington, said he fully believed it was the intention of the Government to "abide by a policy of strict neutrality," and a direct reply to Mr. Monk's question was undesirable, as it might be construed as favouring one or other of the belligerent Powers. The Chancellor of the Exchequer then took up the theme, and said that the Government thought it would be for the true interests of the country to be as reticent as possible. We quote the most pithy passage of Sir Stafford Northcote's brief and discreet speech, which was identical in spirit to the equally short answer which Lord Beaconsfield gave in the House of Lords the previous evening:—

The policy of the Government was declared very clearly some time ago, and since the declaration was made the Government have not seen any reason to depart from the line of policy they then announced (Hear, hear). Lord Derby's despatch, to which reference has been made, was unusually full and detailed in its declarations. It was responded to in a spirit which leaves us no reason at all to complain of the tone of the Russian Government, and we have no reason whatever to doubt the propriety of the course we took in addressing that despatch, but I do feel it would be very injurious, and might prove exceedingly mischievous, if we were to go into details upon every hypothetical question that might be submitted (Cheers).

The gulf which now separates the two members who were once sworn allies in support of "Sir Roger" was again made plain by the opposite views of Dr. Kenealy and Mr. Whalley on the Eastern Question. The House got into Committee at last; and subsequently advanced various measures a stage or so.

On Saturday last, Sir William Harcourt deemed it incumbent upon him to make a second speech on the Huascar affair, in order to explain the meaning of what he had previously said. Making use of his last opportunity to pose as a temporary First Lord, as it were, the Attorney-General again launched out in a "Rule, Britannia," tone, and was greeted with Ministerial cheers when he emphatically declared, "The House must consider this insult to the British flag." Sir G. Bowyer and Sir C. Russell concurred with the Attorney-General in thinking the acts of the Huascar were piratical, and that Admiral De Horsey was consequently justified in what he did; but

Dr. Cameron was of opinion that the wisest course would be to wait till all the papers were published before coming to a decision on the question. Asked by Mr. Fawcett for a fresh exposition of the policy of the Government with regard to the Russo-Turkish War, Sir Stafford Northcote could only repeat that neutrality would be strictly observed, and reiterated the language used by him the night before in answer to Mr. Monk. The Appropriation Bill and several other measures were read the third time and passed; and, Mr. W. H. Smith having received the hearty congratulations of hon. members from both sides of the House on his re-election, consequent on his acceptance of the post of First Lord of the Admiralty, the right hon. gentleman took the oath and his seat; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer then moved the adjournment of the House to Tuesday.

Sir Stafford Northcote, replying to Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen on Tuesday, said that one of the purposes for which Colonel Wellesley returned to England was to report to the Government with regard to the atrocities alleged to have been committed by Russian troops. The report, which would be shortly published, would speak for itself. Dr. Lyon Playfair then wished to know whether the Government had received information of the painful accounts of Turkish atrocities reported in the Times and Daily News. To which Mr. Bourke (who must be glad, indeed, to escape from the purgatorial bench occupied by Ministers) made reply that the Government had only been furnished with a telegraphic report, which would be soon issued. A few other questions having been touched upon, Black Rod called the Speaker and hon. members to "another place" to hear the Queen's Speech read. Returning to the Lower House, the Speaker (who throughout a most trying Session has preserved a firm and courteous bearing beyond all praise) went through the concluding formality of reading the Address from the Throne, shook hands with the faithful few who remained; and hard-worked Ministers and hard-worked officers of the House broke up for the vacation, doubtless with some faint return of schoolboy ardour.

HER MAJESTY'S MESSAGE TO PARLIAMENT.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

I am happy to be able to release you from your attendance in Parliament. My relations with all foreign Powers continue to be friendly.

The exertions which, since the commencement of disturbances in Eastern Europe, I have not ceased to make for the maintenance of the general peace have, unfortunately, not been successful. On the outbreak of war between the Russian and the Ottoman Empires, I declared my intention of preserving an attitude of neutrality so long as the interests of this country remained unaffected. The extent and nature of those interests were further defined in a communication which I caused to be addressed to the Government of Russia, and which elicited a reply indicating friendly dispositions on the part of that State.

I shall not fail to use my best efforts, when a suitable opportunity occurs, for the restoration of peace on terms compatible with the honour of the belligerents and with the general safety and welfare of other nations.

If, in the course of the contest, the rights of my Empire should be assailed or endangered, I should confidently rely on your help to vindicate and maintain them.

The apprehensions of a serious famine in Southern India, which I communicated to you at the opening of the Session, have, I grieve to say, been fully verified. The visitation which has fallen upon my subjects in Madras and Bombay, and upon the people of Mysore, has been of extreme severity, and its duration is likely to be prolonged. No exertion will be wanting on the part of my Indian Government to mitigate this terrible calamity.

The Proclamation of my Sovereignty in the Transvaal has been received throughout the Province with enthusiasm. It has also been accepted with marked satisfaction by the native chiefs and tribes; and the war, which threatened in its progress to compromise the safety of my subjects in South Africa, is happily brought to a close.

I trust that the measure which has been passed, to enable the European communities of South Africa to unite upon such terms as may be agreed on, will be the means of preventing the recurrence of similar dangers, and will increase and consolidate the prosperity of this important part of my dominions.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

I thank you for the liberal supplies which you have voted for the public service.

I have issued a Royal Warrant to give effect to the provision which you have made for ensuring adequate promotion to the officers of my Army.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

The measures which have been passed relating to the prisons of the United Kingdom will secure economy and efficiency in their management, and, at the same time, effect a considerable reduction in local burdens.

The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, under the Act to which I have gladly given my assent, will obtain power to extend more generally the benefit of the higher education.

The Acts for reorganising the superior courts of justice in Ireland, and for reforming and conferring an extensive equitable jurisdiction on the county courts, will largely improve the administration of the law in that part of the United Kingdom.

I anticipate the best results from the Act which extends to the Sheriff Courts of Scotland jurisdiction in regard to heritable rights.

In bidding you farewell, I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may rest on your recent labours, and accompany you in the discharge of all your duties.

ELECTION NEWS.

The nomination for Westminster, consequent upon the acceptance by Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., of the office of First Lord of the Admiralty, took place on Saturday last. There being no opposition, Mr. Smith was re-elected, and in the course of the afternoon he entered the House of Commons and took the oath and his seat. Subsequently Mr. Smith addressed a meeting at the Westminster Palace Hotel. At a Council held by her Majesty at Osborne on Monday Mr. Smith was sworn in as a Privy Councillor on his appointment as First Lord of the Admiralty. Later in the day Mr. Smith attended a meeting of the Cabinet in London. The Hon. Frederick Arthur Stanley, M.P., Financial Secretary to the War Department, succeeds Mr. Smith as Financial Secretary to the Treasury. As the office is not technically under the Crown, Mr. Stanley's appointment does not vacate his seat for North Lancashire.

Sir Baldwin Leighton, Bart., was elected in the Conservative interest for South Shropshire without opposition on the 9th inst.

The election for North Northamptonshire on Monday resulted in the return of Lord Burghley, the Conservative candidate, by a large majority over his Liberal opponent, Captain Wyatt-Edgell; the numbers being—Burghley 2261 and Edgell 1475.

Sir Bryan O'Loughlin was returned for the county of Clare on Monday, the following being the official declaration of the votes polled:—Sir Bryan O'Loughlin (Liberal Home Ruler), 1721; The O'Gorman Mahon (described as a Nationalist), 1149; and Mr. Reeves (Conservative), 764.

It was officially stated, on Wednesday, that, out of 281 public bills in the Commons, only sixty-nine received the Royal Assent. There were 242 local statutes passed, and ten private. In the Session of 1876 the number of public bills was eighty-one, and of local statutes 234.

The Extra Supplement.

"THE DESCENT FROM THE CROSS."

Our Engraving of this celebrated picture, the masterpiece of the great Flemish painter, which is to be seen in the south transept of Antwerp Cathedral, should attract particular attention at the present moment, among those who feel any interest in the Tercentenary Rubens Festival at Antwerp, opened on Friday (yesterday), to continue through next week. The programme of this Flemish Art-Congress, and celebration of one of the chief historic and artistic glories of the nation, seems most comprehensive. There is a series of lectures and literary conferences, and in the evening (to-day) will be sung, by 1000 performers, before the statue of Rubens in the Place Verte, an original cantata composed by Paul Benoit. This will be followed by salvoes of artillery, the ringing of the chimes throughout the city, and a procession with flambeaux. To-morrow morning (Sunday) will begin with salvoes of artillery and bell-ringing, and the town clubs will parade with banners and music. A competition in chorus singing will be held by forty-seven societies—Belgian, French, German, and Dutch—and the exhibition of paintings and works of art organised by the Société Royale pour l'Encouragement des Beaux Arts will be opened. On the same day the exhibition of engravings after Rubens and objects belonging to him, organised by the Académie d'Archéologie de Belgique, will be opened gratuitously. An agricultural show, a fruit show, and a flower show are to be held simultaneously. The Museum, the finest picture-gallery in Belgium, containing 600 pictures, most of them collected from the suppressed monasteries and churches of Antwerp, will be opened gratuitously throughout the fêtes. At one o'clock an Art-Congress will begin. There will be an assault of arms, a banquet, several concerts, and an illumination. On Monday night there will be a historical procession marching with torches through the streets. On Tuesday the prize will be given to the successful writer of an essay on the Antwerp school of painting. Horse-races, a cattle show, boat-races, pigeon-flying, a popular ball, a balloon ascent, and many special dramatic representations in Flemish, the language of the people, are to interest the lower class in the festival.

Siegen, in Germany, which also claims the honour of being Rubens's birthplace, celebrated the three-hundredth anniversary of his birth in June last.

ART-UNION PRIZES.

The exhibition of the pictures selected by the prizeholders of 1877 in the Art-Union of London, being the forty-first annual one, was opened on Tuesday in the gallery of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, Pall-mall.

Seven galleries have contributed to this exhibition—namely, those of the Royal Academy, the Society of British Artists, the Society of Painters in Water Colours, the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, the General Exhibition of Water Colours, the Crystal Palace Picture Gallery, and the Gallery of the Royal Scottish Academy.

There are two prizes of £200, three of £150, and five of £100, the lowest amount for pictures being £10. The total number of prizes in pictures is 191, and, in addition to these, there is a large number of extra prizes.

The first £200 prize in the catalogue has been selected by Mr. J. Carr from the Royal Academy. It is the well-known picture by John Charlton, entitled "Rescue," in which a number of terror-stricken horses are saved from threatened burning. The second prize of that amount, selected by Mr. John Lay from the same gallery, is "The Way through the Wood," by G. Wells. It is a very pretty sylvan scene.

Of the three £150 prizes, one, selected by Mr. J. Rosseter from the Gallery of British Artists, is "Returning from Market," by Mr. E. J. Cobbett; another, selected by Mr. A. Lillywhite, jun., from the Crystal Palace Picture Gallery, is the "Arrest of Poachers," by C. M. Webb; and the third, selected by Mr. T. H. Hayes from the Royal Academy, is "Oranges," by Mr. Arthur Hill, a very pretty picture of a girl selling the fruit.

The £100 prizes comprise "The High Hall Garden," selected by Mr. T. Hollis from the Royal Academy, the artist being Ernest Parton; "Music hath Charms," selected by Mr. W. Bentley from the Royal Academy, the artist being R. J. Gordon; "Harvest Time near Dolgelly, North Wales," by A. W. Williams, selected by Mr. J. L. White from the Gallery of the Society of British Artists; "The Mother's Sacrifice" is the work of A. Ludwig, selected by Mrs. E. Reed from the Crystal Palace Gallery; and "The Plough," selected by Mr. W. H. Ross from the Gallery of the Water-Colour Society, the artist being Mr. A. Hopkins.

There is a £75 prize, consisting of a picture by R. Kemm, called "Returning from Market, Granada," selected by Mr. S. Harris from the Gallery of the Society of British Artists; and another of £75 from the same source by Walter H. Foster, consisting of a view picture in the River Mole, the selector being Mr. R. Geer.

Every subscriber for next year will receive, besides a chance of a prize at the annual distribution in April, an impression of the plate, "The Return of the Life-Boat," engraved in line by Mr. A. Willmore, from the original by Mr. E. Duncan, and the painting will be one of the chief prizes.

A gathering of the Good Templars of Cumberland, Westmorland, and neighbouring districts was held on Wednesday in the County Hall, Carlisle, when the Grand Lodge of England held a special session, under the presidency of Mr. Joseph Malins.

The anniversary of the opening of the gates of Derry took place on Monday, when the Apprentice Boys' Memorial Hall was opened. A procession was formed, in which were twenty-five bands and a profuse display of flags and banners. Mr. W. Johnston, M.P., was present. Some rioting took place, and one man was stabbed.

Mr. Richard, M.P., addressing an assembly of the Congregational Union of North and South Wales at Portmadoc yesterday week, pointed to the voluntary efforts made in Wales for the maintenance of religious worship and instruction as a proof that when Disestablishment, which, he said, was rapidly approaching, was effected religion would neither decay nor perish in the land.

It appears from a Parliamentary return issued on Tuesday that the total amount of the National Debt on April 1, 1877, was £775,873,713. At the same date in 1858 it amounted to £839,519,326. Not taking into account the amount of debt created for special purposes (the purchase of the telegraphs, fortifications, and Army localisation), the decrease amounts to £95,634,321. The return also shows that the total amount of taxation imposed since 1857-8 has been £11,674,136, and the amount remitted £49,739,609.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

The Session is at an end; and it is not only members of Parliament who rejoice that the Houses have been prorogued, and that the "silly season" is about to commence. The reporters are glad; delight is the portion of the leading-article writers in the daily papers, who, while Parliament is sitting, do not very often get the subjects for their leaders until midnight, or even one in the morning; a sensation of relief comes over club porters and smoking-room waiters; for until the House is "up" no great West-End club closes its doors, however late, or rather early, the hour may be. In fact, all but universal contentment reigns now that the Session of 1877 has passed away, "like a brief dream of unremembered glory."

Why should the Serjeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons shoulder a large silver-gilt mace (as Captain Gossett did last Tuesday) when he escorts the Right Honourable the Speaker in solemn procession from the Commons to the Lords? What is the signification of a Serjeant-at-Arms; and, in fine, what does the Mace itself (which Cromwell irreverently called "a bauble") symbolise? You may esteem these to be extremely trivial questions; but, to my mind, everything has a definite meaning, and we are bound to find out that meaning if we can. General Servan, in his "Histoire des Guerres des Gaulois et des Français en Italie" (Paris, 1805), remarks that, in the year 1199, the horrible system of assassination organised by the Old Man of the Mountain (the first employer of special correspondents who travelled to all parts of the earth, writing in the "slashing" style) furnished Philip Augustus with a pretext for surrounding his person with a company of guards armed with heavy brazen maces, who left him neither by day nor by night, and kept all strangers from him. "Such was the origin," writes General Servan, "of Sergeants-at-Arms." The institution spread all over Europe; our municipal corporations as well as Parliament have, at present, their maces and mace-bearers; and Mr. Bumble the Beadle's silver-knobbed staff, even, may be considered as a very remote emblem of the anxiety of the parochial authorities to protect themselves from the "Special Correspondents" of the Old Man of the Mountain.

An amiable contemporary observes:—"That seems to be a good stout serviceable story about the fez-wearing, ferocious Pasha, who turned out to be an Irishman. It was told by one contemporary in June, by another in July, and last week it turned up in the 'Echoes' of G. A. S. Only G. A. S., with great ability, made the Pasha a Scotchman, which of course entirely altered the matter."

I may meekly observe that my version of the anecdote in which there is a Turkish Pasha plus a Russian Admiral, who both turn out to be Scotchmen, was made in blissful ignorance of what one contemporary had written in June or another in July. I told the story as it was told to me just five-and-thirty years ago. The same amiable (and well informed) contemporary, in a paragraph about Cleopatra's needle, quotes the proverb of "First catch your hare." How many more times is it necessary to remark that there is no such proverb; that Mrs. Glasse's reference to the hare in her Cookery-Book is as to "casing" and not "catching" the animal; and that the "first catch your hare" blunder probably originated in a misreading of the old Greek saw, "Play the bear before you sell his skin"?

I have heard the Eastern Question "settled" (to the settler's own satisfaction, but scarcely to that of anyone else) half a hundred times this season at as many dinner-tables and club discussions of the "tabakcollegium" order. But hitherto I have not met with such a summary and "thorough" solution of the vexed problem as that propounded in Tasso's "Gerusalemme Liberata," Canto I., stanza v. Here it is, in Fairfax's rugged but sonorous translation:—

For if the Christian Princes ever strive
To win fair Greece out of the Tyrant's hands;
And those usurping Ishmaelites deprive
Of woful Thrace which now captive stands,
You must from ruinous and seas the Turk forth drive,
As Godfrey chased them from Judaea's lands;
And in this Legend all that glorious deed;
Read whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read.

In all this I humbly say "Ditto to Mr. Burke"—I mean to Signor Torquato Tasso. On the other hand, my old friend Capt. Charles O'Malley (late of the Irish Dragoons) is burning to take service with the Osmanlis against the Moscovs; my next door neighbour Dugald Dalgetty, Esq. (late in the service of King Gustavus Adolphus), is going out to Asia Minor as paymaster, unattached, on the staff of Ioweyou Pasha; and my washerwoman (a staunch pro-Turk) accuses me of "un-English" feelings and "factious" tendencies because I do not believe one tithe of the tales circulated through the Turkish Foreign Office about Russian "atrocities."

Lieutenant-Colonel Wellesley, military attaché to her Majesty's Embassy at St. Petersburg, has come home on leave; and the Government is probably by this time fully aware of how much truth (or the contrary) there is in these "atrocities" tales. Colonel Wellesley is, next to Sir Garnet Wolseley (whom I remember when he was a Colonel on the staff in Canada, in 1863), the sharpest, shrewdest, and cleverest professional soldier with whom I ever had the honour to converse. I mean that you could learn more from him in half an hour than you could learn from the majority of military gentlemen in half a week. My opinion, I daresay, does not go for much. Still, I happen to be close upon half a century old; to have been during more than half that time in the habit of talking with distinguished people all over the world; and if I do not know now a clever man from a dunce when I meet him the sooner I retire to Earlswode, perhaps, the better. Unless I am very much mistaken, Colonel Wellesley (who is a first-rate Russian scholar—and I have scarcely ever yet met with a systematic detractor of Russia who could speak six words of Slavonic) will tell the great people at the Treasury and the Foreign Office a great many "things of Muscovy" worth knowing.

An estimable American Bishop wrote very properly to the papers this week to complain of the desecration by unmanly holiday-makers of the tomb of "John Locke," in the disused burial-ground of Bunhill Fields. But another correspondent writes to say that the John Locke interred in the old cemetery at Finsbury was not the famous author of the "Essay concerning Human Understanding." The ashes of that illustrious man repose in the quiet little churchyard of High Laver, in Essex, near to the site of the now demolished house in which he passed the last fourteen years of his life. Finally, Sir Charles Reed has pointed out that the "John Locke" in Bunhill-fields was committed to earth (as the inscription on his tombstone shows) a hundred and thirty years after the death of the philosopher. This, to my thinking, does not much affect the real merits of the case. The remains of the obscure John Locke are entitled to as much respect as those of his namesake, who wrote about Human Understanding; and perhaps the obscure John could himself have written such an essay, had he tried. The attempt, perhaps, would not have been quite so magnificent an intellectual performance as that of his predecessor.

A Commission, composed of a Colonel in the Coldstream Guards, a member of Parliament distinguished by his temperance proclivities, and two Q.C.s, has been appointed by Mr. Secretary Cross to enter immediately upon an inquiry into the management, discipline, and efficiency of the detective force of the metropolitan police. It was time. It is to be hoped that the members of the Commission will travel somewhat out of the system usually pursued in these official inquiries, and that, in addition to examining assistant commissioners, superintendents, and inspectors of police, and other official persons, whose main object it naturally is to "make things comfortable" for themselves and their superiors, they will have the common sense to take a good scantling of what I may call "outside" evidence. Let them ascertain what railway managers, large employers of labour in factories and workshops, pawnbrokers, solicitors' clerks in the habit of attending police courts, and, in particular, licensed victuallers, have to say about the detective police. I have known a good many English detectives in my time; and, with few exceptions, I have found them to be persons of a very low, mean, and common intelligence, liable to be baffled, hoodwinked, and made the tools of the first clever rascals who came across them. THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

For the second time since its establishment, in 1820, the British Association for the Advancement of Science has met in Plymouth, beginning its sittings on Wednesday afternoon. The general committee met in the Assembly Rooms at one o'clock. On the platform, among others, were Professor Allen Thomson, the President-Elect; the Earl of Mount-Edgumbe, Lord Houghton, Professor Sir William Thomson, D.C.L., Mr. Bramwell, Dr. Farr, Professor Newton, Professor Rolleston, Professor G. C. Foster, Mr. F. A. Abel, Major Wilson, Mr. H. S. Ellis, Captain Galton, and Mr. Heywood. There was a considerable attendance of members. Professor William Thomson, on taking the chair, expressed his regret that Dr. T. Andrews, of Belfast, the President of the Association, was unable to be present, owing to the state of his health. Mr. Griffith, the secretary, read the minutes of the last meeting at Glasgow, which were confirmed. The report of the council, the recommendations of the committee of council, the treasurer's financial statement, and the list of sectional officers, were approved, which concluded the business.

In the evening there was a large and brilliant assemblage in the Guildhall to hear the President deliver the opening address. The platform was filled with members of the general committee. In the area every seat was numbered, and the doors being thrown open nearly an hour before the commencement of the proceedings, everything like pressure or inconvenience was avoided. Tickets for 2400 reserved seats were issued. Many ladies were present. The Mayor of Plymouth presided, having on his right and left Earl Fortescue, Lord Mount-Edgumbe, Lord Houghton, Sir Thomas Acland, M.P., Sir William Thomson, Mr. Spottiswoode, Dr. Farr, and others. The Mayor having introduced the President, Professor Allen Thomson, amid much cheering, proceeded to read his address.

After congratulating the members on coming again to "that beautiful and interesting locality," after the long interval of six-and-thirty years, the learned President announced as the subject of his discourse the "Development of the Forms of Animal Life," with which, he observed, his own studies had been largely occupied, and which had important bearings on the questions now agitating the scientific world. Having noticed the enormous change produced in scientific thought by the doctrine of natural selection brought forward simultaneously by Wallace and Darwin in 1858, the Professor said:—"If it were warrantable to attribute so great a change of opinion as that to which I have adverted as occurring in my own time to the influence of any single intellect, it must be admitted that it is justly due to the vast range and accuracy of his knowledge of scientific facts, the quick appreciation of their mutual inter-dependence, and, above all, the unexampled clearness and candour in the statement of Charles Darwin. But while we readily acknowledge the large share which Darwin has had in guiding scientific thought into the newer track of biological doctrine, we shall also be disposed to allow that the slow and difficult process of emancipation from the thralldom of dogmatic opinion in regard to a system of creation, and the adoption of large and independent views more consistent with observation, reason, philosophy, and religion has only been possible under the effect of the general progress of scientific knowledge and the acquisition of sounder methods of applying its principles to the explanation of natural phenomena. I have already referred to Goethe, Oken, Lamarck, and Geoffroy St. Hilaire as among the most prominent of the earlier pioneers in the modern or reformed conceptions of biological laws. But, were it desirable to mark the progress of opinion by quoting other authors and labourers whose contributions have mainly supplied the materials out of which the new fabric has been constructed, I should have to produce a long catalogue of distinguished names, among which would be found those of Lyell and Owen as earliest shaping the doctrines and guiding opinion in this country; Johannes Müller and Von Baer, as taking the places of Haller and Cuvier on the Continent; and a host of other faithful workers in biology belonging to the earlier part of this century, such as those of G. Trediranus, J. F. Mackel, Carus, and many more. To Huxley, more especially, and Herbert Spencer the greatest influence on British thought in the same direction is to be ascribed."

With regard to the origin of life, the President adopted the view that "it had been experimentally demonstrated that no development of organisms, even of the most simple kind, has been satisfactorily observed to occur in circumstances which entirely excluded the possibility of their being descended from germs, or equivalent formative particles, belonging to pre-existing bodies of a similar kind. The reflection forces itself upon us that we are just as ignorant of the mode of first origin of all the compounds of the inorganic elements as we are of that of living matter; and we may therefore be excused if we suspend all theory and conjecture until we shall be guided to more reliable hypotheses through the plain track of observation and experiment."

"But the practical applications of the increased knowledge of the origin of minute animal and vegetable organisms are very numerous. It is now proved beyond doubt that the origin of putrefaction and fermentation is dependent on the presence in the substances which are the seat of change in these processes, or in the surrounding air, of the germs of minute organisms of an animal or vegetable nature, and that the maintenance of the chemical changes in which these processes mainly consist is coincident with and causally (if not essentially) dependent upon the growth and multiplication of these organisms. Professor Lister had the merit of being the first to apply the germ theory of putrefaction to explain the formation of putrid matters in the living body, and he has founded on this theory the now well-known antiseptic treatment of wounds, the importance of which it would be difficult to over-estimate. The success or failure of plans for the preservation of meat and other articles of food without question depends on the possibility of the complete exclusion of the germs which are the cause of putrefaction and fermentation; and their management must, therefore, be founded on the most accurate knowledge of these organisms, and the circumstances influencing the persistence of their vitality and the vigour of their growth. The theory of Biogenesis has also lately been the guide in the investigation of the causes of various forms of disease, both in the lower animals and in man, with the result of showing that in many of them the infective substance consists, in all probability, of germs of minute animal or vegetable organisms. There is very great probability, indeed, that all the zymotic diseases (by which we understand the various forms of fevers) have a similar origin. As has been well remarked by Baxter in an able paper on 'The Action of Disinfectants,' the analogies of action of contagia are similar to those of septic organisms, not to processes simply of oxidation or deoxidation. These organisms, studied in suitable fluids, multiply indefinitely when introduced in all but infinitesimal proportions. Thus they are, as near as we can perceive, the very essence of contagia."

The remainder of the President's address was occupied with an examination of the fundamental principles of embryology, tracing the gradual development of plants and animals from the germ or ovum. It was shown that the mode of this development is the same, varied only by increasing complexity of structure and subdivision of parts, as we advance from lower to higher organisms. The results to which the examination of the subject led the Professor were thus summed up in the conclusion of the address:—

"The formative or organising property resides in the living substance of every organised cell and in each of its component molecules, and is a necessary part of the physical and chemical constitution of the organising elements in the conditions of life; and it scarcely needs to be said that these conditions may be as varied as the countless numbers of the molecules which compose the smallest particles of their substance. But, setting aside all speculation of a merely pangenetic kind, it appears to me that no one could have engaged in the study of embryological development for any time without becoming convinced that the phenomena which have been ascertained as the first origin and formation of textures and organs in any individual animal are of so uniform a character as to indicate forcibly a law of connection and continuity between them; nor will his study of the phenomena of development in different animals have gone so far before he is equally strongly convinced of the similarity of plan in the development of the larger groups, and, to some extent, of the whole. I consider it impossible, therefore, for any one to be a faithful student of embryology, in the present state of science, without at the same time becoming an evolutionist. There may still be many difficulties, some inconsistencies, and much to learn, and there may remain beyond much which we shall never know; but I cannot conceive any doctrine professing to bring the phenomena of embryonic development within a general law which is not, like the theory of Darwin, consistent with their fundamental identity, their endless variability, their subjugation to varying external influences and conditions, and with the possibility of the transmission of the vital conditions and properties, with all their variations, from individual to individual, and, in the long lapse of ages, from race to race. I regard it, therefore, as no exaggerated representation of the present state of our knowledge to say that the development of the individual in the higher animals repeats in its more general character, and in many of its specific phenomena, the development of the race. If we admit the progressive nature of the changes of development, their similarity in different groups, and their common characters in all animals—nay, even in some respects in both plants and animals, we can scarcely refuse to recognise the possibility of continuous derivation in the history of their origin; and however far we may be, by reason of the imperfection of our knowledge, from realising the precise nature of the chain of connection by which the actual descent has taken place, still there can be little doubt remaining in the minds of any unprejudiced student of embryology that it is only by the employment of such an hypothesis as that of evolution that further investigation in these several departments will be promoted, so as to bring us to a fuller comprehension of the most general law which regulates the adaptation of structure to function in the universe."

The Address was listened to throughout with great interest and was received with loud cheering; and at its conclusion a cordial vote of thanks was accorded to the learned Professor for his address, on the motion of the Earl of Mount-Edgumbe, seconded by Dr. Henry Ackland.

The different sections met on Thursday morning.

The drinking-fountain presented by the Queen to the village of Esher was opened by the Rector, the Rev. Samuel Warren, on Monday evening, in the presence of a large number of the residents of the parish.

An old woman named Jane Watson, a hawker, of Harefield, was taken to Hendon Union Workhouse on Tuesday, having been found by the Pinner police wandering about in an unsound state of mind. On being searched by the authorities of the union an old worsted bag was found in her possession containing £280 in sovereigns, and a Post Office Savings Bank book, showing deposits to the amount of £55 12s. 6d..

St. Patrick's new Roman Catholic church at Belfast, which is erected on the site of the old edifice in Donegal-street, was last Sunday consecrated by the Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland. Nearly all the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church of Ireland, and some from England, took part in the service, which was attended by a very large assemblage. The collection amounted to £2500. At Pontifical vespers in the afternoon a large sum was also realised.

On the railway carriage containing the Cape mails arriving at Bristol from Plymouth, last Wednesday morning, the Post-Office officials discovered at the bottom of the carriage a live Colorado beetle. The same mail carriage was used on Monday for the conveyance of the American mails, and it is supposed that the insect came from America in those mails, and dropped out in the carriage. It was at once forwarded to the Government. An order in Council on the subject of the Colorado beetle has been published in a supplement to the London Gazette.

An inquest was held last Monday, at Lavenden, near Bedford, on the body of a child named Arthur Carter, aged two years and nine months, who died of hydrophobia, having been bitten by a mad dog on July 7. A verdict in accordance with the evidence was returned.—On the same day a mad dog entered the St. John's Moulsham Church Schools, Chelmsford, and attacked the scholars, biting three boys and a girl. Surgical aid was promptly called in. After a long chase, the dog was caught and killed. It had been fighting with several other dogs, some of which were afterwards destroyed.

THE GORILLA AT THE AQUARIUM.

The Royal Aquarium at Westminster has gained a valuable addition to its various objects of popular interest by the arrival of "Pongo," the only living specimen of the Gorilla, or Manlike Ape, that has yet been exhibited in Europe. We have repeatedly spoken of this curious animal, which was brought last year from Nubia to Berlin, while but half grown, and was there inspected and described by many scientific zoologists. Pongo is accompanied by his "cousin," a very lively chimpanzee, named Tschego, and by his faithful dog, which is called Flock; but he came to London in charge of Dr. Hermes, Director of the Berlin Aquarium, from which Pongo has been borrowed for the season, and with whom are Herr Rudolf Schöbel and Herr Feebeck, forming a complete personal staff in attendance on the illustrious stranger. Our Engraving may be trusted as a good likeness of the Only Gorilla in the civilised world; but we can scarcely imagine what those Gorillas are like which M. Paul Duhaillu and other travellers have seen in the African forests. Pongo is a gentle creature, though ugly in proportion to the queer resemblance between his bodily shape and features and those of mankind. He has as many clever and amusing tricks as any other educated monkey: drinking wine and water out of a glass, and then politely handing it to his cousin, is a performance that may not be approved by the professors of teetotalism, but that is far more of a human than of a bestial character. We are not prepared, however, to claim for Pongo, from the proofs of intelligence yet shown by him, a superior degree of mental capacity to that which the Quadrumana in general seem to attain under the tuition of man. He presents, indeed, a droll caricature of the manners of our race, and he well deserves a visit among the sights of London in these days. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their son Prince George, and their nephew Prince William of Prussia, went to see the Gorilla a fortnight ago.

THE BOMBARDMENT OF KARS.

One of the sketches by Mr. J. Bell, our Special Artist with the Turkish army in Asia, which is engraved for this week's publication, represents the scene he viewed on the 7th ult. from the Tchakmak Tabia, in company with several gentlemen, Captain Trotter, R.E., Captain M'Calmont, 7th Hussars, and Baron Schluga, of the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna, watching the Russian bombardment of Kars. Captain Trotter is standing, with a field-glass in his hand, listening to the Turkish officer, Colonel Hussein Bey, Commandant of Artillery, who is pointing out to him and explaining the Russian ways of attack. The other Turkish officer, seated on a chest, at the right-hand side of the Engraving, is Colonel Achmet Bey, Commandant of the Tchakmak Tabia. Our Artist represents himself lying on the ground, and "taking it easy." The following is an extract from his letter of the 9th ult., relating his arrival at Kars, on the evening before, in company with the two English officers above named, who are attached to Sir Arnold Kemball, British Military Commissioner, and with the correspondent of the Vienna newspaper:—

"We left Mouktar Pasha's camp, some fifteen miles off, in charge of a cavalry officer who had come out with despatches, and was returning. With the exception of a scare our servants received, at the sight of some Bashi-Bazouks suddenly appearing on the top of a hill, there was nothing very romantic about our journey. Ten miles off, we could see by the frequent bursting of shells about the Kara-Dagh, that the Russians were bombarding this place very heavily; and on nearer approach it seemed to increase, some shells falling in the town. It must have been a cheerless day for the Turks who were behind the parapets, for the rain was coming down in torrents. The Russian fire was heaviest in the mornings, commencing about five o'clock, and again in the afternoons. We appear to have arrived at the right time in the day for forming some idea of the zeal the Russians manifested in their fruitless efforts to knock the place to pieces. On the 7th the Russians commenced firing about half-past four in the morning, making it especially warm for the Kara-Dagh, the Kara-Patlak, and the Moukhlis Pasha Tabias, which directly faced their advanced batteries. Hussein Pasha, commander-in-chief of Kars, having sent Colonel Hussein Bey, commandant of the artillery, to show us round the various forts, we left for Tchimb Tabia about ten o'clock, in company with that gallant officer, who has been the life and soul of the defence of Kars. In Tchimb, Veli Pasha, Tchakmak, Tahmasp, and other Tabias facing west all was quiet, and from the Tchakmak Tabia we had an excellent view of the bombardment (see sketch) as it was then going on. Colonel Hussein Bey proved himself a most able and willing informant, his fluent English bearing ample testimony to the value of the seven years he spent at Woolwich. It was all very well in the Tchakmak, undisturbed by the near approach of those pretty-looking puffs of smoke which indicated the bursting of Russian shells at a safe distance. But it was quite another thing in Moukhlis Pasha Tabia, especially when, at the request of one of our party who was desirous of "seeing some fun," Colonel Hussein Bey directed the gunners to return the Russian fire, it being slack time with the Turks (twelve o'clock at noon). Our friends the Russians, some 5000 yards distant, lost no time in increasing the already unpleasant number of percussion shells they were sending in, spotting the interior of the battery pretty freely, so that we could not have moved half-a-dozen yards without coming on a big hole, or some piece of rock from which a thousand pieces had started with telling effect. I must confess my first experience of a Russian shell made me think a little more seriously of it. I saw the shell strike the rocky ground fifty yards off, and, being conscious that a piece about the size of my fist was whizzing along straight in my direction, instinctively I kissed my mother earth, and had the supreme satisfaction of hearing it bury itself with a solid thud in the parapet, the soldiers spreading out like a fan to make room for it."

"The Russians first appeared in the neighbourhood of Kars on April 28. Between that and May 4 they succeeded in constructing a battery on the north side of Kars river. As its fire proved annoying, the Turks made a successful sortie on that day, not capturing the guns, but completely destroying the battery. The next batteries were constructed on the south side of the river, and first opened fire at 12,000 yards, which was subsequently reduced to 5000 yards, this being the nearest approach made by the invaders. As soon as the first 5000-yards battery was completed, the Turks pushed forward a counter-battery of three guns, with one mortar, which they placed midway between the forts and the Russian works. This battery had the honour to incur the particular dislike of the Russians, which was manifested in a desperate attempt to capture it; in point of fact, the counter-battery was once taken, but the Russians had only time to remove the breech-pieces of two of its guns before the Turks retook it. Although there cannot be said to have been a regular siege, in the sense of an investment, the city was isolated for nearly three weeks, during which time the Turks made fifteen sorties, on a larger or smaller scale. The bombardment proper lasted twenty-three days, ending on July 7. During these twenty-three days the Turks fired at the Russians 17,458 projectiles, ranging from 13-in. mortar bombs and 15-centimetre rifle shells to the projectiles of the 6-centimetre and 9-centimetre field-guns. The Russians are estimated, by a comparison of returns kept at the seven different forts, to have hurled against the city and its defences 40,000 shells and bombs. The result, as regards the forts and works, was almost nil; and the total butcher's bill of the Turks, sorties included, was 120 killed and 280 wounded. The Turks had 350 pieces of position mounted in Kars, with eighty in their field-batteries. They had 102 rifled guns. Of their whole artillery in position, from first to last, some eighty guns were brought to bear on the enemy—not, of course, simultaneously. Besides these, three field batteries were used in the sorties. The Russians had twenty-three siege guns in position, the largest being Krupps of 16½ centimetres calibre, or as nearly as possible 6½ in.; and they had ten batteries of field guns, eight in a battery, throwing shot of six and nine pounds.

"There is some dissatisfaction expressed by the Turkish officers at the inactivity of General of Division Hussein Hani Pasha, who is alleged to have neglected the instructions given to him by Field Marshal Ahmed Moukhtar Pasha. But all are agreed that the life and soul of the defence was Hussein Bey, commanding the artillery with the rank of Colonel, who is likely to be immediately made a General and Pasha in recognition of his distinguished services. The greater part of the works were laid out, and the whole of the guns were mounted, under the direction of this most capable officer, of whom Woolwich has every reason to be proud, since he spent the seven years from 1846 to 1852 at our great artillery centre, which he remembers with affection, and his connection with which he regards with pride.

"Many shells exploded in the town, but comparatively few of the inhabitants ceased their business or were injured in consequence. One unfortunate exception was the destruction of a young mother with two infant children, who were innocently playing about her lap as she sat on her doorstep. Many fragments of shells lie about the steep, rugged, and dirty streets, but they appear to have been brought there by hand, as traces of destructive explosion. Some of the townspeople who endeavoured to take the leaden casing off unexploded Russian shells suffered in consequence.

"Nearly 60 per cent of the wounds received by Turkish soldiers in the batteries have been from pieces of rock started by the bursting of a shell; and a piece of rock does make the most frightful and jagged wound it is possible to conceive. Go where you will about Kars, even in the streets, you or your horse will every now and then stumble over some of those rocks which give the place a very hard, uninviting look from the outside. These were a source of greater danger to the men in the batteries than the enemy's shells ever were.

"The morning of the 8th opened without a shot from the Russian batteries, and it was only after sending a few shells from the Kara-Dagh that we received a sullen reply or two. Throughout the day the same state of inactivity was shown on both sides—the Turks reserving and limiting their fire on principle. About midday the enemy could be plainly seen breaking up his camp in the distance, and preparing to move. In the night he took all his guns out of his batteries, sending some of the largest on to Gumri. His camp is now about two miles behind his old position, and our outposts have occupied the ground covered by his old batteries.

"The Russians expended considerable engineering skill and care in the construction of their batteries, making solid earthen traverses in each, and bringing up large pieces of timber for their powder magazines, which were circular in form, and had a dome-like covering of from 8 ft. to 10 ft. of solid earth. Notwithstanding this, several of their magazines were sprung by the Turkish shells."

Another of our Special Artists, Mr. Irving Montague, has also reached Kars with the army of Moukhtar Pasha; and we have received from him a number of sketches relating to the relief of that city on the 8th ult. One of them, which appears in a separate page, shows the Turkish artillery, under Mustapha Pasha, crossing the river of Kars, called the Kars-tchai. This was effected, as will be seen, by means of a bridge formed of a number of bullock-waggons placed in a line across the bed of the stream, which is not very deep. Mr. Bell's sketches of Moukhtar Pasha and his officers holding a council of war at Kirkbunar, fifteen miles from Kars, and reconnoitring the enemy's positions before that city, with several other incidents of the campaign in Armenia, belong to the same chapter in the history of the present war.

AID TO THE SICK AND WOUNDED IN THE WAR.

A deputation of members of the National Aid Society waited upon the council of the society last Tuesday, at 3, Craven-street, Strand, when a memorial was read on the subject of an equal distribution of relief to the sick and wounded on both sides in the present war. The chairman, Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, said that a formal reply would be made to the deputation, and stated that it had been decided, on the motion of Lord Shaftesbury and Sir Harry Verney, to offer relief to the Montenegrins, and that an officer would be at once dispatched to Montenegro for the purpose of obtaining information.

Colonel Loyd-Lindsay is in receipt of reports from the agents of this society showing that they are actively employed on the battle-fields, both of Europe and Asia, relieving the sick and wounded. The following telegram has been received from Mr. J. S. Young, at Pera, dated Aug. 7:—"I reached Constantinople, and landed wounded from Soukhoun Kaleh. Leslie and Meyrick working day and night, attending hundreds of wounded. Our ambulance the only one at the front, but able to attend to only one-eighth of the wounded, which numbered 1000 in the battle of July 31 alone, and more coming in daily. I leave for that side at once. Send out more qualified surgeons. Crookshank reports he attended 300 wounded at Rasgrad railway station. Supplied comforts. Ambulance-waggon did good service."

An appeal has been made in the Daily Telegraph by Baroness Burdett-Coutts, on behalf of the Turkish Compassionate Fund for women and children. Towards this fund her Ladyship has subscribed £1000; Sir Moses Montefiore, £100; Mrs. Brown, of Stratton-street, £50; and Lord Dorchester, £10. Several other sums have been received. The Baroness proposes to transmit these amounts, through Messrs. Coutts and Co., to the British Ambassador at Constantinople. The Ottoman Ambassador called upon Baroness Burdett-Coutts last Wednesday to express his thanks for her generous action in originating the Turkish Compassionate Fund, and his sense of the sympathy thus shown by her Ladyship and by the subscribers to the fund towards the victims of the war and the Turkish nation. Lady Burdett-Coutts writes:—"I am informed of many more kind contributions, and the fund is taking excellent shape." Messrs. Coutts and Co., have subscribed £500; Colonel Beresford, M.P., £20; Mr. J. Buckle, £50, and numerous others have sent smaller amounts.

The London Committee of Deputies of the British Jews and the Anglo-Jewish Association have decided to send immediate relief to the numerous distressed Hebrew families at the seat of war, and contributions will be forwarded to the committee which has been formed at Adrianople, under the supervision of the British Vice-Consul, Mr. Blunt.

Organised efforts are being made to assist the fugitives at Adrianople, and the Imperial Ottoman Bank is now receiving and forwarding to the committee at Adrianople all sums entrusted to it for that purpose. Amongst other subscriptions already forwarded is one of £500 from the Baron de Rothschild, to be applied, in accordance with his special request, to the relief of the distressed irrespective of their creed.

The Saddlers' Company have given ten guineas to the Stafford House Committee for the Relief of Suffering among Turkish Soldiers.

WORK AND WAGES.

A meeting of delegates representing the cotton operatives' societies of Lancashire and the adjoining counties has "pledged itself to resist by all the means at its disposal" the proposal to reduce by 5 per cent the wages paid at Bolton. The masters' notices will expire at the end of the month.

It has been resolved at a meeting of men lately employed at the Ebbw Vale Ironworks to accept a reduction in their wages varying from 5 to 15 per cent.

A large gathering of the South Yorkshire miners took place at Barnsley on Monday, when resolutions were adopted in favour of household suffrage and trades unions, and regretting the recent recommendations of the Select Committee on the law of compensation for injury to workmen.

A meeting of coalmasters was held at Dudley on Tuesday to determine what action should be taken upon the expiration of the Birmingham agreement next month. It was resolved that all future discussion relative to colliers' wages must be upon the basis of lengthening the hours of labour and abolishing all perquisites, such as coal and beer, which are now allowed. The coalmasters informed the miners' delegates of these resolutions, and gave a fortnight's notice from Saturday next to terminate all existing contracts. The meeting was adjourned till Friday week to enable the miners to come to a decision.

In accordance with the resolution adopted at a recent meeting of ironmasters at Glasgow, upwards of thirty furnaces have been put out of blast in the west of Scotland.

The master builders of Manchester have resolved to bring over from America a large number of joiners to replace those on strike.

Mr. Arthur Frederick Vulleamy, solicitor, Ipswich, was on Tuesday elected Coroner for Suffolk, in the room of Mr. Walter Buller, deceased.

The Dundee Advertiser states that it is intended to propose Mr. William Spottiswoode, LL.D., F.R.S., in succession to Dr. Thompson, as president of the British Association at its meeting next year in Dublin. Mr. Spottiswoode is a member of the firm of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, Queen's printers, and has frequently contributed papers to the British Association, the Royal Society, and other learned bodies.

LAW AND POLICE.

There were no charges or summonses to be heard on Monday in the justice-room of the Mansion House, and the presiding magistrate, Mr. Alderman Finnis, was presented with a pair of white gloves. Mr. Finnis said he was very glad to hear the announcement, indicating as it did a growing respect for the Sunday, and contrasting favourably with the time when he had the honour to fill the office of Lord Mayor. He also bore testimony, from his personal knowledge of the country round Wanstead, in which he resided, to the vastly improved behaviour there of the working classes, who resorted thither in immense numbers every Sunday for fresh air and recreation.

Dr. Baxter Langley, chairman of the Artisans' Dwellings Company, Mr. Swindlehurst, secretary, and Mr. Saffery, estate agent, appeared again at Bow-street on Wednesday to answer the charge of fraud preferred against them in connection with the affairs of the company. Evidence having been given by Mr. Walton, Mr. Hoskins, and Mr. Ruffell, formerly directors of the company, and other witnesses, the defendants were committed for trial, bail being accepted.

At the Central Criminal Court, yesterday week, Joseph Hawthorn, who on the previous day pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with writing and publishing several scandalous and defamatory libels on Lady Ball, knowing them to be false, was called up to receive sentence of twelve months' imprisonment.—The late disorderly proceedings at St. James's Church, Hatcham, came before Mr. Commissioner Kerr, in the form of charges against a young man named John Elliott of having broken into the church and damaged a confessional box. In the hearing of the case the verger, who said he remembered Mr. Tooth breaking into the church and insisting upon holding a service, stated that the box was dilapidated before the time in question, and that he did not see any difference in it after that time. The jury here interposed, stating that they were agreed to return a verdict of "Not guilty." The counsel for the prosecution offered further evidence, after which the learned Commissioner suggested to the churchwarden in whose name the prosecution was carried on that he should withdraw from the case. This suggestion was agreed to, and a verdict of "Not guilty" was returned.—On Saturday the jury who had to decide in the case of Samuel G. Packer, lace manufacturer, charged with fraud, could not agree, and were discharged without giving a verdict. Emily Haines, who pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy, was sentenced to one day's imprisonment, so that she was virtually thereupon set at liberty. Two men were found guilty of savage personal violence, one being sentenced to twelve and the other to eighteen months' hard labour. Frank Wenham, who pleaded guilty to an indictment for fraud, was sent to prison for ten months.—On Monday John Kitchen and Henry Eldon were sentenced to six months' imprisonment for stealing a £100 bank-note from John Thompson, with whom they had been drinking at various public-houses; and William Bowling was committed to hard labour for eighteen months for feloniously receiving stolen property.

The Irish Court of Queen's Bench has decided, in the case of Catherine Smith, an infant, that a mother, after the death of her husband, is legally entitled to the custody of her daughter under the age of sixteen, and that the daughter had no right to dissent from the mother's wishes, or to place herself in any other custody.

Joseph Quinn, the young man who sent two threatening letters to Mr. Justice Hawkins, was tried last week at the Liverpool Sessions. The jury found the prisoner guilty, but recommended him to mercy on account of his youth. The Recorder sentenced him to eight months' imprisonment.

The Grimsby magistrates have committed a number of persons for trial at Lincoln Assizes on charges connected with the late election rioting in that town.

At South Molton, North Devon, on Monday, an old man, named Harper, known as the "white witch," was sentenced to a month's imprisonment for having used "certain subtle craft, means, or device" by practising as a wizard. He visited a woman who was ill, and affected to treat her by means of "magic rods," having the names of planets on them. He charged twenty-five shillings for his services. Several witnesses for the defence stated that the defendant's "magic rods" had cured them when other means had failed. Notice of appeal was given.

A youth named Henry Gray was on Tuesday sentenced by the Saffron Walden justices to a term of imprisonment and to a flogging for having placed a large piece of iron attached to a rope upon the metals of the Great Eastern Railway line, in front of an approaching train, near Stansted Mountfitchet station. A porter saw the obstruction, and removed it before the train passed.

Harry Leigh, a Macclesfield weaver, was hanged on Monday morning, at Chester Castle, for the murder of Alice Ann Hutton, eight years of age, whom he had robbed.—Caleb Smith, thirty-eight years of age, who was convicted at the late Surrey Assizes of the wilful murder of Eliza Osborn, was hanged on Tuesday morning within the walls of Horsemerger-lane Gaol.—The sentence of death upon Sophia Ann Todd, who was convicted at the Liverpool Assizes for child murder, and was respited on Saturday, has been commuted to penal servitude for life.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

The Royal Archæological Institute has been holding its annual meeting at Hereford, as was announced in this Paper last week. On the 9th inst. Lord Talbot de Malahide, president of the institute, took the chair at a meeting of the members in the Free Library. It was stated that the institute is in a good position, financially and numerically. The invitation from the Town Council of Northampton to meet in that town next year was accepted. The late secretary, Mr. Burt, having died and left his family ill-provided for, the members of the institute subscribe £350 for them. In the afternoon Mr. Bloxham, of London, lectured on The Sculptor's Art in the cathedral, and afterwards the members went on an excursion to Sutton Walls and Marden church. The excursion on the 10th was a long one by road, and occupied until the evening. The weather had improved, and the country through which the excursionists passed is among the most lovely in Herefordshire. Passing through Haywood Forest, the party first alighted at Kilpeck Castle and church, where Mr. G. T. Clarke pointed out the special attractions of the former, and also, further on in the day, Ewyas Harold Castle. The churches of the Ewyas Harold and Abbeydore were also visited, and a halt was made at Whitfield, the seat of the Rev. G. Clive, who hospitably entertained the party. The return was made by way of Madeley and Clehonger. The antiquities section met in the evening, when a paper on Roman Herefordshire was read by Mr. Thompson Walkin. On the 11th there was a delighted excursion to Flansford Priory, Goodrich Castle, and Ross, which, besides the archæological attractions of the locality, gave the visitors an opportunity of enjoying the scenic beauties of the most lovely part of the Wye. The members visited Credenhill, Byford, and Mornington churches on Monday, and were entertained at Moccas Court, the seat of the Rev. Sir George Cornwall. The concluding meeting of the Congress was held in the evening. The excursions terminated on Tuesday with a visit to Tewkesbury Abbey.

The annual meeting of the Sussex Archaeological Society was held at Horsham on the 9th inst. In the Townhall an interesting loan museum was arranged, including a large collection of rubbings from monumental brasses in various parts of England. Mr. R. H. Hurst presided at the meeting, and at a dinner held at the close of the proceedings.

It was announced in our last issue that the Cambrian Archaeological Society began its thirty-second annual session at Carnarvon on Monday, the 6th inst. Next day, despite unfavourable weather, a large party went by rail to Pwllheli and examined Tre Ceiri, an old Roman fort, the Llannor inscribed stones, Abererch church, and other local objects of interest. On Wednesday Llandwrog church, a maenhir in Lord Newborough's park, Craig-y-Dinas, and other places were visited; and Thursday was devoted to Carnarvon Castle, Sir Llewelyn Turner, the Deputy Constable, acting as cicerone. Under the presidency of Lord Clarence Paget, the society concluded its annual session yesterday week by an excursion to Llanberis, Dolbadarn, and other spots of interest to antiquaries and archaeologists. The next annual meeting will be held at some centre in South Wales.

ROYAL VICTORIA YACHT CLUB REGATTA.

It must be gratifying to the townspeople of Ryde to know that their differences with the Royal Victoria Yacht Club have at last been amicably arranged. The programme for the Ryde week this year has, in consequence, been augmented by the addition of a piece of plate presented by the inhabitants of Ryde, value £100, to be sailed for by vessels belonging to any Royal Yacht Club.

The racing commenced on Tuesday with a match for cutters above 40 tons, for prizes value respectively £75 and £15; and another for schooners of any tonnage, first prize £75, second £25. Long Victoria course, Y.R.A. scale of time. The cutters which started were Vol-au-Vent, Neva, Psyche, Bloodhound, Norman, and Britannia. With a light easterly breeze, which got into the S.E. before the sun went down, they all crossed the line pretty well together, Vol-au-Vent leading, a position which she maintained unto the end of the race. Owing to the lightness of the wind, the yachts were a long while completing the first round, at the end of which we timed them as under:—Vol-au-Vent, 1 h. 59 min. 40 sec.; Neva, 2 h. 7 min. 10 sec.; Norman, 2 h. 20 min. 55 sec.; Britannia, 2 h. 26 min. 30 sec.; Psyche, 2 h. 50 min. 30 sec. With a strong tide against them, and a faint and fluctuating wind, the journey to the Nab for the second time was a remarkably tedious performance. Indeed "Night threw her sable mantle o'er the scene" before the yachts passed Ryde on their way to the western limit of their course, a mark-boat off Cowes. All gave up but Vol-au-Vent and Neva. These two struggled on in the hope of a breeze, and about midnight their patience was rewarded, for a little westerly air took them round the Cowes mark-boat and sent them into Ryde as winners at the following times:—Vol-au-Vent, 1 h. 30 min. 20 sec. a.m.; Neva, 1 h. 45 min. 22 sec. a.m.; the former taking first and the latter second prizes. In the schooner class, the Australia, Hildegard, Corinne, and Miranda, started. The sailing was merely a repetition of the cutters' performances. The yachts alternately sailed and drifted, and on the second round remained so long between the Nab and Ryde that the patience of even the most Job-like of the spectators was exhausted, and the weather was spoken of in anything but complimentary terms. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales must have wished for the rain of the previous Tuesday, if only it brought wind with it. The Hildegard is decidedly a hard-weather boat. Finally, in the early hours of Wednesday morning the yachts arrived off Ryde in the following order:—Corinne, 4.19 a.m., first prize; Miranda, 5.15 a.m., second prize. Rest not timed.

On Wednesday the Town Cup was competed for, and a large fleet of yachts entered and the following started—namely, Ada, Florida, Vol-au-Vent, Julianar, Corinne, Miranda, Fiona, Neva, Raven, Psyche, and Christine. The course was the Long Victoria, and the time allowance according to Y. R. A. scale. The wind was a nice topsail breeze from the west, and a very good start was made at ten a.m. Unfortunately, the Florida and Ada fouled while jockeying each other round the Nab Light-ship, the result being that the former was so much damaged that she had to put into Gosport for repairs. The rest of the competitors sailed a very even race during the first round, but on the second they became more scattered, the leading vessels being Vol-au-Vent, Raven, Miranda, and Julianar. Vol-au-Vent was unlucky in losing the wind at a most critical moment, and Raven, bringing up a breeze, managed to save her time, with three minutes to spare. They finished as under:—Vol-au-Vent, 3 h. 44 min. 48 sec.; Miranda, 3 h. 57 min. 39 sec.; Raven, 3 h. 59 min. 39 sec.; Julianar, 4 h. 1 min. 26 sec.; Fiona, 4 h. 5 min. 20 sec.; Ada, 4 h. 5 min. 55 sec.; Raven winning the Town Cup.

On the Tuesday night the commodore, the Marquis of Exeter, Lord Burleigh, the vice, and several members of the club dined at the Townhall with the Mayor of Ryde.

On Thursday the races for the club prizes took place. First prize £75, second £15. The Long Victoria course. Time according to Y.R.A. scale. The following entered:—Latona, Ada, Florida (which had very quickly repaired her damages of the previous day), Julianar, Cuckoo, Fiona, Bakaloum, Raven, and Surf. The yachts were sent away to the westward, a nice S.W. breeze blowing. At starting, Surf, Florida, and Fiona were ahead, but Cuckoo shortly afterwards passed them. The Florida came in first, but the Cuckoo takes the first prize by time, and the Fiona the second. It was a splendid race throughout.

The schooner race of the Royal Yacht Squadron on Friday last was won by Miranda, Corinne being second. The cutter race was won by Vol-au-Vent, with Kriemhilda second.

SOUTHAMPTON YACHT CLUB.

The racing of this young but enterprising club concluded on Saturday last. With the exception of one day, when a calm prevailed, most of the time the racing has been of a most successful character. On Friday there was a match for yaws, which was won by Cuckoo, Florida being second, but Surf took the second prize by time allowance. The sports here wound up with a match for cutters of thirty tons and upwards for a cup of the value of £100. This race was won by the Neva, sixty-two tons, R. Borwick, Esq.

EUGENIE.
A Story. By the Author of "Miss Molly." Crown 8vo. 6s. 6d.
A tale of quite exceptional interest, and both powerfully and gracefully written. It is a study of certain types of character and phases of experience which—although the scene of the story is laid in France, and the local colouring is skilfully preserved throughout—are common to all humanity. There is a real art in the delineation and contrast of the various personages, and true pathos in some of the situations.—Scotman.

THE RAILWAY RIOTS IN AMERICA.

THE SIXTH MARYLAND REGIMENT FIGHTING ITS WAY THROUGH BALTIMORE.

BURNING OF THE ROUND-HOUSE AT PITTSBURG.

THE RAILWAY RIOTS IN AMERICA.

The late riots and bloody conflicts, with great destruction of property and some loss of life, which continued during more than a week in several important cities of the United States, were occasioned by a strike of the men employed in the traffic working of the principal railways. This began with the stokers and brakemen of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, on the 16th ult., when forty men at Baltimore left the trains and refused to work because of a reduction of ten per cent in the rate of wages. Other men were engaged to supply their place, but the men on strike would not permit them to work. They forcibly prevented the running of the trains at Baltimore. This example was followed, in the evening of the same day, by a hundred men at Martinsburg, in West Virginia. They remained in possession of the line and standing trains. A company of militia was brought up, but did not act against them. This success caused the movement to spread to Wheeling and the Parkersburg branch. Governor Matthews then applied for assistance to the President at Washington. President Hayes responded by issuing a proclamation ordering the rioters to disperse, and sending 250 regular troops, under General French, to Martinsburg and other points of disturbance. This force reached Martinsburg early on the morning of the 19th, armed with Springfield rifles and three Gatling guns. They found 1500 freight cars and seventy-three locomotives blocked on the side tracks in and about the town. Under the protection of the regular troops two freight trains were sent out from Martinsburg that day without bloodshed, one going east and the other west. Both went through in safety. But the strike had already become general, extending to New York and Columbus in the State of Ohio, and to the Pennsylvania Road at Pittsburgh. The plan was that the stokers and brakemen should strike; the drivers and conductors were to remain quiet, and to pretend to be willing to run the trains if stokers and brakemen could be obtained. The passenger and mail trains were not to be interfered with; only the goods and cattle trains were to be stopped. The strikers were successful in stopping all the goods and cattle trains, and they made it clear that they would kill everyone who attempted to take their places.

The civil authorities at Baltimore were quite unable to do anything with the strikers, and the Governor, on Friday, the 20th ult., ordered the 5th and 6th Regiments of the National Guard of Maryland, composed of citizens of Baltimore, to be assembled. The rowdies and roughs of the city gathered in front of the armouries, where the troops were assembling. The armoury of the 6th Regiment is at the corner of Front and Fayette Streets, in a neighbourhood which is inhabited by the poorer classes. These streets leading to the armoury were crowded with struggling, shouting, and cursing people. The sight of a man in uniform endeavouring to get into the building provoked an outbreak. He was seized and thrown over a bridge into Jones's Falls, a stream which runs through that section of the city. Other men were thrown over the heads of the crowd, and were glad to escape with slight injuries. Some one presently threw a brick at the soldier on guard at the door of the armoury. This was a signal for a shower of missiles, which destroyed the windows and doors of the building and injured some of the men. When the arrangements at the armoury were concluded, Colonel Peters decided to march his command to Camden station, where they had been ordered to report by General Herbert. The troops were supplied with twenty rounds of cartridges each man, and armed with breech-loading Springfield rifles. They numbered about 150 men, and marched out with loaded pieces. The exit was by a door which only admitted of their passing out by twos. As they reached this door the order was given, "Stoop down, boys!" This had hardly been uttered, when the troops were greeted with a renewed shower of missiles, interspersed with shots from revolvers and other small arms. At first the citizen soldiery wavered, but, promptly responding to the commands of their officers, they marched solidly out into the street, pressing the infuriated mob before them. As they filed in a westerly direction across the bridge over Jones's Falls, the crowd pressed upon them and continued to assail them. The sight of one of their number stricken down with a paving-stone caused some of the regiment to fire into the crowd. The first volley consisted of a few straggling shots, but had the effect of causing the crowd to fall back towards Gay-street. At the corner of Gay and Front streets shots were again exchanged. When the troops turned into Baltimore-street, one block south of Front-street, the firing increased. At the corner of Halliday-street and Baltimore and in the blocks in Baltimore, between Halliday and Calvert streets, where all the newspaper offices are situated, the volleys were continuous, and the streets began to flow with blood. Stores were hastily closed and frightened citizens speedily betook themselves to shelter. The regiment proceeded to Howard-street, through which it enfilded to Camden station. It left behind it nine men killed, some of whom had nothing whatever to do with the riot, and seventeen wounded. On its own side, it had twenty-four men wounded, but none killed. The other regiment soon afterwards arrived.

The riots at Pittsburgh, on the next two days, the 21st and 22nd, were far worse than at Baltimore. The conflict began in the afternoon of the 21st, when Sheriff Fife, at the head of the militia from Philadelphia, attempted to arrest some of the ringleaders. One of the mob approached the sheriff, waving his hat, and, calling to the crowd and the strikers, said "Give them hell!" A shower of stones was hurled at the troops, and one revolver-shot was fired. The soldiers then used their rifles, and for three minutes a sharp fire was kept up. Sixteen of the crowd were killed and many wounded. The crowd fled in dismay, and the strikers now sought shelter in every direction. But the excited populace, including those in no way connected with the railroad, expressed their determination to join with the strikers in driving the soldiers from the city. These remarks were interspersed with threats that the company's shops, depôts, and buildings should be laid in ashes that very night. The rioters kept their word. A large number of rolling-mill hands and workmen in the various shops of the city were assembled by eight o'clock. They broke into the manufactory of the Great Western Gunworks, and captured 200 rifles and a quantity of small-arms. Other mobs sacked all the places where arms were exposed for sale, getting about 300 more. Among them were 1000 mill hands from Birmingham. The different crowds joined together and marched to Twenty-Eighth-street. In the mean time the strikers around the Union Depôt had not been idle. The Philadelphia troops, whose numbers had been swelled to over 800 men, had withdrawn into the large round-house at Twenty-Eighth and Liberty streets, with two Gatling guns and two other pieces belonging to Breck's battery. The round-house was a very solid building, with double walls, the outer one of iron. The position was the strongest possible one for the troops. The mob began to rapidly, many with guns procured at the Alleghany Arsenal. By midnight 20,000 people were upon the ground, and many of them were armed men. The mob laid siege to the round-house in which the soldiers had taken refuge, and opened a brisk fire upon it, which was hotly returned by the troops. Finding that they could not dislodge the soldiers by this means, the rioters resolved to burn them out. Just before midnight, an oil-train was fired, and run by the mob down the track and against the sand-house—a large building near the round-house. This building caught fire and was destroyed, but the round-house was saved by the soldiers within, who played upon it from the railway company's hydrants. The smoke of the burning oil nearly suffocated the soldiers; but they held their quarters until seven in the morning, when they vacated the building and moved to Sharpsburg. On the way they were attacked by the rioters, and many were killed on both sides. Once incendiarism was started, a new spirit of wanton destruction took possession of the mob. From the time the torch was applied to the first car, at eleven o'clock on Saturday night, all night long and the greater part of Sunday morning car after car was taken possession of, the torch applied, and the burning mass sent whirling down the track among the 2500 cars filled with valuable cargoes of freight of all descriptions, and costly passenger-cars and sleeping and day coaches, spreading destruction on every hand. After the departure of the militia, both the round-houses beyond the Union Depôt were burnt, and 125 locomotives were destroyed. All the machine shops and railroad offices were also fired. The rioters planted a cannon in the streets near by, and threatened to blow in pieces any man who attempted to extinguish the flames. The firemen, thus intimidated, retired, and devoted themselves to saving private property.

The President of the United States issued another proclamation, and the New York State militia regiments were sent to Buffalo and Albany and to Hornellsville, on the Erie line, while Governor Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, ordered every regiment in his State. On the 22nd there was a riot at Reading, culminating in the burning of several cars. The soldiers killed thirteen of the mob and wounded forty-three. The Lebanon Valley Railroad bridge, a magnificent structure across the Schuylkill river, costing over 50,000 dollars, was totally destroyed. A mob tore up the tracks, and the troops fired on them, killing ten men. Strikers set fire to an oil-train in Philadelphia, but only four cars were burned. The next day the strike extended to several additional lines in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and elsewhere, and broke out at many new points. The New York Central men joined, and in Pennsylvania the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western, the Delaware and Hudson, and the Lehigh and Susquehanna road men struck, but there were no disturbances.

On the morning of the 25th the strike had reached its height, when hardly a road was running, from the Hudson to the Mississippi, and from Canada to Virginia. But some of the strikers began to weaken, and before night three lines were reopened—namely, the Erie, the Delaware, Lackawanna, and Western, and the Morris and Essex. There was heavy rioting in St. Louis and Chicago on the 25th and 26th, and in the latter city fifteen were killed and many wounded by the police and military. In San Francisco an immense anti-Chinese mob attacked the Chinamen and set fire to lumber yards. A vigilance committee was formed, and the rioters were held in check. On the 27th the New York Central was again running, and the militia were disbanded and sent home with thanks. There were still threats of trouble at some points, especially in the mining regions, but the strike, as a whole, was believed to be near an end. It is computed that the amount of damage to railway property, in these ten days, was nearly ten million dollars, or two millions sterling.

THE BATTLE OF PLEVNA.

None of our Special Artists were present at the battle of Plevna, on the 31st ult., but we have received from M. Charles Szathmáry, of Bucharest, Court Painter to Prince Charles of Roumania, the sketch from which our two-page view of the battle was prepared; and Herr Schönberg, one of our Special Artists at the seat of war, has also sent us a sketch of an incident at the battle before Plevna, drawn from information given him by Captain Dahnhauser, a Russian officer, who vouches, we presume, for its authenticity and correctness. The Bulgarian town of Plevna is situated about twenty miles south of the Danube above Nicopolis, and five miles east of the Vid, one of the largest of the tributaries that descend from the northern slopes of the Balkans to the Danube. The town has a population of 1627 Mohammedan and 1474 Christian families, comprising about 17,000 souls. There are eighteen mosques, nine minarets, and two churches—one named after Saints Cyril and Methodius, the apostles of Bulgaria, the other after St. Peter. Another object of interest is the hospital, which is a creation of Midhat Pasha while he was governor of the Vilayet of the Danube some years ago. There were, till the war, a normal school and eight Turkish elementary schools, which were attended by 1654 boys and 110 girls, while five Bulgarian schools had 921 boys and fifty girls. The river on which Plevna stands is the Tuchenitz, which just below the town is joined by the stream from Grivitza, and the united waters fall into the Vid, about seven miles lower down. The valley is cut through limestone formation; steep, rough cliffs rise precipitously on the northern side, but the banks on the southern side are less difficult. All the heights are covered with fruit-trees and shrubs, which make Plevna a very pretty place when seen from a distance. It is worth noting, that most of the land around is the property of Mussulman Bulgarians, descendants of renegade ancestors.

The following account of the battle of Plevna is from the Times' correspondent with the Russian army:—

"At three in the afternoon, after leaving Sistova, I was resting near one of these natural fountains, when a long line of ambulance-waggons, enshrouded in dense clouds of dust, appeared over a hill in the distance. As the head of the line reached us and halted by the fountain I learnt of the heavy battle fought the day before in front of the Turkish fortifications around Plevna. The ambulance-waggons gradually gathered, until the large space around the spring of cool water was covered with these conveyances, filled with human beings mangled in every conceivable form, who gasped for a drop of water. Some could not drink, as the attempt to swallow brought gushes of blood from gaping wounds in the throat and chest, which prevented them cooling their parched tongues covered with the horrible dust which rose at the slightest movement upon the roads. Weary with this sorrowful scene, I mounted my horse and pushed on. A short distance from the fountain I encountered a second ambulance-train, loaded like its predecessor. For two hours they continued to pass me, and then came still longer trains of country transport-carts, loaded with the less severe cases, intermixed with an apparently endless stream of ammunition-waggons, surplus baggage—carts, and camp equipages, until finally the road became completely blocked by the indiscriminate mass of horses, carts, waggons, and mangled humanity, streaming towards Sistova. I was compelled to lead my horse to a hillock by the roadside and wait for an opportunity to pass on, as well as to allow my wagon to come up. For more than an hour I stood there watching the passage of this motley caravan, and beheld hundreds of gallant fellows roll by in open springless carts, with a blazing sun pouring down upon their blood-stained forms, with choking clouds of dust parching their burning throats and settling in masses upon their agonised countenances, until they ceased to look like human faces. While waiting for the road to be cleared we were often asked if there were no troops coming to the rescue, and many were the bitter comments made on the folly of dashing those brave fellows against the vastly superior Moslem force strongly entrenched on the heights before Plevna. One officer, who was badly wounded, had led the extreme advance in the assault on the Turkish intrenchment. He had penetrated far into the Moslem lines, and said if they had been properly supported they could have carried the positions; but the column was not strong enough, from want of troops or generalship, and the Turks, finding this out, turned back upon them with fearful loss. 'Not more than half of that column came back,' was the mournful close of the wounded officer's statement. I learnt here that the battle of the previous day had lasted from morning until night, the Russian attack being made on both wings of the Turkish line, under the command of General Krüdener, who led the right in person, while the Russian left was commanded by General Prince Schakoffski. 'We could not do anything with them; they were too strong for us,' was the universal remark of officers and soldiers, and their cruel wounds told how wrathfully they had endeavoured to carry out the senseless orders to carry Plevna by storm. The above quotation really tells the story of the battle. The immense numbers of ammunition and transport waggons suggested momentarily a Russian retreat; but the absence of artillery refuted this idea, and I saw that the ammunition-waggons were empty, and were evidently going for supplies, while the other waggons contained the tents and camp equipment of the dead and wounded, which were no longer needed at the front. While I was waiting at this place a poor fellow died in one of the waggons, and was buried by the roadside. At last, after a stream had been passing me for four hours, I was enabled to pursue my journey, and a short distance from my last halting-place I came upon a mournful scene. The dead body of another Russian soldier lay beside an open grave by the roadside, while a party of Bulgarians were saying their funeral service. Leaving this funeral group, I soon came upon an officer in command of the escort of the immense trains I had encountered on the roads. He said their losses had been terrific before Plevna, and that during the whole operations around that place they had probably lost 10,000 men killed, wounded, sick, and prisoners. This number, of course, includes the 2000 previously telegraphed to you from Bucharest as the results of the fighting of July 19, 20, and 21. I believe this number to be about correct, judging from the wounded that I saw, and more especially by the thousands of knapsacks I met going to the rear, and which had belonged to the men put hors de combat before Plevna. After leaving this escort, I passed through a valley containing about twenty ancient mounds, some of which had been opened in former days. They are probably burial-places, constructed after some great battle of ancient times, as they could not be intended for any purposes of defence, or for watch-towers, down in this deep valley. After passing the valley of mounds I ascended a high hill, and upon reaching the top had a magnificent panorama spread out before me. I stood upon a very high and steep range of hills bounding the river Osma, which rises in the Balkans and empties into the Danube just above Nikopol, forming the western side of the promontory upon which that place is situated. The valley of the Osma is wide enough to prevent effective artillery fire across it from the opposite heights; therefore, had the Russians contented themselves with fortifying this range of hills, they could have most effectually guarded the line of communications between the Balkans and the Danube with the same force that had been so severely repulsed before Plevna; and had Osman Pasha attacked General Krüdener here, his fate would have been far worse even than that of Krüdener. Fortified here on this range of hills, Osman Pasha would have been powerless to injure General Krüdener, and the men killed and wounded before Plevna would have held Nikopol against any force the Turks could have sent in that direction. The position of affairs would have then been more than reversed, as the Russians can hold fortifications as well as the Turks, while the latter are not so easily handled in the open field, and are not, therefore, so available for purposes of assault on fortifications. I am assured that the orders to attack at Plevna were given by the Grand Duke himself; if so, he alone is responsible, for the orders were carried out as gallantly as any men could have done in the same adverse circumstances. At two in the afternoon of the second day from Sistova I reached the camp of Lieutenant-General Schakoffski, commanding the Russian left wing before Plevna. His headquarters are on the heights above the village of Poradim, while those of General Krüdener are at Terstenik, the two places being about twenty kilometres from Plevna, while their outposts are within about seven kilometres of the latter place. The present position of the Russian army before Plevna is a good one, and had they remained on the defensive they could have held Osman Pasha in check, and had the lines on the heights of the River Osma as a second position. I found everything in good order, and the infantry drilling. The men are not at all satisfied with the recent attack on the Turkish lines, but they are anxiously looking for reinforcements, in the hope of renewing the assault, which should not be made with less than 100,000 men, as Osman Pasha has between 60,000 and 70,000, nearly all regulars, around Plevna. General Schakoffski told me that during the attack they could see nothing but the tops of the Turkish fezzes over their intrenchments, and that the Moslems rested their rifles on the parapets of the earthworks, and poured a ceaseless rain of bullets from their breechloaders, which no troops in the world could withstand. Several times his men reached the intrenchments and bayoneted some of the Turks inside, but they could not hold their footing, and had to fall back, cut to pieces by the infernal fire, as the General characterised it. The Turks were as foolish in not following up their success as the Russians were in making the attack. The latter fell back after their repulse, and I found them tranquilly awaiting events thirty-six hours after the battle. There was no foundation at all for the panics which prevailed at Sistova and Simnitza. The Russian troops did not lose their morale; and, as I said before, I found them quietly drilling in their new positions, while the Turks had made no attempt to disturb them. Had Osman Pasha come out of his intrenchments and followed up the Russians he might have turned their repulse into an utter rout, which might have endangered the pontoon bridges at Sistova. But, as it was, the Russian line of communications has never been in danger for a moment. They have merely suffered a disastrous check in an unnecessary offensive movement."

Sir H. D. Wolff, K.C.M.G., M.P., presided at the opening of the Bournemouth Central Workmen's Club and Institute's new premises on Tuesday. In the course of his remarks he said it was a great satisfaction that Bournemouth had at last its workmen's clubs. Those societies must tend to cement the ties of friendship and peace and goodwill towards neighbours and friends, which are guarantees for future prosperity.

MUSIC.

COVENT-GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The Royal Italian opera-house was opened last Saturday evening for the annual series of Promenade Concerts, such as have for some years been given there during the autumn and winter. Messrs. Gatti are again the directors, Signor Arditì is re-engaged as conductor, and Mr. J. Russell continues his superintendence as business manager. The internal arrangements of the house are similar to those of preceding occasions. One vast area is made by raising the pit and stall portions to a level with the stage, the orchestra platform being elevated in the centre of the space. Over the stage are graceful draped canopies, and the walls with which it is partially inclosed are very tastefully decorated. Messrs. Dayes and Caney (the eminent scenic artists of the Royal Italian Opera) having contributed various effective specimens of their skill. In the front part of the area some cooling influence is derived from large blocks of ice (illuminated with various coloured lights) placed in a small fernery.

The orchestra engaged is of special excellence—including as it does many of the most eminent instrumentalists, with Mr. A. Burnett as principal first violin. The programme of the evening was preceded by the National Anthem, and the concert began with Mendelssohn's overture to "Ruy Blas," which was admirably rendered, as were the other orchestral pieces of the evening. Several novelties were produced, two of which were by Signor Arditì; these were a spirited valse, "Le Tortorelle," and another vivacious dance-piece, entitled "The Drummer-Boy's Polka," which included the co-operation of all the drummer-boys of the Coldstream Guards. This was encored. The chief specialty of the evening was an orchestral arrangement, by Signor Arditì, of portions of M. Gounod's new opera, "Cinq Mars," recently brought out at Paris. This work appears not to have obtained a great success on the stage; but that it contains some effective music may be ascertained by hearing Signor Arditì's very skilful adaptation. The full portions were rendered by the united forces of the orchestra and the band of the Coldstream Guards, the passages for solo voices having been assigned to some of the principal members of the orchestra, these having been Messrs. Svendsen (flute), Jensen (piccolo), Lazarus (clarinet), G. Horton (oboe), Wotton (bassoon), Reynolds (cornet); C. Harper, Preatoni, Hinchey, and Standen (horns); Hughes (ophicleide), Webster and Harvey (trombones). The piece was very well received, and can scarcely fail to prove attractive.

Three singers made their first appearance in England, each with success—Mlle. Lucia Rajmondi (with the efficient co-operation of Signor Gianini) in the duet "Teco io sto," from "Un Ballo in Maschera;" Mlle. Giuditta Celega, in Siebel's air, from "Faust;" "Quando a te liete;" and Mlle. Maria Derivis, in the scena "Ah, fors'è lui," from "La Traviata," the last having been encored, as was Signor Medica in his delivery of the air "Di Provenza," from the same opera.

In the second part of the concert Mlle. Rajmondi contributed the bolero from Verdi's "Les Vêpres Siciliennes;" Signor Gianini was encored in the barcarolle from the same composer's "Un Ballo in Maschera;" Mlle. Derivis sang the valse aria from Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette;" and all the vocalists named, except the last mentioned, co-operated with the orchestra and military band in the concerted piece "O Sommo Carlo," from Verdi's "Ernani." The first part of the programme included the beautiful "Larghetto," from Spohr's third Symphony (in C minor), and the second part began with Auber's overture to "Marco Spada," and closed with the quick march "Amazonen," from Hertel's ballet "Fantasia."

Instrumental solos were played with great effect by Mlle. Debillemont (pianoforte); Mlle. Pommereul, who was encored after her performance of a fantasia for violin on subjects from "Faust;" and M. Antoine Bouman, a skilful violinist, who made his first appearance in England.

Wednesday was a classical night, the programme having included the overture to "Anacreon" (Cherubini); the scherzo from "Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelssohn); the slow movement from the Symphony (unfinished) in B minor (Schubert); and Mozart's Symphony in E flat, the complete work.

The Rose Hersee opera company are continuing their performances of operas in English at the Crystal Palace. On Tuesday, "La Sonnambula" was given; and for Thursday, Balfe's "Rose of Castile" was announced.

We regret to hear of the sudden death of Mr. Townshend Smith, organist of Hereford Cathedral, which office he had held for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Smith was indefatigable in organising the arrangements for the Festival held triennially at Hereford, his excellent business talents having been valuable aids to the success of those celebrations. In recognition of his merits a valuable testimonial was presented to him last year. Mr. Smith's genial manner and uniform courtesy rendered him universally liked. He was to have presided, as heretofore, at the organ at the approaching Gloucester Festival.

THEATRES.

A new drama, by Mr. Paul Meritt, has been transferred from the Edinburgh to the Adelphi Theatre, called at the former place "Grace Royal," and now entitled "The Golden Plough." It is in four acts, and of a decided melodramatic type. This is particularly true of the first two acts—so far, at least, as concerns the character sustained by Mr. Emery, a clever thief and homicide, who conceals his practices by an affected humour and a habit of constantly laughing at whatever is said or done. Mr. Emery, however, is careful to indicate to the audience the secret nature of the criminal by furtive looks and facial expressions, that serve to show his complicity in the crimes which are the subject of conversation. By means of ventriloquial power he contrives to fix the guilt on innocent persons, whose voices he skilfully imitates. The son of the heroine falls under suspicion in consequence, and, to screen him, Grace Royal takes the guilt upon herself. Miss Louise Willes, who performs the part, interprets it with uncommon ability and pathos, throughout its various phases, which are all striking and effective. The success of the piece, in fact, depends upon her, albeit the other characters are very artistically supported by their representatives. Mr. Billington, as Sir Francis Claude, acts with appropriate dignity, and in all respects has the bearing of "the fine old English gentleman." A similar compliment is due to Mr. J. G. Shore, as Thomas Carroll; while nothing can excel the capital make-up of Mr. McIntyre as Middleton, the Bow-street runner. The part of the young reverend Martin Preston, who is suspected of the murder of the Baronet, was judiciously acted by Mr. W. Terriss. The performance altogether was singularly equal, and justified the cordial approbation of the audience. Mr. Meritt has undoubtedly scored another success. Mr. Stafford Hall deserves praise for the scenery; a prettier set than that of the Golden Plough is scarcely possible.

On Monday two new pieces were produced at the Haymarket. The first was a farce by Mr. John Maddison Morton, entitled "The Garden Party." This little drama does not depend upon its story, of which it has none worth telling. The burden of the fun lies on the shoulders of Mr. W. J. Hill, in the part of Joshua Jodkinson, who, and his buxom wife (Miss Emily Thorne), amuse the audience with their vulgarities. Mr. W. Hargreaves, as a rural policeman, is characteristic; and Mr. Harold Kyrle, as Chaffy, a Californian humourist, presents an animated portrait of a recognised type. The second piece is a five-act comedy-drama by Mr. George F. Rowe, whose talents, both as an actor and as a dramatist, have already received ample appreciation. Nevertheless, in this same comedy-drama he achieves but equivocal success in either, except in the first two acts, which led the audience to expect something better. The action of the new drama is subordinate to the characterisation. First, we have the hero, a fellow of the Munchausen type, who fabricates his fables and passes them for facts, attesting their truth by reference to his ring, which he asserts was the gift of the subject of his mendacious tale. These fables for the first two acts won especial favour from the audience; and if the invention could have been carried through the three remaining acts we think that the part might have proved a Dundreary success. But the dramatist was mindful of the moral lesson. His constant reference to one and the same ring, as a token from so many donors, excites the suspicion of old Admiral Hawker (Mr. W. Hargreaves), who denounces the cosmopolitan Waiton Stray as an habitual liar. Conscience-stricken, the convicted anecdote-monger resolves on reform. He finds this difficult. When now he tells the truth people doubt him, and he gets into more trouble by his new veracity than by his old mendacity. So far the spectator's course is clear; but when, for the last two acts, an unintelligible story is invented, and the most incomprehensible conduct attributed to the previous entertaining hero, the audience loses the thread of his identity, and, consequently, in the final scene their patience shows signs of exhaustion. Mr. Howe acted with force and propriety the part of honest lawyer Armstrong. Another professional portrait was well rendered, that of the Rev. Horatio Tibbets, whose courting was admirable for the delicacy and refinement of its conception and execution. A companion portrait, that of a city clerk, James Balance, did infinite credit to Mr. Harold Kyrle. The rôle of the heroine was intrusted to a débutante, Miss Violet Orme, who made an immediate impression on the audience, and carried through the difficult part of Sybil Hawker to the end with a triumph nearly in every scene. A comedy with so many good characters in it merits appreciation. The want of skill, however, in the structure of the three ultimate acts, proves a serious drawback. The dialogue, indeed, needs much pruning everywhere. There are several puerile puns, which might be advantageously cut away. The best of these is mere actor's gag; and Mr. Rowe, who has so many better resources, ought to be ashamed of the frequency of the nuisance to which he has thus given a questionable sanction. These faults cannot but impair the success of the new comedy.

Mr. Charles Reade's drama of "The Scuttled Ship" has been transferred to the Standard, where it has been eminently successful.

The recent reports of the illness of Miss Teresa Furtado (Mrs. John Clarke) have ended in the death of the lamented lady, at the early age of about 32. Her first appearance on the stage was at the New Royalty Theatre, in February, 1864, as Mercury, in the burlesque of "Ixion." Her progress in her profession was rapid, and she soon occupied leading positions at the Adelphi and Olympic. Married about four years ago to Mr. John Clarke, the celebrated comedian, she leaves two children. She had many qualifications for the stage, and was a good if not a great actress.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Enoch and Sons' already extensive and valuable collection of pianoforte music in the classical and brilliant schools—known as the Litoff series—has recently been increased by the addition of two interesting volumes—Stephen Heller's "Nuits Blanches," op. 82; and a selection of pieces entitled "Rubinstein Album," consisting of fifteen extracts from the works of this eminent pianist and composer. Like preceding issues of the series, the engraving, printing, and paper are excellent; the form is the convenient quarto size, and the price is in remarkable contrast to the value of the contents.

The Sequential System of Musical Notation, by William A. B. Lunn: E. W. Allen. This is a new edition of a pamphlet which attracted much attention some years ago by the ingenuity of the scheme which it devises for the substitution of a consistent method of notation in lieu of that in present use; this latter being the result of gradual growth and of after additions that certainly offer some apparent incongruities to the strictly logical mind. It is held by many, however, that the different presentment to the eye of analogous notes in the several octaves, is a large aid to sight-reading, especially in the elaborations of modern pianoforte music. Whatever may be thought of the practicability of Mr. Lunn's method, the pamphlet is well worthy of perusal by all who are interested in the subject.

A conference of pharmacists was opened on Tuesday at Plymouth, when Professor Redwood, president for the year, opened the proceedings by reading a paper in which he sketched the progress of pharmacy in this country.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin, having received a telegram from the president of the Famine Relief Fund in Madras appealing for subscriptions for the relief of the famine in Southern India, has opened a subscription.

The famous English landmark, "Salt-hill," was sold by auction on Monday by direction of the owners (the trustees of the late Mr. Botham), who, with his father, had occupied it for eighty-five years. The purchaser, we hear, is Mr. Charsley, the Registrar of Eton College, who has bought it on his own account, and without any reference to his connection with Eton College, with the view of retaining it in connection with the fine house familiar to all Etonians for centuries, and for the last eighty-five years known as "Bothams." It may be of interest to all old and present Etonians to know that "Montem," or "Salt-hill," will, in the hands of its new proprietor, be retained in its integrity.

The annual show of the Herefordshire Agricultural Society was held on Tuesday, and proved one of the most successful. The champion prize of £25 for best bull in any class of Hereford breed was won by Mr. H. Taylor, of Showle, who, with cow and offspring, also carried off first honours in class for best bull, cow, and offspring. Mrs. Sarah Edwards Wintercott, Leominster, took the champion prize of £15 for best cow or heifer in Hereford classes, and also first prize in class for heifers not exceeding two years old. This he regarded as a proof of the success of their innovation in only carrying first and third class passengers.

A memorial has been presented to the Prime Minister by the joint committee on State Medicine of the British Medical and Social Science Associations, in which, after referring to many defects in the existing law, they recommend that the present existing distinctions between urban and rural sanitary districts should be removed, and that all sanitary authorities should be clothed with similar powers; and that these powers should be extended in order to enable them to carry out all purposes of local administration within their district; that in each county or division of a county a representative authority of a high order should be constituted for the execution of joint works, to aid, and in cases of default to exercise control over district sanitary authorities.

BOOKS OF POETRY.

Undeniable as it may be that our age is wanting in major poets, yet of minor poets, who, in certain contingencies, might well reach the standard of the major, we have no dearth; and among the works which testify to the truth of that assertion a prominent place must be assigned to Proverbs in Porcelain and Other Verses, by Austin Dobson (Henry S. King and Co.), a little volume in which the author has amply fulfilled the promise he gave a long while ago of extraordinary excellence in the field he has chosen. His mastery of the lyre reminds one of nothing so much as that which was exercised over the violin by the famous Paganini. It is quite marvellous to note the ease with which he strikes the chords and elicits from them a graceful response to all his demands in all his varied moods. His modest motto, on the title-page, announces his deliberate renunciation of, or rather abstention from, the higher themes and the more elevated styles; but, though his decision may be received with a sigh, there is balm in Gilead, there is no little consolation in the exquisite utterances of his least ambitious muse. Although some example of his charming manner is to be found upon almost every page of the volume, whether he draws his inspiration from figures painted upon china, or from a picture laid upon canvas, or from a precious stone, or essays to show his skill in the manipulation of the rondeau and the rondel, it is doubtful whether careful search could discover a piece in which so many of his most delightful characteristics can be enjoyed at once, and to so much advantage, as in the poem entitled "A Tale of Polypheme." In easy verse, with neat phrase, happy description, unaffected pathos, the story is told of a modern Cyclops, one-eyed, morose, blackened with "toil and tan," who was partly a blacksmith, partly a seaman, partly a shepherd, and who, avoiding companionship, lived the gloomy life of a hermit. But it happened, in course of time, that a pretty, innocent, merry child—a little Galatea of a girl—came across the path of Polypheme; and how he was brightened and softened by the sunlight of her presence and by the music of her laugh is disclosed to the reader in a few stanzas of true idyllic beauty—simple, melodious, effective as magic. Then the child disappears from the scene, and the forlorn condition of poor Polypheme is depicted in a manner that goes to the heart. Once more the strange pair, so ill-assorted and yet so friendly, are brought together by accident; the child, with a blush as of shame for her neglect and forgetfulness, holds out her hand, calls old Cyclops by name, and sends him away rejoicing. But his joy is mingled with pain; for she, who was his one bright star, has to leave him after her brief greeting, and the light has gone out of his life. So that night he forgot to milk his goat; and next morning his place knew him no more. What had become of him no neighbour could divine; but his hut was empty, and "the man was gone." And in many another of the author's pieces a similar impression of sadness and desolation is left upon the mind; but the sadness is not altogether an unpleasant sadness, resembling "sorrow only as the mists resemble rain," and the desolation is less akin to that of despair than to that of those who fully realise the fact that here, in this world, we have no sure abiding-place. A little dash of satire, too, rescues from the charge of frivolity the very lightest of his productions, in nearly every one of which the man of scholarly cultivation, elegant taste, kindly feeling, and sprightly humour, tinged, however, with something of a melancholic and sardonic temperament, stands unmistakably confessed.

Not much that is above the level of the comic song in which slang does duty for wit and geniality for inspiration is to be easily discovered in Pegasus Re-saddled, by H. Cholmondeley Pennell (Henry S. King and Co.), a volume of jingling verses, suitable enough for private circulation among friends and acquaintance, or for the columns of some facetious or fashionable periodical, but not calculated to satisfy the expectations which the public must have been led to form from their recollection of the author's previous performances. He would have done well to leave Pegasus in the stable a little longer, until the saddle could be put on to a little better purpose. The ideas are, for the most part, extremely commonplace; and the compositions, for the most part, resemble nothing so much as the "fast" conversation of society reduced to a certain sort of rhythm and tipped with a certain sort of rhyme. And the rhymes are in many cases atrocious. They would do well enough for a burlesque or a parody, if they were intentionally employed to heighten absurdity and grotesqueness; but they appear under circumstances which lead to the conclusion that they were employed so unconsciously as to be shocking, and to betray the arrant cockney. What one especially misses is the strength which was supposed to be one of the writer's chief characteristics. He certainly shows symptoms of a rollicking and of a frolicsome humour; now and then, as in "Some One's Forget-Me-Not," he approximates to the truly pathetic; and sometimes he attains to a pleasant degree of piquancy; but, on the whole, weakness is conspicuous by anything but absence, and receives a very questionable kind of support from slanginess. Even when he is most pathetic, he cannot or will not refrain from vulgarising his subject by describing some former lady-love as "clippers." And the muse can hardly sink lower than when she is forced to sing about a fine old "buster" who was "worth a pot." Such a muse would be most at home in a pot-house. It is a great pity that such pieces were allowed to cumber the pages of what is, after all, a very pretty volume, embellished with several illustrations due to the skill of the accomplished Mr. Du Maurier, whose pretty girls and elegant women and elaborate costumes are so much admired, though, perhaps, it is permissible to wish to goodness that they did not all look so aggravatingly alike, and, to use the common phrase, as if they had just come out of a bandbox.

How well they would go to music is the reflection one is induced to make upon reading a few of the verses contained in Songs of Land and Sea, by Frederick Enoch (Arthur H. Moxon); and, accordingly, one feels a little of Jack Horner's self-approbation when one stumbles, at the end of the volume, upon indisputable evidence that the songs have, most of them, if not all, been set by various composers of name and fame, such as Smart, Macfarren, Benedict, Glover, and many another. It is pleasant to be able to record that the honour they well deserved has not been withheld from such tuneful productions. The writer is no mean proficient in his craft; he has the gift of pouring out in easy, tripping fashion the simple melodies which are best adapted for warbling. And he has the qualities which distinguish the most popular of his brotherhood. Sometimes he seems to have caught the spirit and tone of the manly but yet pathetic Dibdin; sometimes the more delicate, graceful manner of those who fill in our day the position of the ancient troubadours. No mood is strange to him; but his chief source of inspiration seems to lie in the recesses of a kindly, sympathetic heart. Whatsoever is beautiful to the eye, whatsoever is tender and pure, whatsoever is of good report, appears to find an echo in him and to set him trilling his simple lay. With the profound and the sublime such writers do not meddle; and they find a more congenial subject in the love of the turtle than in the rage of the vulture. But, for all that, they exhibit, on occasion, no little fire and energy; and in their collected works, though there may be a dearth of original thought and an abundance of conventionality, it is easy to perceive beneath the smoothly flowing verse an undercurrent of deep and honest sentiment.

Of Olympus and the gods who live for ever, of the classic myths and of him who has handled them so gracefully in his "Epic of Hades," a reminiscence is awakened by a glance at the title of Hebe: a Tale, by Mark H. G. Goldie (Henry S. King and Co.); but the reminiscence will be vain if it should lead to anticipations of something similar in store. Hebe, in the present instance, is mortal every whit; so far mortal, indeed, as to have a surname—the ungodlike surname of Newton. And yet, on second thoughts, the name is not altogether unsuggestive of immortality; nor is Hebe Newton herself without a spark of divinity. She is, in fact, a very noble girl, and her character is truly heroic. How she happened to be present at the escape of a high-minded hero, with the poets' favourite name of Conrad, from a watery grave; how the twain exchanged their views of life and of religion and of irreligion; how love stole into the heart of the hero as they conversed and argued and disputed; how the course of true love, so far as the hero, if not the heroine, was concerned, met with the usual interruptions; and how, in the end, the mundane union which might have been expected was apparently, on the loftiest grounds of self-sacrifice, renounced in favour of a spiritual union, unaffected by time and distance, will be discovered from a perusal of the poem. Of the poem itself, regarded as a composition in verse, it may be said that its moral aim is exceedingly high; that it abounds in excellent thoughts and fancies, poetically expressed, though the mood may, on the whole, be too speculative and visionary for the ordinary reader, and though the style is somewhat obscure and tortuous, so that there is often a difficulty in catching the sense; that there is plenty of vigour in both sentiments and language, with the proper gradations from force to tenderness; and that, long as the poem is, the buoyancy of the stanzas is well maintained and the metrical blemishes are noticeably few. The chief blemish, if not the only remarkable one, may be due to deliberate intention on the part of the author, who possibly holds some peculiar theory; at any rate he generally, and memory would say invariably, treats as dissyllables such words as hour, fire, lyre, and so forth, though most people regard them as monosyllables.

As there are times when the very healthiest bodies cannot bear strong meats and strong exercise, so there are seasons when the healthiest minds cannot attune themselves to the powerful music of the "grand old masters," and of the "bards sublime," but yearn for something not less musical, perhaps, but less elevated, not less exhilarating but less intoxicating, not less capable of steeping the senses in delight but less calculated to strain the intellect and shake the very soul; and those are the times and seasons, recurring at frequent intervals, when it is good and comforting to take up such volumes as Poems, Lyrics, Songs, and Sonnets, by Francis Bennoch, F.S.A. (Hardwicke and Bogue), wherein, as in a musical box, lurks a host of melodies requiring for their production nothing more than the application of the proper key, and that key is human sympathy. The author, like Rogers, is a man whose vocation is business, whose avocation is poetry. And, whatever may have been the case with his vocation, his avocation has certainly been twice blessed; it has been his own joy and solace, and it has given, and is destined still to give, no little pleasure to others. To what poetical rank he aspires it is impossible to say, but to trust his own modest avowal of his aspirations, he seeks no more than may be very readily accorded him. Indeed, as he sits in the low place he has claimed as his own, he may be gratified by an encouraging whisper of "friend, go up higher." He may chance to find himself among the acknowledged lyric bards, a position which, as we know, even Horace himself so coveted as to say that, if the muse would set him there, his head would strike the stars. Our author, to judge from his own expressions, would be among the first to acknowledge that the divine spark which burns within him seldom or never grows to such size and burns with such heat as it is known to attain among the poets who live for ever, who brand at once upon the memory of whosoever reads them some original thought, some haunting image, some indelible picture, some unfading impression of harmonious sounds, and yet of him, if three words of Latin may for once be admitted, it is possible to say: "mille modis placuit." He is pleasing as a writer in the descriptive style; he is pleasing as an exponent of sentiment, whether tender, vigorous, passionate, or other; he is pleasing when he indites a simple lay to be sung to the sound of instruments; he is pleasing in his genial vein; he is pleasing in his religious mood; he is pleasing when he has scarcely aught to utter, for he utters it in dancing rhythm together with tuneful rhyme. And perhaps his muse is most pleasing when she sings in the Scottish tongue. One heresy, or rather one obsolete belief, he seems to cherish; he clings to the antiquated notions about "gentle spring" and "merry May." His apology, probably, would be that, as his years are many, he speaks of long ago.

Replication of compositions which have won the critic's praise, and it is to be hoped the public appreciation, offers little opportunity for comment, and there is, therefore, little more to be done than to announce the existence, should anybody be ignorant of it, of two pretty volumes containing Poems, by Aubrey De Vere (Henry S. King and Co.), wherein breathes a spirit of true poetry combined with masterly skill in versification. One volume is entitled "Antar and Zara; an Eastern Romance: Innisfail and other Poems, Meditative and Lyrical;" and the other "The Fall of Rora, the Search after Proserpine, and other Poems, Meditative and Lyrical." "Antar and Zara" is believed to be new, and the same may be said of some other pieces; but, on the whole, the contents have appeared before, and are simply republished with revisions and enlargements. A somewhat singular arrangement characterises one of the volumes, for it includes a collection of sonnets written not by the author but by a friend, the "late Stephen Spring Rice." Even these sonnets, something seems to whisper, have been published before; but the whisper may be fallacious. At any rate, the sonnets are in good company, to which they do no discredit; though it must be allowed that inconvenience might arise if it became a common thing to publish "for self and friend." As for the "chief" author, he and his successes are too well known to require any formal introduction to readers of poetry. Suffice it to say, that he has all the appearance of being "to the manner born," so that he is at home in every style and with every theme, whether it be Eastern romance, or Irish chronicle, or classic myth, or unchanging nature, or changing man. Admiration he will, by some of his performances, undoubtedly extort from everybody; but his warmest admirers are likely to be found among those to whom Erin is dearest, and those to whom the religion of Rome is the holiest.

Some elderly persons, it must be confessed, were boys and girls at the first publication of an extraordinary poem called Festus, by a young man of twenty-three, named Philip James Bailey. It was a poem in which Heaven and Earth, the Soul and the Universe, with the farthest conceivable range of ideas belonging to the moral and religious affections of humanity, were sought to be compassed by a vast series of imaginative discussions. There were sublime processional movements to and fro, and significant gestures, with some approach towards dramatic action, between personified motives or moods of thinking and feeling. It was, on the whole, a remarkable work of genius; though neither a grand work of art nor a great philosophical work. We may consider that it would perhaps never have come into existence, but for the preceding examples of Goethe's "Faust" and Byron's "Cain." It was, like them, a poetical experiment in reporting the supposititious communications of elect and heroic minds with a Lucifer or a Mephistopheles. We have only to announce, upon this occasion, that a tenth edition of Mr. Bailey's Festus, which contains very large alterations and additions, has just been issued by Messrs. Longmans and Co. We are inclined to believe it will prove as interesting to many of the present generation as it proved to some of their fathers about thirty-five years ago, in spite of the reputed spread of Secularism, Comtism, Agnosticism, and other depressing creeds, forbidding a man to say that his soul is his own, or that one has any soul to speak of.

The residue of his property he gives to all his children in equal shares; but the value of the estates given to his sons and the advancements or allowances made to them or to any of his other children are to be brought into account.

The will (dated Nov. 11, 1875) of Madame Madeline De Tourville, late of No. 16, Craven-hill, Paddington, who died on July 16, 1876, in the Tyrol, was proved on the 4th inst. by Thomas Francis Wilding and James Nisbet Robertson, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testatrix bequeaths to each of her executors £1000; to her maid, Sarah Clapinson, if in her service at the time of her decease, £500, free of duty; to Mrs. Waldie an annuity of £10 for life; and the residue of her property to all her children in equal shares; failing children, and we believe her only child predeceased her, she gives £1000 each to Miss Georgina Scott, Warwick Hunt, Peter Robertson, and the Rev. George Dickson; £2000 to St. George's Hospital; £10,000 each to Mrs. Mary Ann Cook and Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, and the remainder of her property to her husband, Henry Dieudonne De Tourville, who now lies under sentence of death in Austria for her murder.

The will (dated May 4, 1866) of Mrs. Catherine Anne Cobden (widow of the late Mr. Richard Cobden, M.P.), late of Stamford, Midhurst, Sussex, who died on April 18 last, was proved on the 28th ult. by Richard Chester Fisher and Miss Ellen Millicent Ashburner Cobden, the daughter, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £4000. The testatrix leaves all the literary papers and correspondence of her late husband at the disposal of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. Michel Chevalier, a member of the French Senate, and Thomas Thomason, of Bolton; and bequeaths £500 to be invested and the income applied in the keeping up of the grave of her late husband and son in West Lavington churchyard; £500 upon trust for the use of Heyshott School, in memory of her late husband; legacies to nieces and servants, and the residue to her five children.

The will (dated March 25, 1875) of Mr. Henry Robert Boucherett, late of North Willingham, Lincolnshire, who died on June 8 last, was proved on the 31st ult. by Mr. Charles Newdigate Newdegate, M.P., and James Bowker, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator bequeaths legacies to his coachman, butler, and housekeeper, and the residue of his property to his sister Louisa; all his real estate, subject to £1000 per annum, which he charges thereon in favour of his sister Miss Emilia Jesse Boucherett for life, he devises to the use of his said sister Miss Louisa Boucherett for life, with remainder to his said sister Emilia Jesse for life, with remainder to his cousin the said Charles Newdigate Newdegate for life, with remainder to his sons.

The will (dated May 30, 1865) of Mr. Arthur Purvis, late of Marsham House, Suffolk, and of No. 2, Sutherland-gardens, Maiden-vale, who died on June 1 last, was proved on the 3rd inst. by Mrs. Mary Jane Purvis, the widow, and Charles Alexander Purvis, the brother, the executor, the personal estate being sworn under £3000.

The will (dated July 25, 1862) of Mr. Charles Shapland Whitmore, late of No. 7, Rutland-gate, Hyde Park, who died on May 17 last, was proved on the 4th inst. by Edmund Augustus Whitmore, C.B., the brother, and Thomas Bros, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000.

Some disquietude is reported to be felt in Egypt at the slowness with which the Nile is rising this year.

CHESS IN RUSSIA.

The following interesting Game was played recently, at Moscow, between Messrs. HELLMIG and MAUDS.—(Evans's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	23. Q to R 3rd	P to K B 3rd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	24. P takes P	P takes P
3. B to B 4th	B to B 4th	25. Kt to Q 4th	Q to K 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th	B takes P	26. Q to K B 3rd (ch)	Q to Q 4th
5. P to B 3rd	B to R 4th	27. Q takes P	B to B 6th
6. P to Q 4th	P takes P
7. Castles	P takes P
8. Q to Kt 3rd	Q to B 3rd
9. P to K 5th	Q to Kt 3rd
10. Kt takes P	K Kt to K 2nd
11. Kt to K 2nd	P to Kt 4th
12. B to Q 3rd	Q to K 3rd
13. Q to Kt 2nd	Kt to Kt 3rd
14. Kt to B 4th	Kt takes Kt
15. B takes Kt	P to Q R 3rd
16. B to K 4th

White may also here play 16. Kt to Kt 2nd, or 16. R to Q 3rd. The move in the text, however, is a pleasing divergence from the beaten track of this favourite opening.

The well-timed advance of these united Pawns decides the struggle in Black's favour.

THE CLIFTON CHESS ASSOCIATION.
The following amusing Little Game occurred in the Handicap Tourney of this club, between Miss RUDOX and Mr. E. THOROLD, the latter yielding the odds of the Pawn and two moves.

WHITE (Miss R.)	BLACK (Mr. T.)	WHITE (Miss R.)	BLACK (Mr. T.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th	14. Q to R 4th	B takes B
2. P to Q 4th	P to Kt 3rd	15. B to K 3rd
3. Q to R 5th (ch)	P to Kt 3rd
4. Q takes Q B P	Kt to Q B 3rd
5. P to Q 5th

White should here have played 4. P to Q 3rd, so as to prevent the Kt being moved either to Kt or Q 5th.

15. K takes B would, of course, be followed by 16. Kt to Q B 5th (dis. ch), winning the Queen.

As there is no safe asylum to which the Queen can be moved, White is obliged to play this move to prevent B to Kt 5th (dis. ch).

WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

On the 6th inst. the Conference considered the scheme of the committee appointed by the last Conference on lay representation. Several details were altered, but in the main the scheme, which is to take effect next year, was adopted. The proposals of the committee on temperance, recommending the formation of temperance societies and Bands of Hope in every circuit, were discussed and agreed to.

The greater part of the 7th inst. was occupied in the work of revising the list of stations, and the second reading of the list was completed. The boys of the Kingswood School were admitted to the conference, to which they were welcomed by the President. The Rev. J. H. Lord, the governor and chaplain, on behalf of the school, acknowledged the welcome. He said he believed the school was answering the purpose of its founder more fully than it had ever done; the scholastic attainments of the pupils were never more marked than now, showing, if they disobeyed their founder's precept and spent some time in the playground, that they did not neglect their higher duties. Mr. Osborne, the Head Master, spoke a few words; and was followed by Dr. James, an old Kingswood boy, who gave the youths some good advice. The Rev. Charles Kelly also addressed the school, dwelling on the importance of physical education, and impressing upon them the advantages of becoming acquainted with Methodist doctrines, and warning them against sin and urging them to a life of holiness. The boys and their parents were afterwards entertained by Mr. W. H. Budgett, at his Clifton residence.

At the morning sitting on the 8th inst. the Rev. J. Bond read a list of the laymen chosen by the committee from whom, according to the accepted scheme for the new Conference, eighteen were to be elected by ballot, making, with the treasurers of the twelve connexional funds, the thirty, or one eighth, of the 240 laity to sit in the Conference of 1878. A discussion ensued on the paucity in the list of laymen of names from the midland district. The matter was settled by the chairman of each district being requested to add a name from his district to the list. The Rev. W. J. Tweddle presented the report of a committee appointed to consider the requests of the Australasian Methodist Churches and the American Episcopal Church (South), that representatives might be sent to their next general Conference. The report recommended that, in the case of the American Episcopal Church (South), a letter be sent expressing fraternal relations and the earnest desire that such relations might continue unbroken. The recommendation was adopted. It was resolved that a representative from the British Conference should be sent to the Australasian Triennial Conference, to assemble at Sydney, in May, 1878, and Dr. Gervase Smith was appointed. The Rev. J. Bond read the yearly statistics. An increase was reported from every district, except Sheffield, where there is a decrease of eight, and Oxford, where there is a decrease of ten; and, altogether, the total number of members is 382,555, being an increase of 9617 over last year. There have been 51,878 persons admitted into the societies during the year, and there were 28,663 on trial at the last March visitation.

On the 9th inst. the Rev. Thomas T. Short was appointed secretary of the schools fund, in the place of the Rev. C. W. Prest. The Rev. John Harvard, who is one of the general treasurers of the Stockport, Clapton, and Beech Holme Schools for ministers' daughters, stated that the position of the school fund was most unsatisfactory. The expenses were increasing in a greater ratio than the income of the fund. On his suggestion, a committee was appointed to consider the difficulty of the position, and, if possible, to remove it. A letter expressive of fraternal greeting was read from the Primitive Methodist Conference, and it was decided to grant a request made in the letter to receive a deputation at the next Conference. The Rev. Dr. Pope, the president of the Conference, was appointed delegate to the Irish Conference, and the following ministers were elected to accompany him:—The Rev. A. M'Auley (the ex-president), the Rev. J. Tobias (nominated by the Irish Conference), the Rev. Dr. Punshon, and the Rev. Dr. James. The president was appointed to visit Scotland in October for the purpose of promoting the missionary cause, and also of attending the financial district meeting. The Revs. J. Bedford and F. W. Macdonald were elected to accompany him. The Revs. A. M'Auley and J. W. Greaves were appointed to attend the annual meeting of the North Wales district committee to meet at Bangor in the spring of 1878. The Rev. Dr. Williams, the secretary of the Conference, was appointed to attend the annual meeting of the North Wales district committee, to meet at Carmarthen in the spring of 1878. The Rev. A. M'Auley was appointed to attend the next annual meeting of the Isle of Man district committee, with power to send a substitute in the event of his inability to attend. The Rev. James Hocart was appointed president of the next French Conference.

The Conference was engaged during the earlier part of the 10th inst. in receiving the reports of committees. The Secretary of the Committee of Privileges stated that £1400 had been contributed towards the cost of the Owston Ferry case, the total cost being £1550. A resolution was adopted protesting against the Contagious Diseases Acts. The suggestions and memorials from the several circuits for the consideration of the Conference have this year been rather important. Devonport regretted the growing practice of omitting to read the hymns in public worship, and the Conference decided that it is desirable to continue the Methodist practice. Birmingham and Halifax suggested that the question against the use of tobacco and snuff should not continue to be put to candidates for the ministry and for ordination. The question is based upon the decision of the Conference passed in 1795—"No preachers shall use tobacco for smoking, for chewing, or in snuff, unless it be prescribed by a physician." The committee to whom all these memorials are referred recommended that the usual question be rescinded. A long and animated discussion followed, and, on a division, it was resolved by only a small majority that the question should be continued. Candidates for the ministry and for ordination will therefore still be asked whether they smoke, or chew, or take snuff, and be expected to answer in the negative. The alteration committee presented their report, showing the number of ministers and laymen eligible to attend the next Conference. The first London district is to send thirty-five ministers to the ministerial Conference, and twelve laymen and seven ministers to the mixed Conference; the second London district twenty-nine to the ministerial, and fifteen laymen and nine ministers to the mixed Conference. These will be elected by ballot at the several May district committees of the Connexion. The Rev. T. Woolmer read the report of the book committee. The total number of tracts issued during the year amounted to over three millions and a quarter, and the sale of denominational periodicals had reached nearly two millions. Eight hundred and thirty thousand copies of the new hymn-book had been sold. The usual votes of thanks for hospitality, &c., having been given, the President pronounced a few words, and the Conference of 1877 was brought to a close, having lasted seventeen days; or, with the preliminary committees, twenty-five days.

The Conference is to be held at Bradford next year, beginning on July 23.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1877.

No sooner had the political Parliament of the United Kingdom been released from its labours than it was succeeded by the Sittings of the Parliament of Savans, or Scientific men, for the elucidation and discussion of questions which have been thrown up to the surface by scientific investigation during the preceding year. The British Association for the Advancement of Science commenced its sittings at Plymouth on Wednesday afternoon, the 15th inst., and in the evening the President for the year, Professor Allen Thomson, delivered his inaugural address to "a large and brilliant assemblage" in the Guildhall. There were, of course, on subsequent days the usual separate Meetings of Sections, with what we may venture to describe as the usual or average fare. There were excursions by land and by sea. There were conversaciones and aggregate gatherings. There were all the stimulating pleasures of social intercourse to relieve the labours of high intellectual exercise. There were papers read before crowded and scanty audiences—those which had proved most attractive not being always the best. There was the ordinary intermixture of wheat and chaff, of solid instruction and speculative rubbish. The sessions could hardly be described as specially distinguished above those of preceding years. No great discovery, except the Telephone, was recorded and illustrated. But the scientific séances, like that of the Imperial Parliament, if somewhat under the average in point of popular impression, presented some pleasing and useful aspects; nor can it be truly said of the one, any more than of the other, that "the game was not worth the candle."

The Inaugural Address of the President, Professor Allen Thomson, was certainly a masterpiece in its way. Its object, however, was specific rather than general. There was no attempt made in it to furnish a comprehensive survey of the triumphs of scientific achievement during the year which was past. It dealt with one subject alone—the Doctrine of Evolution, which was most skilfully illustrated by embryological observations logically strung together, technically expressed, and constituting to those who could bear in their memory the significance of all the terminology employed a rational idea of how the Darwinian theory may be conceived of as an actual fact. We are told that the Address "was listened to throughout with great interest, and was received with loud cheering." We do not doubt it, and we feel sure that both the one and the other were amply deserved. But we should hesitate to give credit to more than one in twenty of the audience then assembled for having intelligently followed the accomplished Professor from beginning to end of his argumentative discourse. It requires the most concentrated attention, even when read at leisure, to catch its progressive points. It was worthy of its subject, and it was worthy of the man; perhaps we may also say it was worthy of the occasion, but neither the subject itself nor the manner in which it was treated could greatly have interested at the time a miscellaneous audience, even of philosophers. The whole address was far too abstruse, and the illustrations contained in it far too technical, to elicit anything like popular interest. It will, doubtless, remain on record as a conspicuous waymark for the guidance of studious explorers in regard to the "origin of species." It may even present to laborious investigators some new points of departure for the direction of their thoughts. But we are not sure that it was a fitting introduction to the ends for which the Association are understood to meet.

The sittings of the several Sections into which the Association divides itself were, as a matter of course, extremely varied in the interest they evoked, and in the conclusions at which they may be said to have arrived. The Sections are as follows:—There is the Mathematical and Physical Science Section, which was presided over by Professor Foster, the papers laid before which were of a too highly technical and scientific character to be expected to attract any but experts. There is a Geology Section, under the presidency of Mr. W. Pengelly, F.R.S., which drew a much larger audience, and which at its first sitting occupied itself chiefly with local geological phenomena. There is a Biology Section, presided over by Dr. Gwyn Jeffreys, who, in the course of his opening address, affirmed that our knowledge is not sufficient to take for granted the transmutation of species. There is an Economic Science and Statistics Section, over which Lord Fortescue presided, whereat it will not be a matter of surprise that the attendance was but small. There is a Geography Section, under the presidency of Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney—far more popular, and to the general reader of its transactions of far greater practical interest; there is a Mechanical Science Section, under the presidency of Mr. E. Woods, C.E.; and a Chemical Science Section, presided over by Mr. F. Abel, past president of the Chemical Society. Of course, it is out of our power to give anything like a sketch of the papers read or of the discussions held in any one of these sections. It would be impossible to do justice to any of them by comparing them one with another. Nor, indeed, are the materials at hand for any attempt to do this—the newspaper reports being necessarily much abbreviated, and containing mostly mere indications of the subjects introduced and discussed.

Our thoughts run in a somewhat more definite channel; and, if we might be allowed to do so, we should prefer to give them in the form which they assumed in the speech of the Bishop of Exeter at the excursion made by the Association to that city. He told his hearers that the increase of efficiency in human operations by the division of labour was generally obtained at the expense of the deterioration of the workman, and that the division of study might be better for the study, but worse for the student. "The mathematician might end with a wonderful power of solving questions, but with a loss of power to appreciate what lies outside mathematics. It was for this reason greatly to be desired that all whostudy should correct by frequent intercourse the narrowness that results from exclusive devotion to particular subjects. He did not fear that ultimately the progress of science would be hostile to religion, but, meanwhile, both men of science and students of the Bible had to learn from each other and would greatly gain by mixing with, so as to understand, each other. This is a broad and manly declaration, and one, we surmise, in which most of our readers will fully concur. And this, we may be allowed to observe, fairly expresses one of the main purposes of the British Association. Not merely accuracy of knowledge but breadth of knowledge should be aimed at. The results of any one particular line of scientific investigation may with profit be laid alongside the results reached by another line, we may say by every other line. Out of a comparison of the whole there will come general conclusions broader and certainly not less true than those which have been arrived at in particular departments, giving to the details in each not, indeed, a different form, but a higher and more significant meaning, and lifting the whole of them into a higher and more commanding plane of observation. It is in the spirit of these remarks that the British Association appears to us to be acting with increasing devotion, and year after year, we trust, its usefulness will extend as the scope of its labours is widened.

ROYAL VICTORIA YACHT CLUB.

The annual regatta of this yacht club, held at Ryde, went on from Tuesday to Friday of last week. Our illustration is that of an incident that occurred in the race for the Town Cup, on the Wednesday. The course was twice from Ryde to Norris Castle and back, and then to the Nab Light and back, altogether fifty miles. The competing yachts were two schooners, the Corinne and the Miranda; four cutters—the Vol-au-Vent, the Neva, and two smaller ones; and five yawls—Mr. Jessop's Florida, Mr. H. F. Barclay's Ada, Mr. Boucher's Fiona, Mr. Maclean's Jullianar, and Colonel Stirling's Raven. At starting from Ryde, the Vol-au-Vent took the first place, followed closely by the Florida and Ada, and the others all in a group together. In the run out to the Nab Light the Ada and Florida got foul. It was some time before they could get clear, and when that was done the Florida immediately lowered her mainsail, and it was evident that she had sustained some serious damage. This afterwards turned out to be the case, for, instead of coming back to Ryde in a complete state, she made her way up Portsmouth Harbour, and no more was seen of her. The bowsprit of the Ada had completely split her mainsail. The second and third places were afterwards taken by the Miranda and the Raven; but as the Raven was entitled to a time allowance for difference of tonnage, it was the Raven that won the prize. The different protests will have to be considered and decided by the Sailing Association. The Florida speedily repaired her torn mainsail, and was in another race next day.

While a man was engaged in excavating for the erection of a wall near the board schools, Tamworth, he came upon a small leaden box containing three hundred coins, which are thought to belong to the time of William I. and William Rufus.

The Board of Trade has issued the agricultural returns for the year 1877, from which it appears that the land under wheat cultivation was 3,168,540 acres, being 5.8 per cent. more than in 1876, and 5.2 per cent. less than 1875. The differences with respect to barley, oats, potatoes, and hops, as compared with previous years, were very slight. The total numbers of live stock reported are:—5,697,280 cattle, 28,168,815 sheep, and 2,498,659 pigs, the latter showing an increase of nearly 9 per cent.

The new Church and district of All Saints, at Southend-on-Sea, partly endowed by a bequest of the late Miss Heygate, was inaugurated at a special service on Sunday by the Bishop of St. Albans, who appointed the Rev. Henry White, of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, to be the preacher on the occasion. The Vicar-Designate, the Rev. Percy Howard Droosten, late Curate of Lancaster, has announced many parochial works, such as school and daily services and readings, much wanted in the largely increasing population of the town.

Last Sunday morning the Bishop of Rochester preached to a crowded congregation at St. James's, Hatcham. He preached from St. John iv. 24, and referred to the conflicts which had taken place in that parish. His Lordship said he had come to them because they were in trouble; and, although he could not help it, he deeply sympathised with them. He condemned too ornate a service as being a hindrance rather than a help to spiritual life. He hoped there were no persons in the congregation who were ashamed of being termed Protestants; for, if the Church of England was not a Protestant Reformed Church, she was a shameful schism, and ought not to have an existence.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITIES.

The Act to make further provision respecting the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, passed on the 10th inst., has been issued. There are sixty-one sections and a schedule in the statute carrying out the preamble, which declares that the revenues of the Universities are not adequate to the full discharge of the duties incumbent on them respectively, and, therefore, the expediency that provision be made for enabling or requiring the colleges in each University to contribute more largely out of their revenues to University purposes, especially with a view to further and better instruction in art, science, and other branches of learning, when the same are not taught, or not adequately taught, in the University. It may be requisite for the purposes mentioned as regards each University to attach fellowships and other emoluments held in the colleges to offices in the University. Further, it is stated to be expedient to make provision for regulating the tenure and advantages of fellowships not so attached and for altering the conditions on which the same are held, and to amend "in divers other particulars the laws relating to the Universities and colleges." There are two bodies of Commissioners—for Oxford, Lord Selborne, Lord Redesdale, Mr. Montague Bernard, Sir William Robert Grove, the Rev. James Bellamy, D.D., Henry John Stephen Smith (Savilian Professor), and Mr. Matthew White Ridley. The Cambridge Commissioners are Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, the Bishop of Worcester, Lord Rayleigh, Mr. Edward Pleydell Bouverie, and the Rev. Joseph Barber Lightfoot. Until the end of next year the University and the governing body of a college are to make statutes. If within a month after a statute is made a member of the governing body makes a representation to the Commissioners, they shall take the same into consideration. From and after the end of 1878 the Commissioners are to make statutes for the University and colleges and halls, as set forth; and the objects of the statutes to be made are detailed with the view to the advancement of art, science, &c., ranging over a number of provisions in the new Act. There are provisions as to schools, &c. The constitution of the "Universities Committee of the Privy Council" is declared. The Commissioners, within a month of making a statute, are to cause the same to be submitted to her Majesty and to cause it to be gazetted; and a petition within three months may be presented to the Queen in Council for its disallowance, or any part thereof. The other provisions in the Act relate to the effect and alteration of statutes, to the Tests Act, license in mortmain not necessary on purchases of land, and there is a provision as to the electoral roll at Cambridge. The schedule contains the titles of former Acts as to Oxford and Cambridge Universities.
